Friday evening was College Night, and every reader can imagine the thrill, when College is mentioned. President Jacobs gave another of his enthusiastic addresses, stressing the needs of Ashland College. Then when we mention that the address of the evening was delivered by Brother Bell, you will understand that we cannot say but that it was excellent. The imperative need of the Brethren church is that the College needs the church for her support in a financial way as well as men and women, and the church must needs look to the College for her future workers.

Saturday evening was the evening for the Foreign Missionary Interests. Brother Siekel of South America and Dr. Gribble of Africa inspired the audience with their encouraging words, "that it was a pleasure to witness for Christ to the people in foreign lands who have not heard of the Christ that we are permitted to know."

Then the Woman's Missionary Pageant, "The Light of the World" pleased the audience.

We did not remain for the Sunday evening session, and so cannot comment on it.

May God bless the efforts of this Conference to the furtherance of his work and the encouragement of his workers in the respective fields of labor, that his cause might prosper.

Thankful for Conference Messages

By C. R. Koontz

Upon my return home, I said to my congregation, I am profoundly thankful for at least three things: (1) My vacation and all that accompanied it. (2) The privilege of attending our National Conference. (3) To be home again.

My reason for being thankful for the privilege of attending our National Conference is because of the inspiration and encouragement received from the lectures, addresses, and sermons.

These messages were based upon and made large use of the Word of God, exalted the Name of Jesus Christ, as our Lord and Savior, and invoked the guidance and blessing of the Holy Spirit.

While some of them rang out clearly and in no uncertain tones the distinctive notes so precious to us as Brethren, others presented a clarion call for us to arise and possess the missionary fields, both at home and abroad, that are white unto the harvest, and in which the laborers are so few.

My prayer is that the inspiration and encouragement received may be the means of bringing in more fruit for the Master during the coming year.

Impressions of Conference

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

For the missionary returning once in four years from Africa there are changing vistas and panoramas at National Conference.

One misses familiar faces, one feels the lack of certain friends—loved ones gone on before, with whom, and in our Lord's own perfect time there shall be a grand reunion in his very presence.

One misses too, those whom one had hoped to see, but whose presence has been hindered by health or other circumstances.

Offsetting this, however, one meets many precious former friends, grown more mature in the Lord's service, and giving forth in a new way the sweetness and fragrance of the Lord's presence. One sees also such a vast difference in the young people. Little girls of twelve, now are blossomed into sweet debutantes of sixteen. Tiny children of four years ago are now of a sweet companionable age.

Charming faces come before you for recognition. There are some whose names are even in one's memory, but oft-times one looks into dear faces perfectly familiar, perfectly natural, and one can even see the delightful home where hospitality has oft been extended, yet for one or more minutes, so full is one's mind of other and duskier countenances, Kare, Bano, Banda, Baya, that one hesitates and fails perhaps to recall the familiar name.

Love, kindness, cordiality, welcome, invitations, plans, hopes, undefined or half-expressed—how these blessings are showered upon the returning missionary, how these experiences are shared.

Bereaved, how sympathetic one finds every friend, and how oft, alas, one is called to enter into sympathy with dear ones who have passed through a like sorrow, a similar suffering.

What a spiritual uplift were the addresses, the sermons, the Bible lectures! How it made one long to be able to delve more deeply into the wonderful mysteries of the Word!

The meetings with various committees with the Foreign Board, the attendance at the business sessions of the Conference, the pleasure of being in the meetings of the Sisterhood and the Woman's Missionary Society made one realize the problems that are so patiently and prayerfully faced by each and made one realize also the great emphasis that should be placed on prayer for each dear one serving in any of these capacities, that they may be continually like Stephen, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost.

And then there were the partings. Hard indeed is it to part from dear ones whom we soon expect to meet again, but from those whom we hardly dare hope to meet again on earth, and from all in fact because the element of uncertainty is universally applied,—we found it difficult indeed to separate, and more than ever before, we found ourselves actually dreading the end of the Conference, fraught with blessing and answered prayer. The presence of the other foreign missionaries, Mr. Siekel from South America, Miss Deeter from Africa, the two precious children of our Brother and Sister Jobson, made the fellowship sweeter. As we turn our faces westward, we hope to see many dear ones en route and some happy day in the not far distant future to renew our acquaintanceship with Marguerite and with dear Brother and Sister Weed who have so nobly and self-effacingly rendered to the Lord during these more than four and one-half years the hidden service of caring for a missionary's child.

The Foreign Board has graciously approved the plan to spend the time from November to August in France in postgraduate work in medicine. Marguerite may accompany me and take now a year in French when that study will be most beneficial to her because of her tender years.

It being our plan to sail from San Pedro via Panama, we shall hardly hope to see friends east of Chicago again on this brief furlough—scarcely three months in the States. The new address in France will be published as soon as definitely ascertained.

Meanwhile the following are addresses through which mail will reach me:

939 Wesley Ave., Evanston, Ill., c/o D. J. C. Gardner.

September 22 1421 S. Grant St., Denver, Colorado.
c/o Alice C. Newberry.

October 1 R. F. D. No. 2, Sunnyside, Washington.
c/o John S. F. Weed.

October 20 1330 E. Third St., Long Beach, California.
c/o L. S. Bauman.

Mail sent to any one of these addresses will eventually reach us, although I have tried to attach approximate dates.

The Ministerium

By R. F. Porte

The ministers of the Brethren church displayed a heroic determination to grapple with the problems facing the whole Protestant church. Our pastors feel that we are passing through troublous times. The unsettled conditions in the world are felt in the ranks of the ministry. Our ministers need the prayers of the faithful laity to help them hold fast and to possess the fullness of the Holy Spirit.

Dr. Shively sounded the depths in his address, "Are We a Disappearing Brotherhood?" He noted changed conditions and jazzy living which today affect the church. The address reached its climax when the author reminded us of the foundations of faith in the Brethren Church, namely, baptism, washing of Saints' feet and communion, as essential. A positive, unshaking faith in these doctrines is the secret of the power and success of the early church fathers.

A further challenge was given our ministers on Thursday morning when Dr. Jacobs presented the claims of our college. Some very encouraging and at the same time startling disclosures were made in the course of the address. The phenomenal growth of our educational interests is a source of satisfaction and confident assurance of the safety of the investment. Dr. Bell told us of the wonderful success of the Endowment Campaign and the liberal gifts being received. The most important item in the success of the endowment campaign is that each one should do his best and nothing more or less.

Prof. McClain gave a very scholarly paper on the passage, Philippians 2:5-8. Brother McClain emphasized the essential deity and pre-existent personality of Christ and the fact that he became truly human. In Christ's inner nature and character Jesus was in the form of God, in his outward life he became true man.

Rev. Lynn delivered an interesting address on "How Increase the number of spirit-filled Brethren." The first essential is spiritual Kinship with Jesus. "They that know God shall be strong and do exploits." Brother Lynn's admonition to the ministers was that, "People must be stirred." Laodicean complacency, "I have need of nothing," is a sure deterrent to a spirit-filled life. Get much of the Bible, meet God in prayer, get the glare of the world out of your eyes, so that you may see and discern the Spirit.

The impression one receives from the serious survey of our ministry is that we have a heroic group of men ready to face the task of the Kingdom of God as given the Brethren church. The ministry of the church is loyal to the Word of God and willing to do their best to spread the Word of God. Our ministers are worthy of the prayers and support and confidence of our people. Their leadership under God will make for greater advances in the Kingdom of God.

National Conference Outlook on Church School Programs

By George H. Jones

The great Sunday school attendance on Sunday morning brought to an enthusiastic close, a week of interest in religious education. The sermon that followed from a splendid preacher formed the climax of a week of nationwide interest in the future work of our beloved church. Conference ended with a fitting message as an inspiring reminder of our plans and purposes.

The Sunday school plans for the next conference contemplate the revival of a service of recognition for the schools that attain a required degree of efficiency. The thorough canvas of the schools of the brotherhood by Brother Stuckey gave an impetus to the larger plans contemplated for the coming year. It also gave the Board something like a complete body of data for future progress. Brother Stuckey, our field secretary, performed a splendid piece of work. However the Board concluded that the cost of maintaining a field secretary was more than we were able to bear just now, so discontinued, for the present, his services in that capacity. The survey of conditions made possible by his work and the recommendations made, with this clearer conception of our needs, made the experiment one of outstanding value to the denomination. We will continue to have our brother's services in another capacity.

The big outstanding decision in the mind of the writer, was the launching of a Leadership Training Course, designed to cover a period of one week of intensive training and study with the inspiring fellowship that comes from such a course, at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana next year. The school to be organized for the week, either before or after the Annual Bible Conference held there by our Indiana brethren. The plans contemplate an initial attendance of one hundred young people and older ones interested in the Leadership movement. The field may cover the entire brotherhood, but the immediate purpose is to meet the needs of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. The churches of these districts will be thoroughly canvassed, by visitation and by mail to arouse enthusiasm and interest.

There will be several new leaflets issued to complete the organization series. There will also be a number of articles by our Sunday school specialists. The literature which the Board helps to publish will be improved and changed in several respects. These are a few of the good things promised. How well we may be able to realize our purposes only the future can tell, but these are planned with the hope of carrying them through. They are possible only as we have a hearty cooperation from all who are concerned with the permanence of the work confronting us. It is comparatively easy to write and talk, but the most vital need is to hold our gains and this is the purpose of all real religious education.

THE BIBLE

The Bible is the book that has held together the fabric of Western civilization. It has been the handbook of life to countless millions of men and women. The civilization we possess could not have come into existence and could not have been sustained without it. It has explained the world to the mass of our people, and it has given them moral standards and a form into which their consciences could work.—H. G. Wells.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Cleansing, Fellowship, Communion

By Claud Studebaker

(Sermon on Tuesday night of General Conference Week at Winona)

TEXT: "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1-7.

This text suggests three things to me that are fundamental to Christian faith and practice, namely—a proper relation of man to God, a proper relation of man to man, and the means by which these relationships are produced. In these are couched the whole of the Christian doctrine and life. We are not under the law of death, but there are laws of the Spirit of life, and this law of the Spirit of life frees us from the law of sin and death.

I am not contending for lifeless form, but there is form to life. There is certain form and law to every power known. If you wish the power of steam you must conform to the law of steam, if you wish the power of electricity you must conform to the law of the element. In coming to this place from Iowa we pass through Keokuk, where the mighty Mississippi River has been harnessed by means of a great dam across her current and with proper mechanism she operates those mighty generators from which, with proper conduction and distribution, she sends out the millions of units of power, to make warm or cold, or light or power or whatever you may desire of it, but you must conform to the laws of electricity or it may cost you your life, or destroy your property. God has ordained law and order for every department of this universe. Every living thing must conform to certain laws of life; failing to do so is destructive to that life. A fish can not live out of water and a chicken cannot live in it. Food, upon which one animal will thrive, another will starve. Every life must conform to certain laws or perish. It is also true that God has ordained certain laws for the church of Jesus Christ and the individual Christian life without which that life cannot exist and grow. I'm not contending for external lifeless form, but am contending for a form of life.

In the most important of all life and its issues, that of eternal life of man, we find that which gives all other things their value. Without man, gold has no value; the cattle and the farms and the factories are worthless; therefore the human value is the only fundamental value. But the mere fact of his physical life does not make it valuable. The spirit of man is the highest element of human life and gives it its value. And the highest sphere of this spirit is when it finds its proper relationship to God.

And God has not left this relationship to the whim of the man himself. No more than the mother leaves it to the child when it is to play in the dirt and when it is to be clean. The first requirement of a proper relationship between man and his God is the demand of God that the man be clean. It was the sin of Adam that severed the relationship, and the sacrifice of the second Adam that opened up the fountain for cleansing. Now this thing is true. That God has not left to the caprice or wisdom of man to fix the law of the spirit of life, but has ordained in his own wise councils the steps necessary to bring a man into proper relationship with himself and meet his approval of man's life. The all important question of man's eternal salvation has not been left to the fickleness of man himself but God in his omniscience has marked out the channel and commanded that man walk in it, as the only way of life. I am not at all interested in what some man says about it. No sociologist's plan do I take seriously. It matters not to me what degrees he has, or of what university he is a part, or what books he has written. The author of life and the Savior of men has marked the way. He knows, man does not, his speculations have not one cent of value, because you must wait till you are dead to find out whether his plans are correct and then it is too late. He may change them next year anyhow and if he does not, some one presuming to be wiser than he, will. I beg you to consider the fundamental doctrines of salvation under these heads as suggested in the text: 1. Cleansing—In it is the doctrine of sin. We are in darkness. Some men are not willing to admit it, but surely all we like sheep had gone astray, we had turned to our own way. The worship of the tabernacle with its types of cleansing, the laver always at the door and every priest required to wash before he comes to officiate before God, indicate it. There was no exception, if you do not wash you shall die, no unclean man can come into the presence of God. Christ again taught the great law of cleansing as he gave the sacred rite of holy baptism, and again when he gave the holy ordinances of the church. Knowing that he came from God and he went to God, that the Father had put all things into his hands, that he had the God-given right to change the law of God in the great symbol of cleansing, when he riseth from supper and began to wash his disciples' feet, he gave the strongest argument, the most easily understood and the longest to be remembered, an object lesson as well as a precept, that the first and greatest need of man was cleansing. We as ministers of a communion who have been particular about the rite of baptism and washing of the saints' feet should be the stronger in our ministry, in teaching the fundamental doctrine of cleansing. It is not simply a little excess baggage, a relic of formalism as some would tell us, but is the most basic thing of all the doctrines. You must be cleansed from sin else you cannot meet the approval of God, you must keep yourself continually clean, or God will spew you out of his mouth. If there ever was a time when the ministry had a special call to preach the great doctrine of cleansing it is now when so many are denying the fact that they need cleansing at all, even those who claim to be the ministers of Jesus Christ, who give the lie to his work, for he came to call sinners to repentance and to save the lost, to wash the unclean.

I say, it is no time to be letting down on the great doctrine of cleansing, but time to be tightening up the line. Tell the lost, in the church and out of the church, that they are unclean and need to be washed, for only those who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb will be among the redeemed hosts of God. It is no time to throw away the observance of Christian baptism; in it is the great doctrine of cleansing, you must put away the old corrupt life of sin, bury it and rise to the new life. Of course it is by the death and resurrection of Christ. Not only must you be cleansed, but you must keep being cleansed. No time to throw away the great doctrine of cleansing as given in the washing of the saints' feet, when the church is getting so worldly and dirty that you can't tell a Christian (I call them Christian and give them the benefit of the doubt) from a street walker, and when a deacon can "cuss" like a drunken sailor when he gets a little peeved. It surely is time to step on the loud pedal and pull out all the stops and in every way possible teach the folk that they are unclean and need cleansing.

2. The next great doctrine is that of fellowship, not the foundation, but the subsill, always the first result of a proper relation of man to God. Treating your fellowman right is not salvation, it is only the result of salvation. A social gospel will never establish a proper relation between man and God. It is necessary to maintain it. "If a man say he love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar. This commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God, love his brother also." It is not possible that a man maintain a proper relation to God and an improper relation to his fellowman, but it is possible that a man may maintain a proper relation with his fellowman and fail to have a proper relation to God. A social Gospel may be the most formal thing in the world, which would be a house without a foundation and would not stand the storms of time, a form of Godliness denying the power, hand-made flowers, artificial fruit, that look nice but are lacking in real vital life. The real fact is, the progress in social welfare, the building of hospitals, the feeding of the hungry, the caring for the helpless, the great sympathetic hearts that have filled this world with their charities, have been those men generally of the church who first established their own proper relationship to God and there found the vision for service from vital contact with Jesus Christ in his saving grace. The first hospitals in a nation are the work of the missionaries of the cross. The great improvement in the social life of the world is the direct product of the gospel of Jesus Christ as preached and lived by the church.

Now when some modern reconstructionist vocalizes loud and long in his criticism of the church and emphasizes the golden rule, he reminds me of the fellow that argues the value of honey but would destroy the bees because they are narrow selfish followers of a creed. But it is following the creed that makes the honey. A bee that makes no honey has little value. Just so a man cleansed of his sin must of necessity love and serve his fellowman. Fellowship is the great imperative of saved men. A man selfishly saved without any concern for his brother is an unthinkable thing. I will go farther and say that it is an impossible thing. If a man touches the love of God in Christ and his life is regenerated, he at once partakes of the Spirit of Christ and becomes like him and will take up his cross and follow him. No use to think you are a Christian and turn your nose up at some one else in the church. No use to claim salvation if you cannot forgive those who offend you. Forgiveness does not mean anything except for offences. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for the other. Fellowship with the brethren is vital because it is a system that reveals the condition of the heart. If a man has not that love and fellowship for the brethren it is proof that he does not love and serve God. The one is a natural consequence of the other. Fellowship must follow cleansing. If we walk in the light we have fellowship. If we are not in fellowship, we are in darkness, would be a safe inference.

3. If we are cleansed from our sin and dwell in love, then it is that we have the holy privilege of communion with our Father in heaven. We step into the holy of Holies and there with the blood of Christ on the Mercy seat and Cherubims hovering over, we shut out the world and live in the celestial glory of the presence of God and become partakers of the divine nature, going out into the world as witnesses to the redeeming grace given to us by faith in Jesus Christ. What a wonderful picture Christ gave to his church on the night of his betrayal, when, knowing that he came from God and went to God, he washed his disciples' feet and said, "He that is washed, needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit, and ye are clean but not all, for he knew who should betray him; therefore he said, ye are not all clean." Then as they were eating around the table, Christ revealed the traitor, so that he did not come to holy communion.

Brethren, if you fail in the first you may fail in the second and you will surely fail in the third, and the atoning blood will have been shed in vain so far as your soul is concerned. Oh tragedy of tragedies, heaven came to earth and you would not entertain the glory! You loved darkness and would not come to the light, you loved strife and envy and gold and would not humbly minister to your fellowman, you are unclean, selfish and haughty! God and heaven can't use you, you would mar the Holy communion of the redeemed saints of glory! You may weep your remorse through the eternal ages, "Unclean, unclean," where there is weeping and nashing of teeth. You refused to be cleansed when you had opportunity. Unclean church members a-plenty, will you awake before it is too late? The redeemed will be decked with white robes. When the door was opened in heaven the Revelator saw them coming up the slopes of glory and to the inquiry he said these are they that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple, and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them or any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of water and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

The beautiful service of communion cleansing! First the washing of feet. O, how the church needs the lesson of cleansing today. Then fellowship in the Lord's supper as the family of God surrounds his table. My, what a picture of fellowship! Would God there were no traitors at the table and there might be that abounding love flowing from

To the stronger or faster man,
But soon or late the man who wins
Is the fellow who thinks he can."

TUESDAY

FAITH THAT WINS—Heb. 11:1-10.

Somebody said, "It couldn't be done,"
But he with a chuckle replied
That maybe it couldn't but he would be one
Who wouldn't say so till he tried.
So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin
On his face. If he worried, he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—but he did it.

heart to heart to every member of the household of God. O, love divine- And then the climax of the service, the communion of the body and blood. 'No man cometh to the Father but by me. He became sin that we might become righteous, he conquered death, he arose for our justification, he gives us new life, heaven touches our poor souls and we are adopted into a new family, the household of God, made citizens of another country. Cleansing, fellowship and communion, the norm of all gospel truth, gathered together in an humble group of ordinances, that we may never forget those eternal truths, never tear them up and cast them aside. God strengthen the Brethren church for the work thou hast committed to her.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Our Daily Influence

By Viola Knoll

OUR SCRIPTURE

And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved (Acts 2:46, 47.)

But take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling block to them that are weak. But when we sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend (1 Cor. 8: 9, 12, 13).

And let the peace of God rule in your hearts to the which also ye are called in one body: and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him (Col. 3:15-17).

OUR MEDITATION

We find that the apostles and the disciples of the early church witnessed daily, both in the temple and from house to house. The Christ who had saved them meant so much to them that they did not hesitate to speak of him and for him daily. Also we read that they were "with one accord," united by the bond of the Holy Spirit. Likewise our first duty is to be witnesses for our Lord, witnesses daily to our friends and neighbors, and to those with whom we work. Do we even use the opportunities that come along the way? We are told that in the little country of Chosen the native Christians make it their business to tell seven other people of the Christ every day. How many of us are equally zealous for the Lord's work?

When Paul wrote to the people of Corinth he cautioned them to be very careful about their daily living so that they would not cause any one else to fall. This was Paul's own policy; for we find that he says, "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient." He had full liberty in Christ Jesus. Yet for the sake of weaker Christians about him, he refrained from those things which they might question. We, too, need to be careful in this matter. If we, thinking something to be all right, persuade some one, who considers it to be wrong, to do it, we are sinning against his conscience. Or if we do things that some about us question and thus lead them to do the same things, we are sinning against them and losing our influence for good with them. Everyone is inclined (perhaps unconsciously) to choose human individuals for standards and so we must be careful to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called" so that we may not sin against our brethren, for when we do so we "sin against Christ."

But our influence for good as we live day by day can be made an important factor. Our teachers received this testimony from a girl attending the Institute. She said, "When I came here, I watched you teachers to see how you were different from the people I knew" (who were not Christians) "so that I could decide if I wanted to be a Christians too." She decided in the right way and without doubt there were many others like her.

Throughout the scriptures we are admonished to live with praise and thanksgiving in our hearts, to do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus and to look for "that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Then all unkindness, anger, injustice, selfishness, jealousy and envy, together with all other things that weaken our influence will be done away. Then indeed our lives will radiate a peace and joy that passeth understanding.

OUR PRAYER

We praise thee, O Lord, for thou alone art holy and righteous, and worthy to be praised. We thank thee for thy unfathomable love in sending thy Son, Jesus Christ, as our Savior to atone for our sins and to present us faultless before thy throne. We thank thee for thy Word, which is a lamp to our feet and a light to our pathway. Help us, Lord, to study it daily and to meditate thereon. Help us to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and to let our lights shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. To thee be all honor and praise. Amen.

A Christian's Financial Creed

By Harris Franklin Rall, in New York Christian Advocate

1. My money is mine only in trust. It belongs to God, just as I do.

2. This money is not filthy lucre. It is not the devil's coin. It is stored-up human power. It is so much of myself which I can set at work in China or India or New York or Colorado.

3. God is counting upon his money for his work. It is to build his churches and preach his gospel, train his workers and send them out, to teach and heal and save his children, and help bring in a new kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace.

4. To spend my income rightly is one of my first tasks as a Christian. Until I settle this my prayers and confessions will be like saying, "Lord, Lord," and not doing the will of my Father.

5. I should set aside a definite proportion of my income for the church and the service of others. I do this in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all of my material possessions. I do this to guard against my own selfishness. I do this because it is business-like. Giving by impulse and without system does not accord with the importance of this work.

6. The proportion to be set aside for these purposes should be not less than one-tenth of my income. The Old Testament enjoined the Tithe (one-tenth) in ancient Israel, and surely I am receiving far more from God than did the men of any former generation. Nevertheless, one-tenth is not to be the limit of my giving. I should not begin with less than one-tenth. I ought to give more if I am able.

7. I should invest this money for God as carefully as in my temporal business and keep strict account of this fund. I should study the church and its work that I may give wisely. I should give systematically. I should pray with my giving.

Golden Text—Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith. Heb. 12:1, 2.

In the great South Kensington Museum in London here is "a man in bottles." Each individual element that goes to make up the body of a man is placed in a separate bottle, and these bottles, large and small, are placed together on a shelf. The whole body of a man is there. But it is not a man. It has no resemblance to a man. It has none of the powers of a man. Yet each element has its own powers and value. Now a Review bears some such relation to the separate lessons. It gives the movement of the whole period, and its teachings. Giving the titles of the lessons is not a review.

The Period of This Quarter is included within a century, from a short time before the birth of Moses to the encampment in the valley before Sinai. According to Professor Beecher's dates, 1578 to 1498, B. C.

The Geographical Situation. There are only three countries with which we have any connection during this period—Egypt, Palestine, and Babylonia—Palestine lying between the two great powers, and a prize which both desired to control. There have been found in Egypt about 300 official letters written about this time, on small clay tablets, between Egypt and Jerusalem and various places in Palestine and Syria.

1. The People with an Ideal, with possibilities.

The Israelites in Egypt could look back to an ideal example in Abraham their father, and to the promises of God. This promise grew dim, but it was always with them.

2. God Raised Up a Leader and a Law-giver. For eighty years God was training this leader, and preparing the people to go to Canaan which was to be their home country.

Moses' birth, his home training; his schooling in a royal court, and in all the wisdom and learning of Egypt; his great decision to serve God in delivering his people; his training in the desert.

3. The Wonderful Deliverance of His People that proved that the true God was their God, and his preparing them for their new life.

(1) God revealed to them. (2) The victory over Egypt through the ten plagues. (3) The Passover and religious uplift. (4) A decisive choice by the people. The passing through the Red Sea by God's mighty power.

4. The New Life Begun. The Training of the People. Then follows a series of lessons and disciplines in God's great training school of life.

Trials of faith, leading to trust in God.

The bread sufficient for needs. Discipline in the gathering and the use of the manna.

Divine guidance by the pillar of fire and cloud.

A victory over enemies.

A vision of God in his glory and power.

The covenant of obedience and protection. The Ten Commandments, the fundamental law of the nation, followed by many regulations and laws.

The covenant broken, Repentance, Prayer, Restoration.

The making of a House of God to aid in the realization of Jehovah by the people.

A LETTER REVIEW

Letters were written in the ancient days we have been studying, though of course the letters were very much fewer than those that our modern post-offices must handle. An interesting form of review would be the reading of a series of letters concerned with the different lessons and telling their stories, each letter being written as if by one of the spectators of the event. The following list will be suggestive:

Lesson I. From a humane superintendent of the Hebrew slaves in Egypt to a friend in Upper Egypt.

Lesson II. From Amram to an Israelite in another part of the Land of Goshen, describing the preservation of the infant Moses.

Lesson III. From Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, to an Arab friend, telling about the call of Moses.

Lesson IV. From an Egyptian courtier to a friend in Damascus, giving an account of the plagues.

Lesson V. From an Egyptian soldier to a brother in the capital, relating the destruction of the Egyptian forces in the Red Sea.

Lesson VI. From Miriam to the princes who brought up Moses, telling about the manna.

Lesson VII. From Jethro to one of his judges in the Land of Midian, telling how he himself had improved the judicial system of the Israelites.

Lesson VIII. From Caleb to a friend in Egypt telling about the giving of the Ten Commandments, and the first four of the Laws.

Lesson IX. From Jochebed to a former neighbor in the Land of Midian telling about the last six Commandments and how they were received.

Lesson X. From Aaron to a friend in Egypt, describing the Tent of Meeting.

Lesson XI. From Bezalel to an artisan in Egypt telling about the gifts for the Tabernacle and the construction of it.

Lesson XII. From Joshua to a friend in Egypt telling about the laws of God through Moses, and especially the rewards for obedience and punishment for disobedience.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Jabbering in Crazy Lingo

Gilbert Chesterton in a lecture given while making a tour of the United States, said that one of the greatest obstacles in the path of international understanding and good will was the non-existence of a universal language. He defined any language which is foreign to one's own as "jabber." "Listen to that crowd of nuts jabbering that crazy lingo over there" some irritated man will exclaim. "If they want to talk, why in the name of common sense don't they use the king's English!"

We smile, but there is something to think about here. It sounds like such a small, unimportant item. Yet, it is just such small, unimportant items that are the direct cause of war. If the smaller things could be ironed out, the larger things would, in many instances, take care of themselves.

For many years I held a grudge against the entire English nation because I had once known an Englishman whose tone of voice appeared to me to border on the effeminate, and who committed the unpardonable crime of calling for a cup of tea in the middle of the afternoon. Thereafter, when the subject of England or the English came up, I found some such exclamation as the following on the tip of my tongue: "Oh, those folks! Don't talk to me. I know 'em."

A trip abroad recently convinced me more thoroughly of this tragedy in trivial things. I heard some criticisms of my own country and people by Europeans, and I heard a great deal of criticism of European affairs and people by my fellow countrymen traveling in Europe. The two brands were identical. As a rule, they had to do with the cut of the clothes, the swiftness of speech, or the flavoring of the soup.

I met a Canadian lady in France who had been visiting relatives in England. In one particular family she had found that all the members agreed that America was a crude place in which to live, and that Americans in general were a most disagreeable and boisterous people. The lady made an honest effort to get at the root of their prejudice. One day the grown son revealed the secret: "Oh, they are really such uncultivated folk whose characters will never be able to harmonize with ours. Why, their tennis champion actually threw his racket into the air after he had gained the world's championship over here last summer. An Englishman would never have done that."

"Isn't it killing?" laughed my friend.

"Killing, yes," I replied. "So killing that it is serious."—Edwin B. Chappell, Jr., in Classmate.

It's Great

It is great to be out where the fight is strong;
To be where the heaviest troops belong,
And to fight for man and God.
O, it seams the face and it tries the brain;
It strains the arm till one's friend is Pain,
In the fight for man and God.
But it's great to be out where the fight is strong,
To be where the heaviest troops belong,
And to fight for man and God.

DIVIDE UP

For Lookout Committee

Often two small societies are far better than one large one. The two societies can compete with each other. They can learn from each other, inspire each other. The two societies will give every member a chance to take part; indeed, they make it really necessary for all to take part in order to have any meeting worth while. And sometimes even a small society is better by dividing into two very small societies. If the society has become careless, indifferent, sluggish, this division will put each of the resultant little societies on its mettle. The plan is worth trying, at any rate; and if it does not work you can go back to the undivided society, and no harm will have been done.

A NEW IDEA EVERY WEEK

For Prayer-Meeting Committees.

There are undoubtedly fifty-two good prayer-meeting plans which you have not tried in your society. Get the United Society's prayer-meeting literature, and you will be convinced of the truth of this statement. Take up those plans one at a time, and see how much life they will give your prayer-meetings. If you add to them the plans given on the prayer-meeting page of our paper from week to week, you will greatly increase their number. Announce your purpose to introduce one novelty into every meeting. The Endeavorers will look for it, and that anticipation will in itself add to the interest.

GRADUATION JOY

For Junior and Intermediate Workers

When Juniors graduate into the Intermediate society, or Intermediates into the Senior society, graduation exercises should be held on Sunday evening—in the church, if the pastor consents. But other features may be added that will make graduation stand out as a time of joy.

One Junior society gave a graduation party to the Juniors that were stepping up into the Intermediate society. Then the Intermediates, not to be outdone in courtesy, held a reception for the graduating Juniors.

In the same way Intermediate societies might hold graduating parties for those of their members that are passing into the Senior society, and the Senior society might welcome them in a reception.

These should, of course, be social affairs, and the young people should be given a really good time.

ATTENTION—PASTORS!!!

Will the pastors of our churches kindly inquire as to whether or not your societies' Pledge has been paid, and if it has not, will you kindly urge immediate remittance? There are eleven societies which have their pledges outstanding to date and it is very important that they remit at once.

Let's show the Home Mission Board that we CAN have our National C. E. pledge paid in full, and not make it necessary for them to wait several months for same as they did last year.

Hello Boys and Girls of America:

I received your message last month about helping to send the Gospel. I appreciated it. I am so glad that you children of America want the children of other lands to be happy and to believe in Jesus.

Once I was a "poor little rich girl." You see I am a princess and we are considered rich. My father rules over quite a large territory. Yet we were poor because we did not know about Jesus and about his saying that we should love one another. Although we were rich, very little had been done for me in the way of education or things to make me happy. Most girls in India do not have a chance to study in school long enough to become really educated because the girls of India are all supposed to be married by the time they are twelve years old. Just think when a little girl in India is old enough to enter high school she has no chance to go to school at all but instead is married and has to spend nearly all her time at her husband's home. If a girl in our country is not married by the time she is twelve she is looked down upon by people. Girls are not courted and proposed to like your big sisters are, instead the father arranges for the marriage and that is all the girl knows about it. —just that she is to be married to someone at a certain time.

Now all of this would have happened to me if it had not been for your missionaries. For many years your Christian ministers have been preaching to the poor people over here in our land but they have not even tried to tell the rulers and the rich people their Gospel Story. My father had noticed that the people who were taught by your missionaries lived much cleaner, happier lives than the other people, and so one day when a missionary came to our house to get permission to go into a new section of land, my father asked him why he did not teach the rich people as well as the poor the new religion. Thus it happened that all of us in my home became Christians, and even though I am now twelve years old, I am not married and I am studying daily not only school subjects but the Bible as well.

Once a week I am allowed to go with the missionaries on their tours of teaching and helping. One time when there was a sick little boy that needed help and the mission hospital was full, I was allowed to take the little boy to a house near my own home. After he had been looked after and was getting better I helped to tell him about Jesus and I think it is very wonderful to be allowed to teach people to be Christians.

Some day when I am grown, I hope to use my money to establish a new mission. I am going to teach all the children of the rulers in my mission and make them truly rich. I shall try to teach them that Jesus loves them and that he wants them to love one another. I think that Jesus wants the parents of India to love their little girls so well that they will not want to give them away while they are still little girls. If parents loved their little girls like Jesus wants them to, they would not want them to be unhappy as they are almost sure to be when they have to live with some man they have never seen, and do not love at all.

We want you, boys and girls of America, to pray for us that we may make India a Christian land and may teach the people of India to live as Christians should.

Successful Experiments in Designated Giving

Actual experiences of individuals who have made special gifts, or who have enlisted the interest of other givers, contain many best method suggestions, taken from the Missionary Review of the World.

"Our Lives Against Your Money." The words printed in letters clear enough to be read by every one in the great auditorium were flung out to a convention having an attendance of more than a thousand men.

The streamer with its challenge was held aloft by about a score of young men and women who were volunteers for missionary service but who were detained at home because there was no money with which to send them out.

A wise committee, realizing that some expenditure of money is frequently a requisite for obtaining more money, paid the expenses of these volunteers that they might attend this convention and present their own challenge.

After a genuine interest had been awakened by a program presenting the call of God and the needs of the various fields, the volunteers were introduced. They flung out their challenge, "Our Lives Against Your Money," and held it before the audience until one after another of the laymen, singly or in groups, answered the challenge with pledges sufficient to send the volunteers to the needy fields which waited their coming.

Working in Two Parishes

A young pastor took charge of his first parish. The geography of his life had ended far short of his dreams and expectations. He had thought to serve in some far mission field. Instead of an ocean voyage a short train journey only was required to bring him to the home mission field in a coal mining section, to which he had been called. Instead of missing his opportunity he doubled it. With Livingstone he discovered that "The end of the geographical feat is the beginning of the missionary enterprise."

It seemed that the end of the geographical feat of his life was within a few miles of his birthplace, but it was only the beginning of his missionary enterprise. There was no doubt of the need and opportunity in his own parish and its outlying territory. As he met that he said to his people, "I can't be satisfied about not being in the foreign field unless I know there is some one else there whose work I am helping to make possible."

Quietly, earnestly and persistently he kept the subject before his people until the support of a second pastor was assumed for a foreign mission parish.

Opening Up a Foreign Branch Office

"Why don't you extend your business and open up a branch office in some foreign land?" said the mission secretary to the man of big business.

"Oh, we have a number of foreign offices," replied the man of big business.

"Anything in Korea?" was the next question,—"I mean anything in the line of your Father's business."

Then in a way that challenged the man of great affairs he told of a new mission station that should be opened up. The result was that he opened up that entire station in Korea providing for all the equipment and the missionaries needed.

Giving a Missionary and Supporting Him Too

In many instances the congregation or Sunday school or class from which a missionary goes may be enlisted to support him by gifts of money as well as through constant interest and prayer.

A young man from South Carolina went to Japan. To the Young People's Society from which he went it was another call of "My Life Against Your Money." The members who stayed at home pledged their gifts to provide his salary and the frequent communications between Japan and South Carolina resulted in deep interest and fine support on the part of South Carolina and a constant encouragement and help to the representative in Japan.

In another instance a member of a Business Woman's Council who accepted a call to home mission work in the mountains of North Carolina was supported by the members of her Council who remained at home.

When a member of a Sunday school class was commissioned for service in India, the seventeen other members of the class accepted the commission they recognized in their own hearts to go with her through prayer and gifts, and assumed her financial support with the promise that through their prayers they would work with her constantly.

My Missionary for a Day

This plan is not a new one but it is an effective one. When it was presented in one large and listless rural church it suggested a possibility hitherto unheard of. In that congregation the apportionment for missions was considered a burdensome tax levied by designing officers of synod.

A young student returning home from college arranged for the presentation of a series of missionary subjects during a period when the congregation was without a pastor. At the closing meeting of the series he proposed that in addition to the regular gifts for missions the support of a native evangelist in Japan should be assumed. The amount required was $1.25 a day. Pledging thirty days himself, he asked for volunteers to make this worker "my missionary for a day."

There were few people present who were not earning at least $1.25 a day. Almost any one of them would volunteer to work for one day during the year in Japan if the difficulties and expense of transportation could be eliminated. The idea of working a day or a week through this plan appealed to them.

In rapid succession hands were raised with pledges for one, two, or more days, for a week or two weeks, or a month until they had provided for the entire year.

An X-ray for India

For many years the doctors in charge of a mission hospital in India longed for an X-ray apparatus. At a missionary rally in Chicago one of the doctors who was on furlough mentioned this need.

There was no begging for help, no impassioned appeal. She simply told of a need and an opportunity. At the close of the meeting a man came to her saying that he was a dealer in X-ray apparatus and would be very glad to donate a machine to her hospital.

The plain statement of facts and needs in meetings, large and small, and to individuals is one of the best of methods for enlisting special gifts.

FAITH IN THE SON OF GOD.

"Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"—John 9:35.

The blind man whose sight Jesus had restored had no difficulty in ascribing to him divine honor and power. He felt the touch of that power. That makes all the difference in the world. There are many among us who have doubts and difficulties about religion because they have not allowed themselves to come into touch with it sufficiently to experience its power in their hearts and lives. They do not know Christ, but view him only at a distance, and hence cannot be brought to acknowledge his claim to be the very Son of God. If they drew a little closer to him; if they put his words to a real test; if they allowed them to govern their thinking and their living; they would feel the touch of his power as the blind man did. Christ can do nothing for a man who has no spiritual need and who shuts his eye to the divine beauty and glory of his teachings and his life. I do not see how it is possible for a serious-minded man to read the story of Christ's life and teachings without realizing that here is something altogether new, altogether different from the thinking and the living with which we poor sinful creatures, with our distorted and limited vision, are only too willing to be familiar. Christ's gospel is a great eye-opener. When once we feel its touch and come under its power, how our doubts and difficulties vanish! Then, like the blind man, we, too, will say, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" and the answer will come back, "Thou hast both seen him and heard him speak." Christ's word is his speech.

Speak to me, Lord Jesus, and let me know the power of thy word. I am dull of hearing. Do thou speak the word that I may learn to know thy voice and hear. I am blind. Do thou speak the word, that my sight may be restored; that I may see thee and know thee as thou art. Then will I fall down before thee and worship thee as my Lord and my God. Amen.—The Lutheran.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

FROM BROTHER AND SISTER EDWARD NININGER
OF ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

I was invited to attend the Maryland and Virginia District Conference at Roanoke, Virginia, and present the Endowment Campaign of Ashland. There were several things that made the trip enjoyable and worth while. Virginia has some beautiful scenery and the wonderful Shenandoah Valley is a feast to the eyes. Then the Southern hospitality cannot be surpassed and one cannot help to feel that they are among friends who take pleasure in making you happy.

The Conference was well attended, the program commendable and the work entered into with earnestness and the spirit of unity. Roanoke is a wide-awake business city with many beautiful homes and pleasant surroundings. I did not go there with the purpose of canvassing for the College money, as it will be a year or more before I enter that district, but while there I had the pleasure of meeting Brother and Sister Nininger, who are not only interested in the local church work, but in the cause of the church in all its general activities.

It was while visiting in their home that I learned of their interest in Ashland College and desire to do something worth while as a memorial for the school. It was indeed a pleasant surprise when they GAVE ME A CASH GIFT FOR THE ENDOWMENT OF FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

Their gift was made in a quiet and modest way, not for display, but out of hearts that spoke their love for the future of the church.

They gave in the spirit that brought to them satisfaction and joy in sharing with Jesus the blessings that he had given them in a material way. How many people with good intentions plan to give money to the church after their death, who never have the satisfaction of giving it themselves while living and who sometimes die before they have made provisions and often their wills are broken and the money turned to other sources than intended.

Why not have the satisfaction of giving while you can enjoy making the gift and share in the pleasure of the work?

How easy the entire Endowment would be raised, if those who are members of the church, to whom the Lord has entrusted wealth, would honor the Lord with his portion. It would enrich the spiritual life, further the cause and open the windows of the soul to receive his blessings, also would be laying up treasures in Heaven. Brother and Sister Nininger are an example which I wish many others would follow in this respect and may God richly bless them both.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Since last report, nine souls have confessed Christ as their Savior, and one reconsecration. Eight of this number have now been baptized.

These souls were all young, nine girls and one boy. All were also boarding pupils in school.

All here are anxiously awaiting the new lighting system, when we hope that most of our lighting troubles will then be over. We will hardly know how to act to have again dependable lights. All concerned are very grateful for the same.

A good box of clothing has been received from Mrs. F. M. Closson, Covina, California.

The extremely wet and hot weather continues. We have had the rainiest August experienced in this section for many, many years.

Riverside Institute seeks first and above all to make its work intensely spiritual, based on the Bible as the final, authoritative, revealed word of God. In such times as we are now passing through, it seems to us that our God has a place and use for such a work, which will not soon pass. The intellectual phase of the work is not neglected. A young man, now in Chicago University doing his advanced work in Chemistry, recently unsolicited gave a splendid testimony to the above thought. He is also a graduate of a good high school, two years of which work he did at Riverside Institute. Of this work he recently wrote as follows: "My two years of school work at Riverside Institute have meant more to me than all the rest of my school days. I believe that you need not be uneasy about me losing my faith here."

Miss Stoffer spent the day recently in Jackson, going home and visiting over the night with Miss Bethke and Miss Ewert, who are doing community work near Jackson, a splendid work of Faith.

The sermon for the fifth was on giving, Luke 6:38. The leading thought presented was that when we became a Christian we entered into partnership relations with our God. As a partner in the work of our Lord I am obligated to help carry on his business, the propagation of the Gospel. This obligates me to give, at least a tenth part of my income, and if my relationship to my God means much to me I will not stop with the tenth, yea, I will even not stop with money but will give myself for his service. Those who give sparingly have but very little fellowship with God.

GENERAL CONFERENCE REPORT

Minutes of Business Sessions

The opening session of the thirty-eighth General Conference of the Brethren church was held at Winona Lake, Indiana, on Monday evening, August 23, 1926. The opening number was the singing of the "Doxology" in a devotional manner. The opening prayer was made by Moderator J. A. Garber. W. C.

Benshoff led the opening devotions. The song leader, H. E. Eppley, sang the very inspiring song, "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer." The opening message was very ably delivered by Vice-moderator C. H. Ashman. His subject was, "The Greatest Wonder of the Ages." Session was closed by singing, "Savior More than Life," and benediction by W. C. Benshoff.

Tuesday Morning

The opening devotions consisted in the singing of spiritual hymns; scripture reading and prayer by F. C. Vanator.

The first order of business was the report of the membership committee. A total of 111 lay, 53 ministerial and 2 cooperative delegates were reported and accepted by Conference. Several additional reports were also accepted and committee ordered continued.

The second item of business was the election of officers. For the respective offices the following were nominated: Moderator, George Kem, C. H. Ashman, Vice-moderator, R. Paul Miller, A. V. Kimmel, M. A. Witter, Chas. Anspach; secretary, O. C. Starn; Assistant secretary, Herman Koontz; treasurer, N. G. Kimmel, Ira Wilcox, C. L. Hepler; statistician, H. E. Eppley; committee on committees, Geo. Ronk, O. E. Bowman, A. V. Kimmel, A. E. Whitted, J. A. Garber, G. L. Maus, G. W. Rench.

A motion was made and carried that the rules of Conference be suspended and those nominated for the offices of secretary, assistant secretary and statistician be elected by sign.

The next item of the morning session was the usual retiring Moderator's address by J. A. Garber. A motion was made that the address be accepted with thanks and that it be referred to a committee to make a report later. Motion carried.

Next was the report of the election of officers which was as follows: Moderator, C. H. Ashman; vice-moderator, R. Paul Miller; treasurer, N. G. Kimmel; Committee on Committees, G. W. Rench, J. A. Garber, Geo. Ronk. Session closed by singing, "I need Jesus."

Wednesday Morning

Opening devotions conducted by Freeman Ankrum. Next in order was the reading of the minutes of the previous business session. Motion made and carried that minutes be accepted as read.

Credential committee reported the presence of 137 lay delegates, 65 ministerial and 2 cooperative. Report accepted and committee ordered continued.

Next was the report of the committee on committees which was as follows: Moderator's address, Martin Shively, O. C. Starn, Geo. Jones; Resolutions, W. I. Duker, F. C. Vanator, A. L. Lynn, Chas. Mayes; Sunday school nominations, Quinter Lyon, C. C. Grisso, A. D. Gnagey; Christian Endeavor nominations, A. R. Staley, O. D. Ullom, Mrs. Chas. Anspach; Conference membership, R. Paul Miller, M. L. Sands, G. L. Maus, Geo. Cone, H. H. Rowsey; Rules and Organization, Dyoll Belote, Claud Studebaker, C. A. Stewart; Finance, Ira Wilcox, C. L. Hepler, Geo. Kem, Inter-church Cooperation, A. J. McClain, J. Allen Miller, E. E. Jacobs. This report was accepted by proper vote.

The following nominations were made for membership on the Home Missions Board for a three year period: G. C. Carpenter, R. Paul Miller, L. G. Wood. A motion to elect was so ordered by Conference.

A motion to elect Charles Anspach, Geo. Rench and Geo. Kem as members of the Publication Board was approved by Conference.

Motion prevailed to accept resignation of H. F. E. O'Neill as president of the Board of Benevolences. Motion then made and carried that Frank Roscoe fill the unexpired term of H. F. E. O'Neill. Motion to re-elect J. L. Kimmel as a member of the Board was approved by proper vote.

A motion was made to organize the Executive Committee for the following year. So ordered by Conference. The members from the various districts composing the Executive Committee are as follows: Pennsylvania, A. L. Lynn, R. Paul Miller; Ohio, R. F. Porte, E. M. Riddle; Indiana, H. F. Stuckman, F. G. Coleman; Maryland-Virginia, Freeman Ankrum, E. L. Miller; Mid-west, A. E. Whitted; Illiokota, G. T. Ronk; Northwest, J. C. Beal; Northern California, J. Wesley Platt; Southern California, A. V. Kimmel. These members were properly accepted by Conference.

A motion prevailed that the chair appoint a committee of two to carry greetings to the Eel River Christian Convention. J. A. Garber and R. Paul Miller received the appointment.

A statement concerning the Annual was called for. Following is a brief statement: Number sold, 572; amount received, $143.00; expenses, $32.06, leaving a balance of $110.94. Cost of Annual, $295.00; telegram, $.48, making a total of $295.48. Credit for Annuals sold by Publishing Co., $19.45; paid on account, $100.00, leaving a balance due of $176.03. Balance on hand, $10.94, leaving a debt to Conference of $165.09. A motion prevailed to accept report and that the Annual be made the first item of business at next business session. Session closed with prayer.

Thursday Morning

Opened with spirited song service. Devotions conducted by A. B. Cover. The usual reading of the minutes followed with their approval.

The credential committee reported a total of 68 ministerial and 156 lay delegates. Report accepted and committee ordered continued.

Next was a discussion concerning the Annual for the immediate year. A motion prevailed that the chair appoint a committee of three to investigate the matter and report at next business session. O. C. Starn, R. R. Tector and W. H. Beachler were appointed.

The following committees reported:

On Moderator's address, which was as follows: "We, your committee to which has been committed the Moderator's address, beg leave to report as follows: with reference to the suggestion that General Conference be held Bi-ennially instead of annually; and that it should be held at different points in the brotherhood capable of entertaining it; and that districts be reorganized into smaller areas, we recommend that a committee of three be appointed to report its recommendations to the Conference one year hence. Your committee feels that there is much merit in the suggestion." This report was accepted.

On religious Education: "The commission on materials for Religious Instruction has had several meetings in connection with the conference. Several recommendations relative to lesson materials were presented to the Publication Board which has favorably considered the same. The commission stands ready to give further consideration to these and relative problems if the conference desires to continue its services." The report was accepted and the commission ordered continued.

On church extension and conservation. This committee was ordered to continue its work.

On Sunday school nominations: Sunday school editor, Quinte M. Lyon; associate editor, J. A. Garber; Church Board of Religious Education, J. A. Garber, W. I. Duker, E. G. Mason, E. M. Riddle, Q. M. Lyon, C. L. Anspach; National Sunday School Association Officers, President, W. H. Beachler; vice president, W. I. Duker; general secretary, J. A. Garber; field secretary, M. A. Stuckey; treasurer, Martin Shively. Divisional Superintendents: Children's, Hazel Keiser; Young peoples, Geo. Jones; Adult, A. B. Cober; Administration, S. M. Whetstone. Departmental Superintendents: Educational, J. A. Garber; Home, Mrs. H. M. Cook; Citizenship, R. R. Haun; Missionary, N. V. Leatherman. This report was duly accepted by conference.

At this time we were pleased to receive greetings from the Eel River Christian Conference. The committee was composed of Judge O. W. Whitelock, C. C. Tarr, J. V. Sees. Judge Whitelock being the spokesman, gave to us a few well chosen thoughts. A song marked the transition into the succeeding session.

Friday Morning

Opening prayer by Geo. Kem. Minutes of previous session were read and approved.

Credential committee reported 73 ministerial and 168 lay delegates to date. Report accepted and committee ordered continued.

The Christian Endeavor nominating committee reported the following nominations: President, J. A. Garber; Associate president, E. M. Riddle; Sec.-Treas., Gladys Spice. Departmental superintendents: Quiet Hour, Homer Kent; Stewardship, O. D. Ullom; Citizenship, Chas. Mayes; Junior, Doris Stout; Intermediate, W. O. Nish; Service, Trivla Snyder; Publicity, Louis Clapper; Missionary, Grace Yoder. Motion to accept report with election of those named, carried.

A motion was made by the Brethren Home Board to elect Martin Shively to fill the unexpired presidential term of Jesse A. Garver. Motion carried. Also a motion was made that the Board be permitted to ask for an offering of 40c per member this year. The permission was granted.

The Boys' Work Committee made the following report: "Material has been gathered from the best boys' programs available and also from the African mission field. This is being put into a Brethren form for boys between the ages of 10 and 15 years. Copies will be mimeographed. A leaders' training course will be put on for a week at Conference time next year if the churches will respond with their potential boy leadership.

The commission wishes to be continued with a reorganizing of its personell." A motion to amend was made and carried that nominations for committee on Boys' Work be referred to Committee on Committees. The motion with the amendment was accepted by proper vote.

The Committee on Annual Publication made a report. After some discussion it was moved and seconded that 650 year books be printed and that the Conference secretary assume the responsibility of publication. An amendment was ordered by Conference whereby an advisory committee be appointed to assist in the publication. The motion with the Amendment was so ordered by Conference whereby an advisory committee be appointed to assist in the publication. The motion with the Amendment was so ordered by Conference.

The Executive Committee recommended that the next General Conference be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, during the latter part of August, 1927. The recommendation was accepted.

The following committees were appointed by the Committee on Committees: Education, W. S. Bell, L. L. Garber, Martin Shively; Temperance, A. E. Whitted, A. B. Cover, W. C. Beushoff; Social Service, G. S. Baer, J. Raymond Schutz, L. R. Bradfield, S. C. Henderson; Peace, E. B. Shaver, A. D. Gnagey, M. A. Witter; Boys' Work, Geo. Jones, W. O. Nish, M. A. Stuckey, M. P. Puterbaugh, Donald Bame; Annual Advisory, J. Allen Miller, G. S. Baer, O. E. Bowman. These appointments were approved by Conference.

Saturday Morning

Opened with song. Devotions conducted by Forest Byers. Minutes of previous business session read and approved.

The final report of the credential committee revealed the presence of 75 ministerial, 178 lay and two cooperative delegates. Report accepted.

The Resolutions Committee made the following report which was accepted: "Whereas, there has been constant evidence of the blessing of our heavenly Father in the various activities of our beloved church and,

Whereas, such evident blessing should receive the gratitude of our hearts and find expression in firm resolution, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we express our earnest thanksgiving to our God and Father for this another expression of his divine favor and that again we reaffirm our stand upon the integrity of his Word.

2. That we thank the officers of the Conference for the fine program and its attendant inspiration.

3. That we heartily endorse what is now the outstanding work of the brotherhood, viz., the endowment campaign of our College, commending it to each church as a part of a great opportunity to advance the cause of education.

4. That we express our appreciation to the various Boards and commissions for the fine work of the year and pledge to them our hearty support in the coming year.

5. That we again reiterate our position of former years with regard to war and its attendant evils.

6. That we heartily endorse all movements in our church that deal with Christian education, feeling that such education is vital to the upbuilding, not only to the individual but also to the church in general.

7. That we stand squarely upon the necessity of genuine law enforcement and in particular for a stricter observance of the 18th Amendment and the sanctity of our Lord's Day.

8. That we reaffirm our loyalty to the distinctive practices of our church.

9. That we commend the church for her position in the past relative to the Near East Relief and recommend its continuance.

10. That the National Sunday School Association plan, publish, promote, and finance, insofar as it be deemed wise, and carry to a successful conclusion the already proposed and generally sanctioned Young Peoples' conference of study, recreation and lecture work at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, at some date to be determined later."

Next, was the report of the finance committee which is as follows:

This report was duly accepted by Conference.

Motion was made that W. A. Gearhart continue in his office of taking care of pastorless churches and churchless pastors. So ordered.

The Committee on Committees appointed the following committees to consider the holding of Conference bi-ennially, to change the place of meeting to different points, and the re-districting of our present districts: Martin Shively, O. C. Starn, Geo. Jones. The appointment was accepted.

A motion was made to accept the resignation of H. E. Eppley as Statistician. The motion carried. A further motion to elect a statistician at this business session carried. A motion prevailed to suspend the rules of Conference and to elect Geo. Cone by acclamation.

Next was a report from the Laymen's movement which is as follows:

Whereas, the Laymens' Organization exists primarily for the purpose of assisting worthy but financially unable young men and women securing an education in preparation for ministerial or missionary work in the Brethren church.

And, whereas, it is practically impossible to accomplish anything along these lines without a substantial fund known in the constitution of the Laymens' Organization as The Student's Aid Fund be raised for making loans under conditions set forth in said constitution and unless an appeal for such fund may be brought before the church membership in a more effective manner than that used heretofore it will be impossible to raise such fund to an amount worth while. Now therefore,

Be it resolved, that the Executive Committee be directed to designate the second Sunday in March in the calendar year as Laymens' Sunday. And that every church in the brotherhood be appealed to to observe such day, and that the feature of this day be a laymens' program. And in this program the principles of the Students' Aid Fund be fully explained and that a special offering be taken on this day for this fund. And such collection be remitted to the Sec-Treasurer of the Laymens' Organization to be paid to the Treasurer of the Students' Aid Fund." An amendment was ordered by Conference whereby Laymens' Day be observed upon the second Sunday in September. The report with the amendment was so ordered by Conference.

Motion to extend time of business session five minutes was approved. Mr. A. Christie Brown then presented to Conference the work of the Near East Relief.

Respectfully submitted,

O. C. STARN, Secretary.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

An American Boy in Kipling's Country

William O. Stevens, writing in "St. Nicholas," tells of his life, as a boy, "on the road to Mandalay." The boy's day began about six in the morning. His morning shower meant taking dipperfuls of water from the earthenware jars in the bath room and pouring it over himself. There were wide cracks between the boards of the bath room floor, and the water splashed through to the ground beneath on a pile of cobblestones. Next came "chotabazri," or early breakfast, which was just toast and a cup of weak tea at half-past six. At ten o'clock came the real breakfast, with rice and a bit of fowl or fish. At noon, "tiffin," more toast and tea. At five-thirty he had dinner, always with rice and often with curry. During meals, a servant pulled a rope that swung a "punka," or hanging fan, to keep the air stirring over the table.

Of course, there was no ice to keep food or to cool the water. Some food could be kept a few hours in a "safe" on the back veranda, but on account of the ants, each foot of the safe had to stand in a bowl of kerosene to keep off the greedy insects. Even at that, one might have to spoon off a few ants in a cup of tea, after putting the sugar in. The cooking was done by a Hindu in a cook-house at some little distance back of the home, and, in that climate, there was never any danger of food getting cold while it was being brought to the table. Once in a while the boy had, as a treat, some English butter. This came in a tin, and when you cracked it open, you spooned out the butter and dribbled it on your toast.

When it grew dark, the lamp was lighted and the boy would try to read a little before going to bed. (As he took a nap in the middle of the day, his bed-time was not so early as it might otherwise have been.) But it wasn't easy. As there were no screens, the mosquitoes came romping in to their feast, and the boy would turn pages with one hand and slap with the other. There were ten thousand other insects, too, that delighted in flocking round the lamp, without being at all helpful to the reader. And up in the rafters were any number of pleasant lizards. They didn't harm anybody; in fact, they helped to keep the insects down; but they would get so fascinated looking at the reading light that every now and then one of them would come down—plop!—on the table or book. The fall would break off the lizard's tail, but the owner never seemed to mind. The tail would wiggle a few moments all by itself, but the lizard would scuttle off to grow a new one. Of course when a lizard dropped into your hair, or down the back of your neck, it was a nuisance, but the boy was used to it.

Then when he went to bed and pulled his stuffy mosquito curtains around him, he would have to try to kill all the mosquitoes inside first, before settling down. As he dropped off he would hear the other lizards in the rafters, the big ones, calling out "Towk teh!"—a startling sound if you have never before heard it.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

PROHIBITION AND PUBLIC OPINION

By Harry M. Chalfant, Editor "American issue" (Penna. Edition)

For five years the American people have been working on one of the greatest experiments in all their history—that of national prohibition. Is it to be a successful experiment or is it doomed to failure? To get light on that question we must needs pause and ask another question: What is the present state of public opinion with reference to prohibition? What does the average citizen think of it at this time? Does it meet with his approval and is he in favor of perpetual warfare to maintain it or does your average citizen look upon it as a failure—as an ill-timed movement which ought to be abandoned?

Within the space of this brief article I shall endeavor to answer those questions as far as Pennsylvania is concerned. When the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted ours was one of the wettest of all the states having over ten thousand saloons and its political affairs being dominated almost entirely by the liquor interests. It is my conviction that public opinion in Pennsylvania is slowly but positively crystallizing in favor of the maintenance of the Eighteenth Amendment and its rigid enforcement. While recognizing that this is a subject on which no man can have mathematical knowledge, yet, my conviction is based on certain facts which are indisputable and from which it seems to be no adverse conclusion is possible.

The Courts

1. The changing attitude of the courts. It has been my duty for the past sixteen years to study and know liquor conditions, county by county, in every section of the state. Prior to 1920 I studied the courts to ascertain their conduct in handling licenses. Since then I have studied them to find out their attitude toward the enforcement of the prohibition laws. I have no hesitancy in saying that there has been notable change in the attitude of the judiciary during the last five years. Of the new men coming to the bench in that time a large majority have been men with personal convictions on the right side of this question. There has been a remarkable change of attitude on the part of many older judges who have continued over into the new era.

Judges are administrators of the law and not makers of public opinion. In large measure the character of men selected for the bench is a reflection of public opinion. Moreover, with few exceptions the men who are on the bench are much more largely influenced by public sentiment than they themselves think. There are many things in the work of a judge in which he ought to be so influenced. He needs make no apology on that score.

I could select many counties in the state illustrating the contrast between past and present conditions. Here is just one: In a typical county I was instrumental a few years ago in having prosecutions brought against the keepers of certain roadhouses. I went to court and listened to the trial of the bootleggers. The vigorous conduct of the district attorney was most gratifying but the attitude of the judges was distinctly disappointing. I was also disappointed in the verdict of the juries. In those days when a man did plead guilty or was convicted his fine was nominal and imprisonment was rarely imposed.

Recently I went into that same county and made a close study of what is happening today. Most of the bootleggers when apprehended are pleading guilty. The percentage of convictions runs high. About two-thirds of the culprits, whether they plead guilty or are convicted, are given stiff prison sentences. The district attorney keeps his docket cleaned up. The judges are prompt and there is no abuse of the parole. One of the judges is new. He is a prohibitionist from conviction while his colleagues have made rapid strides in the right direction in the last two years. This condition can be duplicated in many counties of the state.

It is true that there are still bad spots in the local courts. Most of them will be remedied only by death or new elections. But taken as a whole the attitude of the judiciary shows unmistakable progress. If this is a proper criterion of public opinion then Pennsylvania is headed in the right direction.

The Press

2. The changing attitude of the press. When I came into the service of the Anti-Saloon League sixteen years ago, one could count on his fingers all the outstanding papers which were openly favorable to prohibition. Recently we have made a close study of four hundred of our leading dailies and weeklies of the state. We have studied the editors of these papers, not by means of any questionnaire, but through the eyes of unbiased patrons and readers. Reports made indicate that approximately two-thirds of the editors are now personally favorable to prohibition. Less than twenty per cent are antagonistic. The rest are indifferent.

The press openly hostile to prohibition is a diminishing quantity. The change of attitude of numerous larger cities is one of the most interesting developments. Some of them which were many knockers two or three years ago are today acting in a most commendable way. Editors of some of these papers who are known to be hostile to prohibition are demonstrating their ability to be fair and that means tremendous gains for the cause. The average newspaper is a reflector rather than a maker of public opinion. But whether a maker or a reflector the attitude of the Keystone state press taken as a whole indicates that the principle of prohibition as embodied in the Eighteenth Amendment has traveled a long journey since 1920.

The Ballot

3. Permit us to test public opinion on this question by one other standard. The ballot is not always a sure indication of what the people think, but when taken in connection with other things it is highly significant. Seventeen years ago there was one lone dry Congressman in the Pennsylvania delegation. Today there are at least twenty-one, with the possibility that a test vote might reveal one or two others. If you want to get the sentiment of any Congressional District on any specific question of public concern the best place to get it is from that district's member of Congress. Your Congressman must come up for re-election every two years. Naturally he wants to succeed himself. No man keeps his ear more closely to the ground than does this same Congressman. The charge is made against some of these gentlemen that they are personally wet but politically dry. This is another way of saying that the public sentiment of their districts is for the maintenance of the Eighteenth Amendment and that the Congressman who is disobedient to the wishes of his people may anticipate an early return to private life.

Again, look at the State Senate. Ten years ago more than two-thirds of its members were known to be open enemies of prohibition. Every vote taken in the last two sessions has revealed a substantial affirmative majority. There has been almost the same proportionate gain in the House of Representatives, although the Eighteenth Amendment has not yet been able to secure a decisive majority in that body.

These, in brief, are some of the considerations which produce the conviction in my mind that public sentiment favorable to the Eighteenth Amendment is on the forward march. Notwithstanding all the flagrant violations of the law reported in the press, notwithstanding the frantic efforts of the wets to do irreparable damage to the cause, notwithstanding the horrible indifference of many folks as to the fate of this experiment, prohibition as a principle is here to stay and public opinion is slowly but surely weaving it into the woof of our national life.

Sunday School Rally Song

(Tune—"We'll Rally 'Round the Flag, Boys.")

Yes, we'll rally 'round our Sunday School, we'll rally once again,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible;
From city streets and alleys, recruits we will obtain,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible.

Chorus

The Bible forever our standard shall be,
Its truths for all nations, its laws for the free,
So we'll rally 'round our Sunday School, rally once again,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible.

There is no book so precious to guide us day by day,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible;
'Tis a lamp unto our feet, shedding light along the way,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible.

Chorus

'Tis the only book that tells how our sins may be forgiven,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible.
How life may be made joyous, and death the gate to heaven,
Come with us and learn the Holy Bible.

Revive Thy Church, O God

"Summer Slumps", like the poor, are with us always. A few churches seem able to avoid them, and to maintain a lively zeal throughout the twelve months of the year. But most of them regularly experience a relaxing of energy and a scattering of forces during the hot summer months. Vacationing is becoming an almost universal habit, and pleasure seeking, recreational trips and week end visits are growing in popularity with the spread of the automobile. A hundred and one features of our modern life contribute to a slowing down of the activity and a weakening of the power of the church during the summer months. Whether the situation is accepted in a philosophical manner and considered unavoidable, or whether one is filled with complaint and thinks it ought not to be, yet all Christian leaders are keenly conscious of its existence and heartily rejoice when it is over. There is the almost universal heart yearning, if not the uttered prayer, on the part of God's ministry at this season of the year, "Revive thy church O God." And well may we pray and plan to that end.

In the light of this condition and yearning, Rally Day is our great annual opportunity. It is an institution that has grown up out of a great need. It should not be looked upon as a circus day for the Sunday school, nor as a useless event, but as a most important event and serving a useful purpose. Nor should it be allowed to be merely a single event, but the beginning of a process of revitalizing and re-energizing the church and its auxiliaries for more effective and aggressive work for the Lord. We need these seasons of taking stock, of measuring our power and resources, and of facing up to the task before us with such new zeal and vision as we can command. We need to pray with all earnestness for the revival of the church in all the various departments of its work, and to lay our powers upon the altar with renewed dedication that the Lord God may bring it to pass.

To revive the church means the bringing about of a fuller and more vital life among the membership. That was the expressed purpose of Jesus's coming—"that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly." It is that abundant life that the church needs, and for the want of which it often suffers defeat and disgrace. It is that abundant life that makes the difference between success and failure, influence and discredit, power and weakness. We falter in service because we are deficient in life; we are unequal to our tasks because we are lacking in vitality. A square flagstone of a pound's weight was lifted out of place by the united efforts of only three mushrooms growing under it, so great is the power of even a little thing that grows, that has life. What might not the church do if all its members, or even a majority of them, really possessed abundant, exuberant life! By the inherent force of such life they might lift the dead weight of worldiness that possesses such feeble life that it can scarcely be detected. It is said of Dr. Doddridge that at his birth he showed such slight symptoms of life that he was laid aside as dead. But one of the attendants, thinking she perceived some motion of breath, took the necessary care of him, upon which, in those tender circumstances, the feeble flame of life depended, and which was so nearly expiring as soon as it was kindled. And Christians possess spiritual life as frail as that. It is not to be wondered at when babes in Christ show such frailty, but when men and women of years of religious experience show up so poorly, it is cause for concern, even as Paul himself discovered and rebuked those who must needs be fed with milk when they ought to be eating the meat of the Word.

To revive the church means to impart greater zeal for the doing of the Lord's work. And the Kingdom tarries for the want of zeal on the part of God's people. Those who have figured largely in its progress have been men and women of overflowing zeal. Zinzendorf said to a Moravian brother at Herrnhut, "Can you go as a missionary to Greenland?" "Yes," was the reply. "Can you go tomorrow?" "If the cobbler has finished my shoes I can go tomorrow." That was the quick, willing-hearted response. Wesley said, "If I had three hundred men who feared nothing but God, hated nothing but sin, and were determined to know nothing among men but Jesus Christ and him crucified, I would set the world on fire." "Send us men," said a heathen convert, "with hot hearts." But the church must contemplate the sad fact that she has so few such men. Vast numbers of her membership are so spiritually inactive as to stagnate. With some the temper of their devotion has not warmth enough to keep from freezing. Their influence is as chilling as the north wind in winter. May the spirit of God strike fire into such hearts, and may it keep the holy flame of zeal burning brightly in the lives of us all.

Reviving the church means also inspiring it to more active and sacrificing service and soul-winning. The church needs to be faced with a big task, a heroic task, a task that is unselfish and challenging. It helps wonderfully to broaden the mind, to enlarge the sympathies and to kindle a love for service. And it helps to build up a sense of personal worth to make each one to know that he has a work to do, that upon his resources, energy and consecration is depending a really responsible job. And that is the plan of the Kingdom, the means of growth that God has ordained. It was so in Nehemiah's time, there was a real and definite work for every one to do—some to superintend the work, some to build, some to carry the burdens, and some to watch; all were to be ready to do something. And the whole task was big enough to test to the limit the faith of the whole band of workers. It is still true that the Lord tries the faith and calls forth the best in his disciples by the bigness of the task committed to his church, and the work is much the same as then. Under Nehemiah it was clearing away the rubbish, building the walls of Jerusalem and restoring the worship of Jehovah. Our work is to clear away the rubbish of sin, disobedience, selfishness and unbelief, and then to build upon the sure foundation, Jesus Christ, the mighty Zion, which is his church. Nehemiah and his faithful co-workers faced an almost forbidding undertaking, but they did not grow faint and give up because of the difficulties, but merely redoubled their energy and watchfulness with each succeeding hindrance. And that same energy, consecration and perseverance are needed today as we face the tremendous task of building Christ's kingdom in the hearts of men and causing his Gospel to be carried to the ends of the earth.

The church needs to be revived and set afresh to this task with a deepened spirit of sacrifice. We have enough of people who are willing to touch the fringes of service; what we need is the church stirred to the point of sacrifice. We need more of the attitude of the saint who, facing the prospect after years of service of going to be with Jesus, said, "I wish to live. Yonder I shall wear the crown, but here only I can bear the cross; and were it God's will, I would stay here to toil, sacrifice and suffer yet more for him, my dear Lord and Savior, who sacrificed and suffered so much for me." We really will never find the limit of the church nor prove the power of the Gospel until we are ready to enter his service with self-renouncing sacrifice. A heathen king who was wounded in battle, sent in his dying hours for his trusted servant and said to him, "Go, tell the dead I come." The soldier-servant, without a moment's hesitation, drew his sword and stabbed himself to the heart that he might go to the dead before his master and prepare the way for his coming. Oh, that we might have that spirit of service and of sacrifice to the King of kings! In his dying hour he also said, "Go, tell the dead I come." How many show a willingness to go?

Parents-Teachers and Cigarettes

It is encouraging to note the growing sentiment in America against the use of cigarettes, and especially on the part of children. We lost incalculably during the war in our fight against this form of vice, when the churches and the Y. M. C. A. join with the tobacco trust in popularizing the "coffin nail." But we are getting our senses again and in many and various ways are putting this pernicious habit under the ban where it belongs. One of the very potent agencies in America working to this end is the Parent-Teacher Association. The following significant resolutions were passed by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers at Atlanta, last May.

Whereas, we believe that the use of tobacco is detrimental to the physical, mental and moral welfare of our youth; and is a hindrance to character building; and,

Whereas, we find that the pernicious habit of cigarette smoking is becoming more and more common among the children of our public schools; and,

Whereas, in some states the laws regulating the sale of cigarettes to minors are not adequately enforced; and,

Whereas, there is need in some states for the enactment of such laws:

Therefore, be it resolved:—

That the National Congress of Parents and Teachers lends its force to the cause of eliminating throughout the United States the use of cigarettes by minors,

1st. By disseminating information among parents concerning the harm to their children in permitting them to acquire this habit; and,

2nd. By securing in our public schools the observation of the state laws requiring instruction regarding the evil effects of the use of narcotics; and,

3rd. By securing and enforcing necessary legislation prohibiting the sale and use of cigarettes by minors; and,

4th. By making an appeal to national advertisers to bar the use of cigarettes from their advertisements of articles other than cigarettes; and,

5th. By doing our utmost to have the parents set a higher, personal standard.

And be it further resolved:—That this congress make this a special work for the coming year for the general good of our youth.

Another interesting and influential voice on this evil is that of Herbert Hoover, who is known the world over as the friend of children. Such strong words as the following coming from a man of such recognizedly sane judgment ought to make the rank and file of thoughtless youthful users and indifferent parents stop and think where this cigarette smoking habit is leading us. He says:

"There is no agency in the world today that is so seriously affecting the health, education, efficiency and character of boys and girls as the cigarette habit, yet very little attention is paid to it. Nearly every delinquent boy is a cigarette smoker, which certainly has much to do with it. Cigarettes are a source of crime. To neglect crime at its source is a short-sighted policy unworthy of a nation of our intelligence."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The poem on first page is by an unknown author and is taken from "The Expositor."

The programs for the Indiana and Mid-West district conference is to meet at Warsaw, October 5 to 7 and the Mid-west gathering is to be at Carleton, Nebraska, the second week in October, 12 to 14.

Word has reached us from a member of the Masontown, Pennsylvania, congregation that Brother and Sister Herman Koontz, who recently took charge of that congregation, are finding their way into the hearts of the good people of that church. Brother and Sister Koontz both graduated from Ashland college this last June, and this is Rev. Koontz's first non-student pastorate.

We are publishing this week the "Findings" of the Carlock Conference on Peace referred to in last week's issue, and hope our church and conference leaders will find it interesting and suggestive.

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, makes an additional report on the Educational Day offering. While the gifts are not very numerous, yet they show continued interest on the part of a few churches. Brother Shively is anxious to have the many churches which have not yet reported their offerings to do so as promptly as possible. Your offering will do the college no good so long as it lays unused in your home treasury. Let us give every interest its just dues at the proper time.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland church, writes of the prospect of the new church year and also of the Layman's service which was staged on the date suggested by the National Conference. Brother Bame has reason to be encouraged over the success of the service, but considering the personnel of speakers nothing but a successful program would have been expected. And the offering was good. Brother Bame has been retained as pastor of the Ashland church for another year and the prospects seem bright for a successful year.

The Near East Relief continues to perform its work of mercy to the refugees of the Near East, and so continue to come before the American people for gifts. It is doing a noble work and should have the support of the benevolent people of America so long as the need is felt. Some have wondered how long this need would continue. Until the children who were salvaged from Syria and other war stricken lands are able to care for themselves. Recently because of war conditions affecting the growing of crops in Syria, the Near East Relief was unable to purchase sufficient supplies for its orphanages locally, and has therefore been obligated to increase its shipment of flour from America by almost a million pounds.

With the view that the time to build a lasting spirit of world peace is to begin with the children, a movement headed by Mrs. Henry W. Peabody of New York, purposes to encourage the children of America to send Doll Messengers of Friendship to Japan, a proposal which is receiving the enthusiastic support of leaders from all parts of the country. By the making of dolls on the part of American children and sending them to Japan there will be built up a bond of sympathy and friendship in the child mind of both nations. The children can be educated in the ways of peace much more easily than adults, and the only way that we as Christians can secure world peace is to establish the spirit of love and of peace in the hearts of our own people.

President Jacobs in his College news informs us that the director of the local Ashland county and city campaign for College Endowment is on the field and making plans for the launching of the drive. Great expectations are being entertained for the success of this campaign, and with the fine way in which the church is taking hold of its part of the task, the citizens of Ashland and vicinity will have reason for encouragement. They naturally and rightly expect the church to take the lead and to bear the major portion of the responsibility of financing our own church school, but once we show by our gifts that we are in real earnest, they will come forward in a fine way. The school never enjoyed such favor with the people of Ashland as it does now, and they are beginning to show their interest in very practical ways.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, writes briefly of his visit to Fort Wayne, Indiana, on the occasion of the dedication of the new mission church on August 22, when Dr. Beachler officiated and concerning which we have previously commented in these columns. Brother Gearhart believes a great work has already been accomplished in a material way by Brother J. L. Kimmel and his band of faithful workers, and that they are now ready to give serious attention to the spiritual upbuilding of the church. There is much encouragement held out for this field, which is but one of the promising points that should serve as an incentive for generous giving in behalf of home missions. Brother Gearhart is to give a stereopticon lecture on Home Missions at the Illiokota and Mid-west conferences.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Best Methods of Financing the Church

By Prof. L. W. Barber, Chairman Finance Committee of First Church, South Bend, Indiana

(A paper prepared for the Laymen's Program at General Conference, but the writer, being unable to be present, was requested to submit it for publication in The Evangelist. It is a very timely article, coming as it does when most of our churches are dealing with their annual financial problems.—Editor).

It would seem almost absurd to say that we have reached the period in the history of the church when we must close the doors because of improper methods of financing, yet one of the greatest problems of the modern church is how can we secure enough money to take care of the needs. The confidence and faith of the American people in the church is usually shown by the support they give it.

The problem of church finance I think stands next in importance to that of the saving of souls, and to offer anything like a perfect solution would be to entirely change the minds and hearts of men.

We recognize at once that the original plan of tithing by every member of the organization would effect a solution and I believe that first of all, the greatest factor in church financing is that of Christian living. A Christian should recognize at once his duty toward his church. Because of difference and indifference of people the burden of support falls upon the faithful few.

The church as an organization is slow to recognize that it must adopt modern standards of business and that it must be lifted from an old fashioned, slipshod method of doing business into a new realm and a new way. The work of the church is a business and as it has to deal with human beings it must deal by human methods. In fact the work of the church is so important that only the best methods of accounting and financing should be employed. The church can no longer depend upon the individual to do what he should do without placing upon him some feeling of responsibility. To depend upon adequate contributions from the church membership without that obligatory feeling upon the part of the individual to continue such support is folly, and to depend upon freely given pledges without some sort of a follow-up system means failure.

The church must hold the respect of her members as well as the community in which it operates much the same as a business organization must hold the respect of the public which supports it. To bring about this end a few suggestions may be made:

First, a little organization and common sense are necessary. This organization may begin with a well balanced financial committee, consisting of a financial secretary, treasurer and possibly the chairman of the membership committee. The chairman of this finance committee to be chosen by the moderator of the church. The members of this committee must be men with a purpose, congenial, broadminded, with an optimistic outlook. They must know something about people and social psychology. They must be men who are tactful in their dealings with individuals as well as compromising and sympathetic, and yet capable of retaining a businesslike sternness in presenting the financial needs of the church.

Accurate methods of keeping records must be adopted in order to give the proper credit to each contributing member. Every individual desires to do things which are going to be recognized by his church and he likes to feel that he is getting credit for what he does. Very few persons care to have their contributions made public, consequently the officials entrusted with these records should use the utmost care in keeping secret any information concerning a member's financial standing. The confidence of the people means power to the committee.

The financial committee may in turn appoint as many stewards or helpers as will be needed, each to have charge over a certain ward or district into which the territory has been divided. It must be made sure that these stewards are selected with care, as an untimely remark by them, or an untactful attempt may do more damage than the pastor and other workers can overcome in months. Each of these stewards are given a card for each of the members in his district upon which may be recorded the name and address and any other information of interest concerning the individual, or the visit made, the task being to solicit each person on his list for a pledge. The pledge cards should be filled in and properly signed by the one making the pledge, thereby creating more of a feeling of obligation toward the proper carrying out of the pledge. These cards are then held by the steward for further use, or may be turned in to the financial secretary for the proper record.

In case a member moves from one district into another, the card containing his name address and other information should be transferred to the steward into whose district the member has moved, thereby eliminating any chance of loss. The new steward may now make his new members a visit and help to make him feel that he is not leaving the church. The steward may do much in the way of making visits and carrying to the members of his district information concerning the financing of his church which he is entitled to know.

There will always be a few who have become "disgruntled and irritated" about something and these may refuse to make pledges, but in such cases the information may be placed in the hands of the finance committee, who in turn may effect a compromise or at least make an attempt to explain and smooth over the trouble. I have known of individuals even asking their names be dropped from the church records when they were approached by the steward in charge. In one particular case, the finance committee made a special visit and succeeded in "fixing things up" and secured a pledge.

Two or more visits in the homes of the members in each district should be made by the steward in charge, each year, in order that the committee may keep in touch with its contributors, but the second and third visits should not savor of finances. It should have for its purpose that of a social call. A few cases have been known by the writer, where members absolutely refused to pay their pledges except that the finance committee and their families call for it. The social problem of the church can be strengthened through financial efforts.

Statements of account may be sent to each individual occasionally, showing the amount pledged, the amount paid and the amount due. These statements should be sent to all contributors, whether they have paid up or not. On those statements which show a balance due, some such a catch phrase as, "Please," "May We?" or "Thank You" may be written. On those showing no balance due, such remarks as, "Thank You", "Good!" or "With our appreciation" may be written. The statement should always have the personal signature of the secretary.

The writer believes it a splendid plan to carefully budget the church finances. The departmental expenditures should be checked occasionally with the department head, as such a check will do much to encourage economy. The needs of the church building, such as badly needed repairs, wastes in the use of the church property, the proper regulation of heat, light and water may be noted by the finance committee and be brought to the attention of the officials under whose supervision such changes may be made. We must remember that there can be "leaks" in church finances as well as business finances, and that a "dollar saved is a dollar earned." God, to my notion, does not approve of wastes of his resources. The church membership have a right to expect that their gifts to their Lord shall be used as judiciously as it is possible. And again the everlasting cry for money is discouraging to the worker, whose earning power is very much discounted by the high cost of living. It would be very well to eliminate the need for the solicitation of funds by the pastor from the pulpit. It is the duty of the finance committee to see that the pastor is relieved of such embarrassment as his attention should be turned to the upbuilding of the spiritual and moral life of the church.

The church social may be a means of helping to raise money, but it is far better to arrange for a Father and Sons' or a Mother and Daughters' banquet and provisions be made for Family nights with charges to cover the expenses only, in order to promote the harmony and good feelings toward the church.

In the autumn season, a "Rabbit Feed," the rabbits to be provided by the men who may arrange themselves into hunting teams may be given, the various stories of the hunt to be given by the captain of each team at the banquet table as a part of the entertainment.

These events work up the spirit of fellowship and the material effects will always show up in the financial drive. The good feeling upon the part of the membership toward the church, must always precede a successful financial drive.

In soliciting finances, do not overlook the neighbor to your church. Mr. Business Man, who although he may not be a member of your church may be very sympathetic toward it. By all means give this neighbor an invitation to your Rabbit Feed. Neighborliness has induced more than one business man to donate twenty-five to a hundred dollars to the generous running expenses of the church, because he has learned that no other factor in society has contributed more to the welfare of his community than the church. As a satisfied customer is the best advertisement, just so a satisfied member is the best supporter.

In short the problem of finances almost disappear when you have a financial committee made up of working, live-wire Christians, who understand people and know the psychology of giving. My word is, capitalize your opportunities and tap all of your resources with judgment and understanding.

Now Christianity risks everything as to its acceptance or rejection with him who will put its proposals to the experimental test. Said Jesus to Thomas: "Reach hither thy finger and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing." So in principle he ever says: "Try me and see if I am not what I claim to be."—Henry C. Mabie.

MORE CONFERENCE APPRECIATIONS

Winona Fellowship

By Freeman Ankrum

While there are various noteworthy phases of the recent General Conference which convened at Winona, one that stands out prominent, is the spirit of fellowship which has been manifest on every hand, sometimes even to the inconvenience of the Moderator when attempting to bring a session to order.

When East meets West and North meets South, when Africa meets South America, who would desire a conference devoid of fellowship? Our meetings together as a whole come once a year, and friends, arm in arm, find help and cheer in the discussion of the trials and victories of the past year. Perhaps that which binds us just a little closer is the fact that the Grim Reaper has not yet hung his scythe in retirement from service and the opportunity for fellowship is grasped while time permits.

The recent Conference when contrasted with some that the writer recalls of past days has come a long ways in regard to fellowship. Though we may forget the wonderful addresses, we will not forget the spirit of the past Conference. The mark of the Brethren people wherever they may be found is that of fellowship, true and sincere, and may the day never come when the Spirit shall grow less.

Conference Bible Lectures

By N. Victor Leatherman

We were very favorably impressed with the type of Bible lectures presented at our General Conference this year. And not only with the type but the pleasing and straightforward manner in which they were presented. The unusual interest in these lectures may be accounted for when we consider that our people have a real hungering for Bible knowledge. And particularly is this true when an attempt is made to systematize that knowledge. Every Seminary and Bible school in the land seeks to systematize Bible knowledge for their students. Perhaps we have been too slow to do the same thing for all our people. The "Isms" of our day make great appeals to the people by presenting their systems of thought. Surely we will not condemn systematic knowledge nor systematic thinking because the "Isms" exercise this method of appeal. Criticism therefore should not be against the method; but, if any, against the content of the system. And in the instance of the Bible lectures of our Conference we were both pleased with the content and the method.

The British Empire and World Peace

By Dr. Edward Shillito

(An outstanding church leader of England, Dr. Shillito, spoke at the fourth annual Conference on International Relations From the Christian Viewpoint at Chautauqua under the auspices of the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of Churches. He has been literary superintendent of the London Missionary society since 1919 and is pastor of the Congregational Church at Buckhurst Hill, Sussex, England.

By request Dr. Shillito has put the significant parts of his address into two articles, of which this is the first.

He rightly puts the task of winning peace as a "struggle," "a fight," and so it is. We have learned however that permanent peace cannot be secured and guaranteed by means of carnal warfare. We tried "War to end war" and failed. Now we must keep in mind that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual. But it is certainly a struggle and a long and hard struggle it will be because politics and business are so selfish and unspiritual in their aims and methods. Moreover, when he says England must contribute its part to the world, he says by implication also that America must do her share. Prejudice and politics must be cast aside and Christian idealism allowed to sway us.—Editor.)

The peace of the world will not be won without struggle. In that struggle there will be need of all the distinctive gifts and powers which each nation has to offer. No one nation can avert war; but the nations in concert can do this great thing.

The British Commonwealth by its very history and character has something distinctive to give to the fight for peace. The question whether there is to be another great war or not, will not be settled by Great Britain alone; but if her influence is not cast upon the side of peace, something will be lacking in the struggle.

Great Britain's geographical position brings it into direct relations with most of the nations of the world. A glance at the map will make this clear. It is on the Atlantic and on the Pacific.

Peace can only come in the last resort through the right ordering of such relations. Reconciliation in the religious meaning of the word involves the restoration of true relationships between God and man. The reconciliation of the nations means simply the establishment of new relations of trust and goodwill, mutual helpfulness.

The British Empire has also an opportunity of making experiments in the fellowship of races. It is in itself a miniature league of nations. The winning of peace depends upon the discovery of ways in which peoples with different traditions may cooperate without sacrifice of their individuality. In the quest for this new way of life much depends upon the solution by the British Commonwealth of its problems. It may give and in a large measure is giving for its contribution to the peace of the nations, the evidence that the sacred traditions of a race may be preserved without war.

Wars in the modern world are more likely to arise from the struggle for natural resources, than from any desire for glory. The nations talk largely of honor but they are thinking of markets.

The British Empire has command of resources which may be the occasion for conflict, or for experiments in goodwill. This is true no less of other nations such as the United States. Much of the hope of peace depends upon the willingness of these nations to use in a just and large-minded way such natural resources.

There will be no enduring peace so long as nations—especially the rich and powerful nations—refuse to make sacrifices to win it. A student from the Orient said lately, "The nations of the West are civilized nationally. They are uncivilized internationally." It would show that this was no longer true if the great nations showed more evidently a conscience sensitive to the needs of the world. There have been many signs of such a conscience in the public action of Great Britain. To quicken this conscience more and more, and to awaken public opinion to the call of the world is one of the tasks of the Christian church.

The Endeavorer's Prayer Life

By Dyoll Belote

(This article was prepared for publication in the "Key-stone Endeavorer", the official publication of the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Union, and appeared in the March, 1926, issue of that paper. The writer, Brother Dyoll Belote, holds the position of Quiet Hour superintendent in the Pennsylvania C. E. Union.)

It is to be feared that too many times the members of the Christian Endeavor societies get the impression that it is the wonderful organization of the Endeavor movement that keeps it the power it has been and still is. We have caught the spirit of the age, which is to make much of machinery and methods, and forget that God is more interested in and needs MEN. Of organizations and enterprises we have an over-supply; but of men whom the Holy Spirit can use we have a scarcity.

It appeals to me that the Christian Endeavor pledge sets forth the need of prayer in the life of the Endeavorer when it is made a part of the requirements of the pledge that we shall pray and read the Bible every day. And let it be added that it is the endeavorers who are most faithful in the observance of this part of the pledge who are enabled to do most for themselves in the development of Christian character, and at the same time be of largest service to others and to their society.

"The object of prevailing prayer is to join with God in getting his will done, in our lives and in the world." From this definition it is evident that prayer does not merely consist in coaxing God to do things for us, but rather to get ourselves into such condition that God can use us and bless us. This reminds us also that Jesus himself always conditioned his prayers with the petition, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." Simplicity, sincerity, earnestness and reverence were distinguishing characteristics of the Master's petitions to the Father, and if we would find audience with the Father, and answer to our petitions we, too, must come thus.

Someone has said that "The highest form of prayer is communion, bringing us into fellowship with God and with each other." It may as truly be said that "The highest form of communion is to be found in prayer." The ultimate of the aspirations of the human heart is to know God. And we can best realize that highest aspiration through communion with God in prayer. Would any maiden believe her lover in earnest if he was not ever desirous of being in her presence, no matter how eloquent his assertions of devotion? Would any lover believe his loved one sincere if she seemed to find more enjoyment with others than with him? Should we expect God to be any less reasonable in his judgment of our sincerity in our expressions of fidelity to him when we are so infrequently found seeking his fellowship?

There is a solemn statement in the Word that should lead to an earnest searching of the heart. It is "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." Sin harbored in the heart will build a wall between us and God, through which the sound of a prayer cannot pass, and this may explain why our prayers lack power. There may be that in our hearts, in our homes, in our business or our social life, which God condemns but we retain. An injured and grieved Lord cannot answer the petitions of an insincere and inconsistent supplicant.

Thomas Goodwin, Oliver Cromwell's chaplain said, "God stands sometimes upon such a number of voices and one voice casts it, as when he named ten righteous persons to save Sodom." We can never know how much our prayers are needed to move the heart and hand of God. The Word tells us that "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much in its working." And so, likewise, does the feeblest petition of the weakest of God's children.

We must not forget the retroactive power of prayer. Someone has said that "It is prayer-force that makes saints. Holy characters are formed by the power of real praying. The more of true saints, the more of praying; the more of praying, the more of true saints." For no individual can exercise in the practice of prayer who is not made better thereby. We can not draw near to the Divine presence without being made better; we cannot petition the Father for our enemies and those who despitefully use us without being drawn to forgiveness of the wrong-doing and the trespasser.

Personally, I am convinced that if the prayer-life of the endeavorer is right the rest of his Christian experience will be satisfactory and helpful. In prayer we draw nigh to God, and if "in full assurance of faith" then we receive the things we ask for. It is, then, a matter of motive and manner of our praying that determines its power. Let us learn to pray as the writer of these verses has suggested:

How Do We Pray?

"Too often when God's children pray,
"Hear, Lord; thy servant speaketh."
Nay, rather let me humbly ask:
"Do thou for me appoint the task;
Thy way thy servant seeketh."

"Oh, let me plainly hear thy voice,
And make thy will my only choice;
'Tis that alone that cheereth.
Let me be quiet 'neath thy hand,
That I may hear and understand.
Speak, Lord; Thy servant heareth."

Paul has set forth the insistence upon constancy in prayer in his admonition to the Philippian brethren when he writes, "Praying always with all prayer . . . watching thereunto with all perseverance." Most beautifully is the thought set forth in these words:

"If we with earnest effort could succeed
To make our life one long connected prayer,
As lives of some perhaps have been and are;

If, never leaving thee, we had no need
Our wandering spirits back again to lead
Into thy presence, but continued there,
Like angels standing on the highest stair
Of the sapphire throne, this were to pray indeed.

"Why, therefore should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or worthless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy, and strength, and courage are with thee?"

"Lord teach us how to pray," and to exercise in this joyous privilege.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Great Work of the Church

By W. I. Duker

(Closing Sermon of General Conference, preached on Sunday night, August 29, 1926)

TEXT: When I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickedness of Samaria: for they commit falsehood and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers spoileth without. Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people. Ephraim is a cake not turned. Strangers have devoured his strength and he knoweth it not: Yea, gray hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth it not." Hosea 7:1, 8, 9.

The perplexing problem of healing a nation of her sin was before the Great God and the solution was made more difficult by the conduct of certain tribes. The sin of Israel was not so much a matter of universal departure but rather that of "spot" sin. The trouble with these two tribes was like unto a man whose house was invaded by robbers without and within. Like a cake baked upon one side only. Like a man whose strength has departed without his knowledge. Like unto a man whose head has upon it, here and there, a gray hair, yet to him his hair is still "coal" black.

Rather a vivid description of a nation that will not be healed. A nation in which the good must suffer with the bad. Tribes must be a part of a "falling" nation through no fault of their own but rather due to the sins of sister tribes.

What is the great work of the church today? Is it that its individuals must just save their own souls? Then why the church, why the organization? The only hope for the old world today lies in the efforts of the church. You may insist that the world will eventually be lost, but does that limit us in our effort to save? We must work on as though "every house will be a house of prayer and every knee will bow to the Great God above. "Let us with renewed vigor, reconsecrate ourselves to the saving of the world through the church.

In our task of saving the world, while we must not limit ourselves to it alone, we must give serious thought to our beloved America. America is undoubtedly a nation "half turned." The thief spoileth within and without. Here and there are gray hairs of old age and decay, yet we are acting as though we were but a child. Our strength is being rapidly devoured by strangers in the land. How like Israel of old is America of today!

It shall not be our purpose in this, the last note of the Conference to indicate or suggest that America is falling. We do not wish to say to you that soon the stars and stripes will be pulled down and discarded. What we hope to do, is rather to analyze the growth and downfall of a nation and look for similar evidences of either in America today.

What is, and what has always been, the first step in the decline of a nation? It is a strange but indisputable fact that our first sins are not those of an overt act but of an omission of duty. All we have to do to commit our first sin is just to do nothing. The sin of transgression always follows the sin of omission. All a man needs to do to be lost is just to do nothing. So the first sin or step in the decline of a nation is the sin of forgetting God!

We speak of the sin of forgetting God as the sin of Idolatry. The sin of idolatry lies not in the worship of wood and stone but in forgetting God. One needs not to strike God in the face and spit upon him as did people in the days of his crucifixion, all we need to do to bring upon us his condemnation is just to forget him.

Has America forgotten God? Has she, like Israel of old, gray hairs upon her and "knoweth it not"? We leave with you, in the secret decisions of your own heart this sober question. Has America taken the first step in the "Decline of a nation?"

Now may we pass on to the second step in the decline of a nation. The second step has always been IMMORALITY. No nation has ever fallen else immorality was a national sin. Looking back upon Rome and Greece of yesterday and we at once see the truth of this statement. Many nations have fallen in the past and not one but that immorality was a common sin.

We are speaking of the sin of a nation. Not alone the sin of an individual. When the nation as such looks upon immorality with an open face, allows its practice to go on without censure, encourages its continuance by pulpit and press, then the sin has gone beyond the individual and has become the sin of the nation.

Now again, brethren, we are not indicting America, but we are asking that you give serious attention to this second step in a nation's decline. If in your mind America is guilty of immorality then in your conclusions America has taken the second step in her decline. If she has taken the second step she is near her fall, for in the analysis of decline there have been but three steps.

Now as we approach the end we hear you ask anxiously, "What is the last step? What has been the step that has brought destruction to mighty nations in the past?" The third step has, my friends, always been the step of LUXURY AND EXTRAVAGANCE IN NATIONAL LIFE AND GOVERNMENT.

The last picture is like unto the picture of "Belshazzar and a thousand of his lords." Here we see the last step in a nation's decline. While goblets are held high and merriment is loud and wild, suddenly the hand is seen upon the wall and the nation's doom is apparent.

Has America reached this stage? Is this today an age of luxury? Are we a nation of wasters? You must say, for this is not a sermon of conclusions of the preacher to be thrust down the throats of a reluctant audience. Here are signs of the past, do they compare favorably with the present or are we safely past the dangers of national decline? The least we may say is that sober thinking and rational acting should characterize the American Christian of today.

The Church

Has there ever been a decline of the church? Has her progress been one steady growth or would a graph of her growth indicate that at times she has shown a decline? There can be no doubt when we survey the growth of the church but there have been times when her light was almost gone. There have been times when those who have loved the church have been perplexed to know whether it was a "rising or a setting sun" that has been seen in the distance. Yes, the church has often shown many signs of a decline.

What then has been the first step in the church's decline? How may we be able to determine the danger signals as we go along? The first step that we have always found before the line of the church's progress shows a downward plunge has been the step of UNSOUND DOCTRINE.

This is a rather difficult step to discuss. Let us approach it from the positive side. There have always been the Three R's in education so also have there always been the Three R's in the doctrine of the church. To avoid unsound doctrine may we stay close to the Three R's.

Here they are: The RUIN in the Fall; Redemption through Christ; Regeneration.

Let us not, at this time forget that this is not a discussion of Doctrine. We are making no attempt to outline the things the church should and should not espouse. We are simply saying that to avoid the first step in the decline of the church we must avoid the step of "Unsound Doctrine."

Now as we approach the second step in the decline of the church we are rather conscious of the reaction of many of our people who are saying, "My, how old fashioned are his conclusions." Yes brethren, some of the fundamental teachings of the church are "old fashioned." That is the trouble. But here we are.

The second step in the decline of the church is found in "CONFORMITY TO THE WORLD." It is altogether possible that this matter has been rather indefinite in your mind in the past, and that often you have misunderstood its meaning. Nevertheless the world and the church cannot be upon friendly terms and the church suffer no evil. Clearly must the line of demarcation between the world and the church be drawn. There can be no interchange of relationships. Every act of the individual must be determined by his choice of either the world or the church. This is surely not a matter of dress and form but entirely a matter of conduct. But let that church not pass lightly upon the seriousness of her state when in her mind the world is just a happy field lying only around the corner. A field into which her children may wander to and fro and suffer no harm. The world is the field but one in which infinite care must be taken by all who work therein.

Now, brethren, after our doctrine has lost its ring of sincerity and worth, after the church and the world have walked down life's highway together, now comes the end, not of the church but of its present prosperity. What is the third and last step in the decline of the church? Here it is and possibly you may be shocked by the realization that into your own life may be found the evidences of this step. The third step is in the NEGLECT OF GOD'S ORDINANCES. It is not our purpose at this time to be at all technical in our discussion. Neither do we attempt to split hairs and differentiate between ordinances and good works. There is a place for that discussion but evidently this is not neither the time nor the place. But when the church of God neglects her ordinances she is in mighty bad state. We are but men and as such we need the teaching benefits of ordinances. We cannot read the mind of God without them. To throw away the ordinances is to throw away the Translation of the will of God. The church without her ordinances is like unto a man without his text book. And now, lest we are in doubt as to the great sign-posts along the way, may we point out the two great ordinances of God. Here they are, BAPTISM AND THE EUCHARIST. Pause just a moment brother, this is not all inclusive, this is not for the sake of discussion, but just a frank statement that in the great ordinances of the church which she must zealously guard these two stand paramount. The individual may neglect them and he alone suffer but when the church of Jesus Christ regards them lightly she is doomed.

The Church's Great Business

There has always been a great need for clear and serious thinking. But in this present day of turmoil and disturbances the need has become increasingly great. The increasingly many voices of men make it difficult to hear the "still small voice" of the spirit of Christ. Many of us are lost today. We are confused in our thinking and we begin

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

SEEKING TO KNOW JESUS—Matt. 11:1-6.

Who comes to God an inch, through doubtings dim,
In blazing light God will advance a mile to him.
—Robia.

TUESDAY

UNPRETENTIOUS SERVICE—Matt. 6:1-5.

As though in act unwearied, secret still,
As in some solitude the summer rill
Refreshes, where it winds, the faded green,
And cheers the drooping flowers, itself unseen.

THURSDAY

TO FOLLOW JESUS—Matt. 19:16-22.

"Who fain would follow Jesus,
The Master's life must heed;
Must spend himself for others,
And hear what others plead;
Must lift the little children
In arms of blessing up,
And oft to sorrow's pallid lip
Hold sweet compassion up."

FRIDAY

WHAT GOD REQUIRES—Exod. 20:1-8.

Almighty God! direct us
To keep thy perfect Law!
O blessed Savior, help us
Nearer to thee to draw!
Let Sinai's thunders aid us
To guard our feet from sin;
And Calvary's light to inspire us
The love of God to win.

—John Hay.

SATURDAY

SAFETY IN JEHOVAH—Psalm 91:1-7.

Angels of Life and Death alike are his;
Without his leave they pass no threshold o'er,
Who, then, would wish or dare, believing this,
Against his messenger to shut the door?

—Longfellow.

SUNDAY

THE HIGHER SERVICE—Phil. 3:12-16.

Go up and on! thy day well done,
Its morning promise well fulfilled,
Arise to triumphs yet unwon,
To holier tasks that God has willed.

—Whittier.

to wander about. Here we go, one in one direction and another elsewhere. Like sheep without a master. Each one searching for a feeding place for himself. Sometimes as we see men wander about we are distressed beyond measure and are tempted to lose our hold upon Christ and the church. But amid the confusion of the day two things stand out clearly and vividly against the sky of hope.

The first truth is that, THE AMERICAN PEOPLE MUST TAKE AND PLAY A GREAT PART IN THE SAVING OF THE WORLD. Brethren, we cannot be blind to the fact that God has always had as one of his choice plans the saving of the world by a nation. If God has his "people" to "carry on" then his plans may be made perfect. "A nation for God" is a slogan that undoubtedly is hanging upon the walls of heaven as a picture of gold in a silver frame. What a wonderful gift to make to the loving Father, "a nation for Christ!"

Perchance we may now be saying, "Yes, but that will never be!" Perhaps not. We are not discussing what will be but rather what God has planned. Ofttimes the plans of God are offset by the sins of men. God has planned that "All" should be saved but the evil deeds of many prevent his plan from coming to a full fruition. These are the plans of God, how far are they being carried out?

The second Truth standing out against the sky of hope is that IF AMERICA IS TO RENDER THIS SERVICE TO HUMANITY SHE HERSELF MUST BE CHRISTIANIZED! We cannot render service to another else we first are in tune with the infinite God. No nation can long endure else she is founded and continues to function upon the fundamental principles of Almighty God. "For there is no power but of God, the powers that be are ordained of God." Romans 13:2. We often speak of "mighty nations, powerful and strong." America's only strength lies in her Christianity. If this fails she is doomed. We may speak of her statesmen, her mighty warriors and her wealth. All this is but straw ready for the match of hate else these same men are warriors for Christ. When America is ready to honor Christ rather than man, when she is ready to strengthen her church rather than her army, then may she hope to be able to fly aloft the Stars and Stripes as a nation "Who forgot not her God." America must be Christianized! This is the will of Almighty God. What will you, what are you doing about it?

Now after a rather lengthy approach may we come to our conclusion? Here we are. IF AMERICA IS TO BE CHRISTIANIZED IT MUST BE DONE BY THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST. No other power under heaven may approach the task. This is the church's GREAT BUSINESS. We do not say that there are not other subsidiary agencies. But there is but one Church of Jesus Christ. All else is unimportant in comparison. America and the world must awaken to this fact or be lost. Other agencies may be helpful but the Church of Jesus Christ needs but little help outside of herself. She has been founded and created by the recognition of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. What else is necessary? May the walls, Oh Warrior, hold aloft the flag of King Emmanuel. Oh Christian, Here is your task, here is your salvation.

In closing this conference may we close in hope, hoping to meet again. Hoping that life's problems may come to a happy ending. Trusting in Almighty God. Believing that he, who in his All-wise providence made man in his own image, will care for him and his problems. Recognizing the fact that much lies yet far afield. There is much yet to learn. We see now as through a glass darkly, trusting that some time we may know as we are known, and see face to face. May we think with Mary Riley Smith on "Some-time":

Sometime when all life's lessons have been learned
And suns and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned.
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,

As stars shine most in deepest tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans are right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.
And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me
How, when we called, he heeded not our cry,
Because his wisdom to the end could see.
And e'en as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.
And if sometimes commingled with life's wine
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out the potion for our lips to drink;
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so.
But wear your sorrow with obedient Grace.
And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend,
And that sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife
And for each mystery find a key.
But not today. Then be content poor heart:
God's plans like lilies pure and white unfold,
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if through patient toil we reach the land,
Where tired feet with sandals loosed may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand
I think that we shall say, "God knew the best!"
Elkhart, Indiana.

Root and Branches

Most people will agree that one quite ordinary wife is better than a dozen remarkable ones, and probably that twelve children fairly normal make a happier outfit than one of brilliance. Similarly a quite commonplace chapel to which you give yourself is worth more than a dozen Westminster Abbeys, chapels, or cathedrals that you drop into; and if you have reinforced it with a dozen new members, you are more likely still to believe in it. A man should never, apart from a very clear call of God, leave the church or chapel of his fathers till he has put some work into it. Whatever he makes of it, it has done a good deal for him; and it is reckoned honest to pay your debts before you flit. It is the root that tells; a tree that is all branches and no root is not often fruitful. Christmas trees may look gay with candles, but it is non sua poma. And here I am not guessing, for I have tried it both ways, and I find a growing happiness in association with a denomination and a church to which, in conventional phrase, "I belong."

But it is more than conventional. It is something to belong to a denomination and to a church, with a local habitation and a name, with the association of generations and of friendships; to be part of the belongings, the property, of your associates, a yokefellow, available for their needs and for their happiness. It teaches you far more than you gain from casual wanderings, and the broad-minded charity that understands nothing in particular, and works at nothing at all. This is an age of specialists, and if some plead for the open heart it must not be to the exclusion of the concentrated brain. A Christian at large can never be so useful as one in harness, however superior he feels in his freedom.

Israel Journeying Towards Canaan

Lesson—Numbers 10:11-36.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 34:1-8.

Golden Text—Come thou with us, and we will do thee good. Numbers 10:29.

This, the first lesson of the fourth quarter, is the beginning of the second quarter in our study of the "Early Leaders of Israel", quarter taking us from Moses to Samuel. It has proven a most valuable course thus far and this second quarter promises fully as much as the last. When we have finished this series, these noble characters of God should be very much more real and meaningful, and their contribution to things spiritual should be much better understood.

What Had Been Accomplished

What had been accomplished for Israel up to this time? The people left Egypt a mere crowd of fugitive slaves, with only the rudiments of national organization and the dimmest religious ideas. But the interval had effected an immense change. They had now become an organized people, with laws, a constitution or covenant, a priesthood, a religious ritual, and a house of worship; and with a political and military organization, under judges and officers placed over greater or smaller divisions, and a general council of 70 elders, which the rabbis believe was the origin of the Sanhedrin.

Numbers

According to the census of Numbers 1 and 2, there were 603,550 men 20 years old and upward, besides the 22,273 Levites. This would naturally imply about 2,000,000 in all. But it is perfectly possible that this enumeration by "thousands" may have been technical, just as we count an army. A regiment is supposed to have 1,000 men, and an army of 60 regiments would be supposed to have in it about 60,000 men, while the fact might be that the regiments were so far from full that the number in the army might be only half that number.

Hobab, Son of Reuel

There is some ambiguity with regard to the Hobab who is named in these verses. He was certainly the son of Reuel, and we have read in earlier lessons that Reuel was the father-in-law of Moses, which would make Hobab his brother-in-law. But the laws of Hebrew syntax in verse 29 of the present lesson would make Hobab, not Reuel, the father-in-law of Moses. There are some who consider that Hobab, Jethro, and Reuel were all names for the one man, the father of Moses' wife, Zipporah. But it does not seem that Moses would have asked so old a man as Jethro to act as his guide to Canaan; Jethro was said in an earlier passage to have returned home before this (Exod. 18:27); and it is possible that the word may be merely a general one meaning "relative by marriage" and should not be considered more definitely than "son" which often means a grandson, and sometimes even a nephew or other relative.

Come with Us

"Joseph Parker brings out in a striking way the suggestion that it is a glorious thing to be living such a life that you can honestly invite another man to come with you. It is a good question to put to ourselves: Can we honestly invite men to join us in our life-march? Can we honestly, with the full consent of judgment, conscience, and experience, invite men to join us in the way we have determined to take? If not, do not let us add the murder of souls to our other sins. Do not let us, merely for the sake of companion-

Selfishness

I sit in the center of myself
And weave busy thoughts,
Like a black spider making her web.
I am so intent on my own spinning
I can see nothing but the whirling of my own mind.

If I could stop a moment and be still,
I might take note of the gleaming dewdrops
God hangs over all the gossamer of thought,
His tremendous periods;
I might see also the tapestry of other spiders
Lying in gauzy freshness
Everywhere on the grass of imagination.
If I could get straight away
From the center of my own weaving
And kneel down,
I might indeed perceive God himself.
But the little shuttles of thought
Fly so fast, so fast,
I am deafened by their whirl.
Entangled in my own web,
And choked by the ephemera of self.

ship, involve in ruin innocent men."—Banks.
"You are not sure about the supreme claims over your life that Christ makes; but have you no opinion about the great purposes he seeks to accomplish in the world, the high ends he seeks to serve? As you see Christ go to the world's redemption, have you never thrilled to the tacit appeal to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty? You who may be instead of eyes, can you hold back ingloriously?"

Christ Our Light and Guide

Jesus Christ, as revealed in the Word of God, is our pillar of cloud and fire. He has come to be the light of the world. He teaches us the way to heaven, and shows the way by having walked in it. He is wise and strong, knowing all things present, past, and future, for he is divine. He shines through the Word, giving light in the darkness. He abides upon his church, and in the temple of each loving heart. He leads us by his providence, by his Spirit, by the principles of his Word, by his example. All who follow him will reach the Promised Land.

Following God's Guidance

"The ark that went before the Israelite in the desert gave him two things—safety and guidance. These same two things come to the Christian out of his following of Christ. He has both security and progress. He is at once kept from danger and led on to ever greater things."—Phillips Brooks.

Prompt Obedience

Note the Promptness of the Obedience to the command of God as shown by the pillar of cloud during these journeyings. "Whosoever and for whatsoever the signal was given, the men were ready. In the night, after they had their tents pitched for a long period, when only the watchers' eyes were open, the pillar lifts, and in an instant the alarm is given and all the camp is in a bustle. That is what we have to set before us as the type of our lives. We are to be as ready for every indication of God's will as they were. The peace and blessedness of our lives largely depend on our being eager to obey, and therefore quick to perceive, the slightest sign of motion in the resting, or of rest in the moving, pillar which regulates our march and our encamping."—Alexander MacLaren.

There is a little poem in which we are compared to an engineer on a steamship down deep in the vessel where he cannot see the way, but he obeys the orders of the pilot above, who does see. So we, ignorant of the future and its dangers, may yet follow him who knows all and guides safely.

PRAYER

O Lord make us strong, we entreat thee, manly and womanly determined that by thy help nothing in the life thou hast given us or on the earth which is subject to thy laws shall make us cower or cringe or deny that good is good and sin is sin. Kindle in us a flame of gratitude to the love that won and holds us, the love of Christ our Lord, which shall burn out of our hearts all cowardice and make us the eternal lovers of that good will which thou thyself hast shown toward us. Let there be no such thing as fear of what man can do in us, that we may go upon our way with steadfast hearts rejoicing in thy love and the upholding of thy might. And let all whom we love be sharers in this joy and confidence and courage. In the name of Christ. Amen.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

The girl who keeps on searching for happiness will inevitably find it—that is, if she goes in the right direction, in the paths marked out by God. But if she starts in the wrong direction, along the way of pride and selfishness, the farther she goes the greater her distance from the goal.—Selected.

Reorganization. When, Why, and How Should a Society Reorganize Its Ranks?

By Rev. Francis E. Clark

President of the World's Christian Endeavor Union

Many Endeavorers shrink from the word "reorganization" as though it involved confession of failure in the past, whereas it may mean, and should always mean, a forward step in making a society more effective, more interesting, and more useful in all its services for God.

Of course I am not advocating reorganization where it is not needed, and each society must judge of its own condition and of its own needs. But I am thoroughly convinced that there are some societies for which it would be an advance step of the utmost importance.

Reorganization of a Christian Endeavor society does not mean, usually, any very drastic steps. The society does not need to die, though in some cases even this is advisable, if the death is followed by an immediate resurrection with new power and with a new spirit of prayer and service.

Reorganization usually means elimination of hindering elements. If members have come into your society not fully understanding the obligations that they have undertaken, and apparently without any purpose of fulfilling these, their elimination would often be the happiest thing for the society and the best treatment by all odds for the careless member if the elimination is done wisely and kindly. It is like an operation that saves a life.

Helping Them Back

Of course the first effort should be quietly and unostentatiously to help the unfaithful members back into the ranks of those who mean what they say and say what they mean when they take the pledge, "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do." Let the members know that your society takes this pledge very seriously; it means all that it says. There is nothing impossible about it, but at the same time it is no wishy-washy half-promise that involves no serious obligation.

To make this plain to any careless member is naturally the duty of the lookout committee; but in performing it they may enlist the help of the pastor or of some other wise older person, to show the unfaithful what Christian Endeavor really means.

If, however, these members remain careless and indifferent, if no kindly advice moves their hearts to better things, then I would as a last resort drop their names from the roll. One great value of the monthly roll-call meeting is that it shows who are careless and indifferent, and who are not. The provision can be carried out that is found in the usual constitution, namely that, if active members are absent from three successive monthly roll-call or consecration meetings without excuse, their names shall be dropped. But sometimes, to avoid being dropped the careless member will attend just often enough to keep his name on the society's list, while at

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for October 3.)

What Plans Hae We for Our Society. I Cor. 15:58

In our Bible verses for this week we have many different kinds of plans suggested that we can follow in our Junior Christian Endeavor work. We have talked about almost all of these in our other lessons. Do you boys and girls do such Sunshine work as taking flowers and toys and books to sick people? I think that it would be nice for the different Juniors in your society to take turns at being on the Sunshine Committee and see which ones can help the most people who are sick or unhappy or so busy that they need the help of some one.

I once heard the story of a little girl who was a Sunshine girl and who did some of the things that it would be nice for your Sunshine Committee to do. I think that you would like the story, so I am going to tell it to you. It is written by Elizabeth Rosser.

"A little maid sat in a high-backed pew,
And raised to the pulpit her eyes of blue;
And the prayers were long, and the sermon grand,

And oh, it was hard to understand!
But the beautiful text sank deep in her heart,

Which the preacher made of his sermon a part:

"Silver and gold have I none," read he
"But such as I have give I to thee."

And the good old pastor looked down and smiled

At the earnest gaze of the little child.

"The dear little maid carried home the word
Determined to use it as chance might afford.
She saw her mother unceasingly

Toil for the needs of the family.

So she cheerfully helped the whole day thru
And did with her might what her hands found to do.

"Silver and gold have I none," said she,
"But such as I have give I to thee."

"On her way to school at early morn
She plucked the flowers by the wayside born;
"My teacher is often tired, I know,
For we're sometimes naughty and sometimes slow;

Perhaps these will help to lighten the task,"
And she laid the flowers on the teacher's desk.

"Silver and gold have I none," said she,
"But such as I have give I to thee."

And the teacher looked up and smiled,
As she took the gift of the little child.

"As she played with her sisters on the grass
She saw a dusty traveler pass.

"Poor man," she said. "He is tired, I think, I'll go and get him a nice cool drink."

"Silver and gold have I none," said she,
"But such as I have give I to thee."

And the thirsty, dusty traveler smiled
As he took the gift from the little child.

"Sweet and innocent, clad in white,
She knelt by her little bed that night.
With a childish trust she longed to bring
Some gift to her Savior and her King.

"So much from thee every day I receive;
But my heart is all I have to give.

"Silver and gold have I none," said she,
"But such as I have give I to thee."

The Missionary Enterprise in Relation to World Peace

By Katharine Scherer Cronk, Philadelphia

Excerpts from an address delivered at the annual meeting of the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America, in Atlantic City, January, 1926.

The beginning of the missionary enterprise was the coming of Christ to earth. Of such importance is the relation of the missionary enterprise to world peace that of the fourteen words recorded in the message of the angels heralding the coming of the first missionary eight are devoted to world peace. Next to "Glory to God in the highest" stand "peace on earth, good will toward men."

In the face of this announcement made by the angels of heaven, dare we claim today that war and peace are matters for the consideration of other organizations and conventions but not for the church and her missionary councils?

After thousands of years of war, hatred and bloodshed throughout Old Testament days came the angels' song of peace, love and disarmament. The Lord Christ sent out his disciples not only to a nation-wide but to a world-wide bloodless conquest.

Scoffers today, as in the past, charge that "The church is impotent. What has the church done?"

"Eyes have they, but they see not." Darwin also scoffed in his day until he saw what the church was accomplishing through missions. Then he testified, "The lesson of the missionary is the magician's wand," and accepted with appreciation an invitation to honorary membership in the South American Missionary Society.

Among the many accomplishments of the missionary enterprise for world peace let us consider six.

1. It has helped to make the world a neighborhood. It's an old story for speakers nowadays to draw from their pockets a daily paper published in some Oriental city and show us the football score of American colleges, the latest market quotations from New York, and even "Jiggs and Maggie." Who pioneered the way for world neighborliness? Some time ago the "London Times" conceded, "We owe it to the missionaries that the whole region of South Africa has been opened up."

Similar statements have been made regarding other countries by voices as far from domination by a board of missionary direction as is the "Times."

2. The Missionary enterprise has played an important part in establishing the schools and making the textbooks of the world. Domingo Sacramento, elected President of the Republic of Argentina while he was representing his country at Washington, went back with the slogan:

"THE MORE SCHOOLS THE FEWER REVOLUTIONS."

And straightway appointed a missionary as his Minister of Education.

Ziegenbalg, Schwartz and Carey in India,

Moffat and Livingstone in Africa; Gale in Korea and Hepburn in Japan, helped to reduce to writing the languages of the nations, and together with their pupils helped to make the textbooks of the world.

3. The missionary enterprise has helped to establish the world's business relationships. Sir W. Mackworth Young, returning to Great Britain after his Lieutenant Governorship of the Punjab testified: "As a business man, I am prepared to say that the work which has been done by missionary agency in India exceeds in importance all that has been done (and much has been done), by the British Government in India since its commencement.

4. The missionary enterprise has helped to establish diplomatic relations and to make peace programs. In more than one country missionaries have been in the receiving line when the first officially appointed government representatives arrived.

The testimony of three prominent diplomats is to the point. Maitland, when governor of Cape Colony, said:

"I have always relied more upon the labors of missionaries for the peaceful government of the natives than upon the presence of British troops."

General Crowder: "Missionaries can do more than diplomats or business men to maintain international peace and promote harmonious relationships between the United States and the Far East."

General Charles Warren, when governor of Natal: "For the preservation of peace between colonists and natives one missionary is worth a battalion of soldiers."

America's first treaty with China was negotiated in 1844 by the Hon. Caleb Cushing and Dr. Peter Parker, pioneer medical missionary.

Missionaries have been the victims rather than the cause of uprisings due to the unwarranted aggression of the countries they represented.

John W. Barrett, former United States Minister to Siam, declared that, during his five years of service, one hundred and fifteen missionaries gave him less trouble than fifteen business men.

5. The missionary enterprise has established friendships not only among nations but also among individuals. Here lies one of the most active and effective means of world peace. Those first friendships between nationals of different countries were brought about in almost every instance by missionaries.

6. The missionary enterprise has made known throughout the world Jesus Christ, the only hope for a world of peace and good will.

Thus viewing the relationship of the missionary enterprise to world peace through the perspective of history we recognize its value.

With "hats off to the past" there comes a call for "coats off to the future."

Five suggestions for ways of working are offered:

1. First of all we must know. Even before we can pray intelligently we must know. "Knowledge is power."

A brilliant young student said recently: "The trouble with the missionary women is that most of them read nothing, know nothing and talk nothing except their own specific work."

All over our land there should be study classes and discussion groups using such books as "On Earth Peace."

2. We should pray. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." Prayer for world peace should be made in every missionary group and by every missionary worker. At this time of crisis Boards issuing Prayer Calendars might well sound the call for daily prayer for peace.

3. We should vote. The old slogan "Vote as you pray," which originally carried only masculine implication, suggests also feminine responsibility in our day. Many of us women have a feeling of modest virtue if we shrink from the polls. The indifferent good citizen is a menace. We cannot be honest and fair with ourselves and with the world if we sit in comfortable and sheltered rocking chairs while agencies of evil are electing to responsible office men and women who will make and further policies of unrighteousness and injustice which will lead to hatred and bloodshed. We have no right to glory in the missionary achievements of the past, in a present which tolerates unrighteous aggression and forces on another nation harmful narcotics, unless we are doing everything in our power to right the wrongs.

4. We should practice friendship. No binding friendship of legislation can be passed by congresses and parliaments, but even as collectively we meet the international opportunity in our cosmopolitan cities through International Houses, so individually there must be established an international house in our hearts. "Thou shalt make unto thee friends of other nations and be to them a friend" is an unwritten code of a warless world.

Notwithstanding all the really good literature published by our missionary agencies, there is enough of misinterpretation and misrepresentation and "superiority complex" on our shelves to incite a world war.

No publications should be countenanced which are not fair and friendly. An unvarying requirement in missionary literature should be careful criticism before publication by missionaries and nationals of the countries dealt with.

"On Earth Peace" is one result of the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, held in Washington, D. C., in January, 1925. Price 30 cents. Order from Miss May H. Leavis, P. O. Box, 4, North Cambridge, Mass., or from your own Home or Foreign Mission Boards.

We should train our boys and girls in ways of world friendship and world peace. True internationalism does not spring full clothed from a resolution adopted in convention of federation meetings. There was a generation between the first Female Mite Society and the Student Volunteer Movement. Even though mothers no longer rock the condemned and unsanitary cradles, mother hands still rule the world. There was a generation between the first appearance of tiny bows of white ribbon pinned to mothers' dresses before strong young voters passed the 18th Amendment.

There is a sort of hopelessness about changing the attitudes of age. Youth is the only hope of human agency for a warless world.

Would that we could properly estimate the strategic value of boys and girls in making and maintaining peace in the earth.—Missionary Review of the World.

Hindus and Moslems in India

Riots between Hindus and Moslems in India nearly always begin in one of two ways: the killing of cows by Moslems infuriates Hindus, who retaliate with violence, or the playing of music in idolatrous processions by Hindus before Mohammedan mosques provokes Mohammedan violence. The aggressors in Calcutta were the Arya Samaj, a reform Hindu sect who claim to stand for a purified Hinduism. Missionaries in North India know very well the violent hostility of the Arya Samaj to Christian Missions. The Samaj is perhaps even more hostile to the spread of Islam, and is untiring in its efforts to reconvert Mohammedanised Hindus back again to Hinduism.

tunately the Mohammedans are becoming more, rather than less communal in their outlook. The whole political future of India depends upon the degree to which the communities, especially the minority communities can so far trust the majority of the nation as a whole as to throw away the artificial props of communal protection such as special electorates, etc. In this respect Christians have shown a good example, inasmuch as the All-India Christian Conference has for several years pronounced against special communal privileges for Christians. Mohammedans, however, appear to be growing in their belief in the necessity for communal aggrandisement, and in several provinces their claims are becoming the dominating fact in politics.

One reason for this increased communalism of the Mohammedans may be disillusionment in the agitation over the Caliphate. No more complete political overturning has been seen in our time than that suffered by the General Caliphate Committee. A campaign of violent antagonism to the British Government was started for its alleged designs on the powers exercised by the leader of the Angora Turks, Mustafa Kemal Pasha. The interest of Indian Moslems in the world of Islam has not decreased, and the smallest Mohammedan newspaper is interested deeply in what is happening to Moslems all over the world. Any definite scheme however for a pan-Islamic movement has completely vanished, and leaders of the community have turned their energies into the aggrandisement of the community as against the Hindus.

It is to such a community, and in such a mood, that the Christian Gospel must be preached. It is needless to say that such people, already resentful and suspicious and class-conscious, will resent more than ever any suspicion of Christian overlordship, or any language which suggests a religious war by the Christian on the Moslem. The situation in India is the clearest possible challenge to us to represent the Christian claim with all the winsomeness and humility and reliance on truth and the things of the Spirit which are native to the mind of Christ.—W. P. in Missionary Review of the World.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

BRIEF NEWS FROM HOME MISSION SECRETARY

On our way to Winona Lake, we stopped at Fort Wayne to take the first look at our beautiful new Mission church. We were well pleased with the building. A cut of it will appear in the Evangelist ere long. Brother J. L. Kimmel, the pastor, has done a good work already. The church was dedicated on August 22nd by Dr. Beachler.

A number of us drove over from Winona and enjoyed the morning service with them. We were well fed spiritually, by Brother Beachler, and our natural bodies were surely well filled with chicken, pie, cake, sandwiches, lemonade, etc., etc., after Brother Beachler was through.

Judging by the manner in which the Fort Wayne folks entertained and their noble response in making provision for the indebtedness on the property, we predict splendid reports from this new mission point frequently. Brother Kimmel has been too busy getting the building erected, to rally his forces together for organization. The good Lord is blessing him with good health and we know that he, with his good wife, will carry on the work in a very effective manner and that very soon they will be properly organized and ready to do the Lord's work, as a church.

Going West

The Brethren from the Mid-west and the Illiokota Districts, got together at Winona and planned to have the Home Mission Secretary come to their conferences in October to give a stereopticon, Home Mission lecture.

Some new slides are being made for this lecture.

The plan is to visit a number of the churches between the two conferences.

WM. A. GEARHART.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

By the time this reaches the readers of the Evangelist, school will have opened. As it looks now, the enrollment will be large. Most of the teachers are here and ready for their courses. The Freshman class will be very large.

Plans are now under way for the local campaign. Mr. Miller of New York is here to direct the campaign. He has taken offices in the new building. We have employed a full time stenographer and later will need another. We have had several committee meetings of the local Board members and everything is shaping up in good way.

This means a very busy fall for the teachers here and it does not seem likely that we will be able to have a representative at all of the various district conferences. There are so many things to do and we have so few to work with as compared to the size of the school.

Dr. Bell is making commendable headway in the field and the prospects are bright here for a successful canvass so that at this writing I feel very much encouraged with the outlook.

We will need the interest and the united prayers of the church until this part of the work is over. And after it is over, other problems will arise so that the church ought always to remember its work here at Ashland.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Ashland, Ohio

Our traveling just now, is along the pathway of duty in our own congregation's activities. The Ashland group never started a year with so much hope and optimism as this one, I think. During the summer, the pastor was re-engaged for further service with but a single vote of opposition which speaks well for unity on the subject of leadership and that is necessary. Our fall opening crowds have been good considering THE TIMES. And if one had not been a preacher in other times, and easier times to get a crowd, he might be considered a pessimist.

Yesterday, we had the students for our first fall service, and all seemed happy for them. Our new auditorium was all but filled to the limit at both services. A reception has been planned for them on Thursday of this week. But parents need to urge their children here to all the faithfulness possible, for there are too many who do not pretend to be regular in our services, and they all but tell the pastor so. We need all the co-operation from the home-folks we can get, to keep them in the services. "A hint to the wise is sufficient."

Following the suggestion of our Conference, we "put on" the Layman's Day Service on the appointed day. Mayor Zercher, a layman of our congregation presided. On the platform with him were the pastor and four speakers whom I could wish each congregation might have had for this service. Prof. C. L. Anspach registrar of our college spoke on "Some things a Layman Can Tell the Ministry." This he did with an elegance all his. He is an adroit speaker and popular and says things when he talks. Next, was Prof. Ralph Horn, one of our newer members and his topic was, "How a Layman Can Help the Services of the Church." He did a fine thing for our services in calling the attention of the people to the fact that it takes laymen as well as preachers to make a church go. Dr. Miller had the topic "The Outlook for the Brethren Ministry." Needless to say that he had a fund of experience on that topic and his observations were well received. Last of all, Dr. E. E. Jacobs on the subject, "The Relation of the Laity to an Educated Ministry." This was the very pith of the whole matter and Dr. Jacobs' short talk was directed to the need of money to assist the young preachers for their sake as well as for the sake of the College which must bear burdens it ought not have when they have to support where the laymen ought. In other words a good deal of what we hope Laymen will do in this task, has been done by professors and through funds that could as well be otherwise applied. It was a fine service and we hope that all our churches have had or will have a similar service for this worthy cause and purpose. Our offering was $28.28 which we consider good for us in our new building obligations.

We have other good things planned for the year and we hope that this will be a good and great year for the church of our Lord Jesus Christ. CHARLES A. BAME.

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

It has been a good while since I made my last report, July 27 being the date of that report. One reason for the length of this interval is found in the fact that there has not been much to report, and this is the chief reason too. I am sure that most of the congregations of the brotherhood asked for, and received the offering, but those upon whom the responsibility devolves for sending it in, have been slow, I fear, and I suspect that there is still quite a tidy sum of money which will come in, and I wish that it might be sent, so that the account could be closed for the year. Of course, if it should be forgotten until later, there need be no fear of its not being accepted. But please send it now.

Amount received, at last report, ... $1,902.38
Received since then:

THE PREACHER WITH A BROKEN HEART

His story reads like the most subtle fiction. Early in life, he married a beautiful and promising young woman whose name was Gomer. They were blessed with the coming of a baby boy whom they named Jezreel. Then the husband began to observe things in his wife which disturbed him. Her affection cooled, her habits became careless, other men became the focal points of her love. When her second baby came, he named the new little girl, LoRuhamah—"no pity." And with the coming of the third child, his struggling mind could no longer battle against his doubts and fears. He named the tiny boy, Lo-Amami—"no-kin-of-mine," and thus confessed his broken heart to the world.

Soon she left him and found her sordid destiny out upon the streets of the city. Meanwhile he tried to rebuild his love and care for his motherless children. One day, he saw his wife upon the highway, exposed for sale as a man's slave. Her clothes were ragged, her eyes ablaze with passion's fierce light, her hands emaciated, her cheeks hollow. Over his mind there swept that flood of awful memories. He thought of how wantonly she had treated him, how cruelly she had forsaken her children. Suddenly he found himself in compassionate tears, forgiving her, pitying her, buying her at a slave's price, leading her back to her place in his home.

What did he say to her as he began to make the glory of her womanhood real to her? What did he say to his little children as he tried to explain who this woman was, and where he had found her? This we know—that as he thought the situation through he said to himself, "This is the way God feels about wayward humanity! When I was at my best, when that flood of compassionate forgiveness swept over me, I was something like God!"

The reality of it so claimed him that he could do nothing but tell his people about it. So we have the book of Hosea, the prophet. And he keeps saying: "We who love God must speak home to the hearts of his loved ones." And I think the mission of the Christian church has never been more beautifully phrased: "Come, we who love the Lord, let us speak love to their hearts."—Bulletin First Church, Syracuse, New York.

I know not where my path shall lie;
By waters still, or where the cry
Of human need comes loud and clear
From out the mire; it may be here,
Nor there, my path shall be;
Nor would I choose a destiny
Unhallowed by his will for me.

But this I know: my Lord is Guide!
And love and joy and peace abide
As unto him my life I yield,
That through my weakness he may wield
His strength to lift, his power to free
His love in tender sympathy,
And he, himself, my Victory!

—Esther Williams.

What to Do About It

If, as occasionally happens, this microbe of carelessness and unfaithfulness has found its way into the hearts of many, perhaps even the majority, of the society, then it is best to start all over again, with a thorough plan of reorganization. Let the society vote to prepare a new list of members, explaining to every one the seriousness of the constitution and the vast importance of living up to one's word. Make it plain that no one should sign the roll of the reorganized society who does not understand the main objects for which Christian Endeavor stands and is not sincere in his purpose to live up to his obligations. This list alone should constitute the reorganized society.

This action may reduce the size of the society for a time; but if it is done with a kindly spirit and purpose, the reorganized society will be infinitely stronger, and in time, I believe, will be larger than the society was before the reorganization took place. In any event it will be more respected by outsiders, and a greater help to the church to which it belongs, than if allowed to drag along, carrying the weight of many unfaithful and careless members, whose influence may largely nullify that of the spiritually minded and conscientious.

Some such paper as this might be prepared:

Recognizing the importance of strengthening the morale of our society, and realizing the necessity of having for its active members only those who will conscientiously strive to live up to their obligations, voluntarily assumed, we, the undersigned, having carefully read and fully understood the constitution and the pledge, desire to sign them once more, thus expressing our desire and determination to live up to their provisions.

(Signatures)

Then should follow a copy of the pledge which the society has adopted, and only those who are thus willing to renew their obligations should be considered as active members of the reorganized society.

As I have said before, such reorganization is not a confession of past failure. The society may have done many desirable things in the past, and have been by no means a failure; but it shows a desire for better service, more consecrated devotion, and a thoroughgoing feeling of responsibility on the part of all its members. It is an indication of life rather than of death, of advance rather than of retrogression. It should be looked upon in this light, and the reorganization looked forward to with hope and courage. No one is excluded by others through this action. If any drop out, they exclude themselves.

Many a church would be the better for a similar reorganization. How some church-rolls are cumbered with the names of very many absent and unfaithful members! Some churches exist after nearly half of their members have removed from town, while half of those who remain hold their vows very lightly, and often do not even feel the obligation to attend divine worship.

But my business, and the business of Christian Endeavor, is not with the churches, but with our own societies, as helpmates and builders of the church among the young people. We may well consider the subject if we suspect that there is any necessity for reorganization.

Courage Needed

I admit that it takes courage to attempt anything especially drastic along this line; but it is better to take our courage in both hands, and get down to the bed-rock basis of fidelity and conscientious regard for our obligations, than to lose out altogether, to settle down into the humdrum ways of a "no-account" society, and gradually allow our principles to rot away piecemeal.—C. E. World.

WHAT WAS HE WORTH?

The poor die around us day by day, and once in a while a millionaire dies. Dives gets a column and a half in the daily paper, and Lazarus is dismissed curtly with a line. But wherever death comes the whisper runs from door to door, "What was he worth?" We once knew a man whose life was a preparation to answer the question "What was he worth?" "He was worth a lot to me," said his mother, "in my old age he put the shield of his love over my head and kissed my hands." "He was worth a lot to me," said his wife, as she was led weeping from the place where he lay sightless and voiceless in the white trance of death. "He was worth a lot to me," said his little lad, "he held me every night in his arms and sang me to sleep." "He was worth a lot to me," said his pastor, "his hands were as the hands of God. He lifted, strengthened me." "He was worth a lot to me," said a redeemed sinner, "in a black path he showed me a big light—the glory of Jesus' unchanging love for me." "He was worth a lot to me," said many weeping ones passing his bier and touching his hands so cold, so still. "He was worth a lot to me," said God, as he took him by the hand and led him home.—The United Presbyterian.

COMMANDMENTS IN RHYME

"Ten Commandments" for Worshippers at Saint Luke's (Evanston)

1. Thou shalt not come to service late,
Eleven, not eleven-eight.
2. Thou shalt not sit upright to pray,
But kneel. It is the church's way.
3. Thou shalt before the Mass begin
Read o'er the church's bulletin.
4. Thou shalt not hold the endmost seat;
Move over. And the stranger greet.
5. Thou shalt not at the hymns be bored,
Open thy lips and praise the Lord.
6. Thou shalt not shun the offering plate.
Give cheerfully. Don't hesitate.
7. Thou shalt not whisper. Don't be rude;
Devout should be your attitude.
8. Thou shalt not make communion late.
Go fasting. Half-past seven to eight.
9. Thou shalt when sacring bell doth ring
Lift up your heart. Adore your King.
10. Thou shalt not leave the church before
The benediction. Service o'er.

FINDINGS OF THE CONFERENCE OF PACIFIST CHURCHES HELD AT CARLOCK, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 30 TO SEPTEMBER 1, 1926

Preamble

We believe in Jesus Christ the Prince of Peace. We believe that he taught non-resistance, both on the part of the individual and on the part of the nation. We believe that this teaching of Jesus was the expression of his profound reliance on the forces of love and good-will.

The Pacifism we espouse is that practice of self-control, as taught and practiced by Jesus, which by loving refusal to retaliate and by returning good for evil, seeks to win the evil doer and aggressor to right living.

We believe our churches collectively and individually, are under obligation to continue faithfully their witness against participation in war and preparation for war, and to continue their works of good will, such as have been carried on by their service and relief committees.

We hold war to be a crime, personal, national and international, even though not yet so decreed by law. The Washington

Peace Study Conference recognized a difference between armies and the police force, as follows:

"The motive and the end of police force is four-fold: it is inspired by goodwill for the common welfare; it is corrective and remedial in its nature; it is exercised by neutral parties; it is strictly limited by law, and has justice as its aim. War is very antithesis of police force."

Despite our opposition to war, we honor all those who in sincerity and devotion have given their lives for their countries. We believe that history can be so evaluated as to show that there has been as great heroism in time of peace in behalf of the welfare of the nation, as has been manifested in time of war.

We believe in a positive program for Peace, rather than merely decrying war, not purposing to give offence.

Peace in principle and practice is more than relative; it is absolute when based on the whole spiritual program of Jesus. From this basis, the economic values can readily be presented.

The Part of the Individual in the Peace Program

The consecration of the individual to the program of Peace is the first essential of its success.

One's part in the program for Peace should be—

1. As an individual
2. As a factor in community-life institutions
3. As a citizen of the State.
4. As participant in agencies for Peace.

Fearlessness and kindness in presentation is needed for greater effectiveness.

Individuals, by conversation and correspondence, should use their influence for legislation leading to the outlawry of war.

Woman is a strategic factor in all the work for Peace.

Each individual Christian is urged to participate in some specific portion of the Peace program of the churches, outlined below, recalling that by his individual daily life he should reflect the life and teachings of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Educational Program for the Churches

The special opportunity and chief duty of the pacifist churches is to formulate a constructive educational program to develop the will to peace.

This educational program should be designed not only to reach the non-pacifist Christians, but our own membership as well, for only so can we assume an intelligent leadership in this great crusade.

This educational program should be particularly designed to reach the youth, for the ultimate solution of this problem lies with the next generation.

Specifically, we recommend as the most practical educational methods, the following:

1. A Sunday School Lesson on Peace each quarter, placed at once in our denominational literature, by each denomination; in addition, petitions for peace lessons in the International Series.
2. Denominational and local Peace Committees in all our churches.
3. Regular and thorough peace teaching in all young people's organizations of our respective churches.

4. In all our church schools

(a) persistent and thorough study of the whole problem of war and peace, incidentally in regular college courses, and directly in discussion groups; (b) presentation of the peace program of the church, both by faculty and by students, in oratorical and discussion contests and through Peace Teams.

5. Conference and correspondence on the part of church leaders and interested individuals with public school teachers, with reference to the teaching of peace and international good will, particularly in connection with the study of literature, geography, history and civics.

6. Urging our own young people, who are teachers or may become teachers, to consider teaching a sacred calling, with exceptional opportunities to develop attitudes of good will and peace.

7. Regular provision for furnishing newspapers with publicity and news material on peace, even when the periodicals are known to be militaristic.

8. Greater exchange of peace literature and informational materials by our respective denomination peace committees, and fuller cooperation with other peace organizations.

9. Intensive development of contacts with the Foreign Brethren of our several denominations, to cultivate within our own bodies more international good will.

10. Regular observance by all of our churches, if Armistice Day, Memorial Day, Good Will Day, and other suitable peace days, with appropriate recognition of peace time patriotic service and sacrifice.

11. Encouragement of the collection and publication of the experiences and testimonies of conscientious objectors.

12. Use of every opportunity, and creation of every possible agency, to exchange information on the basis of good will between classes, races and nations.

The Issue of Military Training

We protest against compulsory military training in the educational institutions of our United States, and against the increasing insistence of military authorities in extending such military training.

We urge our members and cooperating organizations to make this protest effective in every possible way.

Extension of Cooperation

This conference records its profound gratitude to our gracious Father for the blessed experience of fellowship and cooperation between us as individual brethren and friends. We believe such cooperation should find expression in further conferences, and also in the search for further means of coordinated effort in the cause of peace.

The Conference therefore requests the Continuation Committee to consider the establishment of a joint Commission on American Foreign Policy. The functions of such a commission would be to work out and publish practicable Christian solutions for some of the problems of American Foreign Policy. The commission would also be expected from time to time to make available to our members information on various aspects of the question of world peace.

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE - IS - YOUR - MASTER - AND - ALL - YE - ARE - BRETHREN -

IF (FOR ANY MINISTER)

By William J. May

If you can keep your head when people tell you
That never angel preached like you before;
If you can still keep modest when they hail you
As just the man their Church's been living for;
If you can sit in recognition meetings
And hear them claiming with prophetic voice
That days of splendid triumph lie before you
And not betray your fears by looks or voice;
If you can plan and work your plans thereafter:
If you can preach and visit oft as well
And teach the man o'erwhelmed by bleak disaster
To glimpse afar Hope's shining citadel;
If you can take deep interest in children
And sit and listen patiently to fools;
If you can help the man whose soul's in ruin
To build his life afresh with worthier tools;
If you can see the gold that's worth the winning
Where other men see only dross;
If with white anger you can hate the sinning
Yet feel deep pity for the sinner's loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve the one great task of saving men,
Persisting though your spirit faints within you
And fail—and fail—yet ever try again;
If you can hold great crowds and still be humble
Or preach to few and give the few your best,
And not despise the man whose petty grumble
Has power to make your very soul distressed;
If you can fill each day you're on the circuit
With faithful service honorably done—
You'll help your Church and every soul that's in it
And, what is more, you'll be a Man, my son.

What the Church Owes the Pastor

At this season when many churches are entering into new contracts with pastors, or securing entirely new pastoral leadership, it seems fitting to offer a few suggestions that may be helpful to a successful relationship. We wish here to state some things, growing out of our experience, which we believe the church owes the pastor, and next week we will make some suggestions as to what the pastor owes the church.

In the first place the church owes the pastor its confidence. Nothing is more important to a successful laboring together than just that. The church should believe in its pastor, in his sincerity, in his spirituality, in his faithfulness and ability as a proclaimer of the Word, in his integrity and worthiness of walk before men and in his leadership ability and judgment. It is entirely possible and probable that the pastor may fall short to some extent in some of these particulars, but every church owes it to the pastor to start out the year with renewed confidence in him as God's leader of that people, and to continue such confidence in him until he proves himself unworthy of it.

His leadership should be regarded and respected. There are churches who have lay leaders who dominate and domineer the local situation and wish the pastor to do nothing more than preach his sermons (and sermons of just the right sort—certain phases of life must not be too greatly disturbed) and make his routine calls in the homes of the members. They do not wish him to be a leader of the church into new and bigger undertakings, or a force in the life of the community. They will take care of the leadership phase of the work and do not wish him to usurp their places of importance; he is just the church's hired servant, and must conform to their wishes and ways. Such a situation does not make for satisfaction and continued service on the part of a self-respecting pastor. The church has a right to regard the pastor as God's leader of his people in their work in their community.

The pastor has a right to be well-spoken of, and the church has a duty to speak well of its pastor. It is no light thing to repeat idle words about him whom God has called to be the local head of his church, and those who speak disrespectfully of him and pass on discrediting tales about him are not merely guilty of the sin of gossip but of injuring the influence of him who is in a unique way God's representative. What human frailties the pastor may display (and he is human, sometimes as much so as many of his lay members), should not be made matters of public gossip, but of prayer and sympathy.

Every member of the church owes his pastor cooperation. The task of Kingdom building is not the pastor's alone, but is the responsibility of all who have named the Name. And to succeed in the task there must be team work; there must be a working together; there must be a falling in place on the part of every unit and a harmonious centering of the whole force upon the task in hand if the effectiveness that is possible is to be realized. A church member by lagging, or knocking, or insisting on taking an individual course and refusing to throw his energy in with that of the rest of the group is a positive hindrance to the church of the living God.

It must be realized on the part of the membership of the church that the pastor's welfare is definitely linked up with their own; that his success means their success and his failure means their failure. This truth was brought to the attention of the editor at a most opportune time and in a kindly way when, upon entering his first pastorate a good and wise sister of the church said to him, "We are back of you and want to work harmoniously and cooperatively with you. For your success means our success and our success means your success." It was a wise and highly appreciated counsel, and the church and pastor worked together in that consciousness to the achieving of success.

The church owes the pastor adequate financial support. To some this may seem superfluous counsel, but there are many pastors who are keenly conscious of the need of just such a word. Some churches are doing nobly by their pastors; some are doing just fair; others are driving the sharpest possible bargain with the servants of God and allowing them to do all the worrying as to how they will make ends meet. Every pastor is deserving of more than a bare living wage; he has a right to enough to provide for the essential comforts and the culture of his family, and also enough to buy magazines, books and to attend conferences and schools to keep himself intellectually and spiritually fresh and capable. Some of our churches are not doing that for their pastors, and what they think they are saving in dollars and cents, they are losing in spiritual vigor and effectiveness on the part of their pastor.

Finally, though it is not the last thing that might be said, every church owes it to its pastor to hold him up before the throne of grace. Because he is their leader it is not to be inferred that he does not need their prayers. He needs them more than any other one person in the congregation. His responsibility is great, too great for human wisdom and strength, and he stands preeminently in need of divine aid. The prayers of the saints of Zion will prove mighty effective in causing him to be submissive to the leading of the Spirit and in causing the power of almighty God to work in and through him. Until the members have taken unto themselves the responsibility of frequent and earnest prayer for their pastor, they cannot be said to have done their duty by him. This they owe him, and more.

Confusing the Mexican Issue

The Catholic hierarchy is continuing, and will for sometime to come, its struggle to maintain its special rights and privileges, and if possible to exercise the complete political dominance of former days in Mexico. It has organized what is known as the Association for the Protection of Religious Rights which is really a misnomer and in which Protestants are having no part. Under this camouflage and by direct statement the Roman church is endeavoring to confuse the issue. Judge Alfred J. Talley, as lay spokesman of the Catholic hierarchy in his capacity as president of the association above mentioned, is repeating the demand that has on several previous occasions been voiced, particularly by the head of the Knights of Columbus in conference with President Coolidge, that the United States shall break with the Mexican government. Judge Talley recently issued a statement declaring that the position of the Mexican government toward the Catholic church is "because the church stands for individual and property rights," and that the Mexican government's purpose "was to drive out religion." This is not in accordance with actual facts, as those informed as to the situation well know. There is a sense in which the Catholic church is championing individual and property rights, that is, the rights of the Catholic church to vast properties which have been gotten by illegitimate means, the wealth of which has gone to fatten the Roman treasury, and possibly the rights of certain great corporations whose greedy, unscrupulous, grasping hands have reached into the vast resources of that country and cornered the wealth and ground down the peons still further in poverty and ignorance. It is against such exploiters of Mexican property and rights that the strong, honest and vigorous government of Calles is seeking to protect his country. But the direct issue between the Mexican government and the Catholic church is frankly stated in a communication from Archbishop Mora y del Rio to the President of Mexico, which he said was written "to complain of the Reform Laws of the Constitution of 1857, effective since 1873 and subsequently incorporated in the Constitution of 1917." This spokesman of the Roman church in Mexico in writing directly to the Mexican president was naturally compelled to be honest and frank in stating his case, while Judge Talley in writing for public consumption in the United States shows himself either ignorant of the facts or purposely confusing. The Mexican General Consul Arturo M. Elias, stationed at New York, doubts if Judge Talley ever read the Mexican constitution because he so distorts or misrepresents its contents. From various reliable sources it becomes evident that the Mexican government is not trying to drive religion out of the country. President Calles himself is religious; the constitution begins with the statement, "In the name of God and by the authority of the Mexican people," and it guarantees liberty for all religious cults. Where the rub comes in from the Catholic standpoint is that this guarantee of religious liberty abrogates the clause in the previous constitution declaring the Roman Catholic religion to be alone recognized, also that the Constitution and Reform Laws now being enforced take away certain special privileges from the church hierarchy, such as being only amendable to ecclesiastical courts erected by themselves. This, of course, is not pleasing to the Catholic church, in view of their long-standing claim of divine right to temporal as well as religious authority.

The Mexican Consul offers further proof of the effort of the Catholic hierarchy to evade the real issue by recalling a statement of the pope of Rome made in days when he felt freer to be absolutely frank in pressing his claims than is the case with the vatican today. It was Pope Pius IX, who, in fulminating against the constitution, spoke out so clearly that his sentiments could not be misunderstood. He said, "We raise our Pontifical voice with apostolic freedom before you to condemn, reprove and declare null, void, and without any value the said decrees, and all others which have been enacted by the civil authorities in such contempt of the ecclesiastical authorities of this Holy See, and with such injury to the religion, to the sacred pastors and illustrious men." The Mexican government through its consul insists that if the Catholic feels itself justified in pleading for special privileges and the right to ignore the constitution it should do so frankly and not seek to beloud the issue. Judge Talley, and other representatives of the Catholic church have a right to champion the rights of that hierarchy, but they have a right to be honest about it, and when their confusing and deceptive propaganda is given place in the daily press and such columns are all but universally closed to statements that refute Catholic misrepresentation, it becomes the duty of the religious press to serve the cause of truth and justice.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We are informed that the First church of Bryan, Ohio, where Rev. E. M. Riddle is pastor, observed Rally Day on September 26th, with F. E. Clapper, banker of Louisville and member of the Canton Brethren church, as the special speaker of the day.

The moderator, Brother Charles H. Ashman, and the pastor, Brother W. C. Benshoff, have notices in this issue concerning the Pennsylvania State Conference to be held at Berlin, October 4 to 7. Pennsylvanians especially should read these statements.

In his recent article, "Some Outstanding Features of Our Foreign Mission Work," Dr. M. A. Witter informs us that the credit that he gave to Miss Florence Bickel as being "recognized for her faithful work on the mission field with the permission to open a school" in French Equatorial Africa should have gone to Miss Mary Emmert. Both these missionaries are doing a great work, he states, but the school is in charge of Miss Emmert.

A disastrous fire occurred on College Hill on Sunday morning of September 26, at three o'clock, when the College gymnasium was discovered on fire, and before the tardy city fire-fighting equipment of the city was brought into operation, it was too late to save the building and it burned to the ground. All that remains of the old gym are the hollow tile walls. Besides the building, all gymnasium equipment, athletic suits and other paraphernalia were burned, all of which means a great loss to the college. The origin of the fire is unknown.

A note dated September 19, 1926 from a member of the Washington, D. C., church reached us too late for publication in last week's paper, making request for prayer for the recovery of Mrs. Homer A. Kent, the pastor's wife, "who has undergone the second operation since the arrival of Homer, Jr., on August 13. The baby is doing fine but Mrs. Kent's condition is grave. So we covet the prayers of the brotherhood in her behalf," writes our correspondent. Mrs. Kent, who will be remembered as Miss Alice Wogoman, has a host of friends who will anxiously join in prayer for her recovery, as will many others who may not share that personal acquaintance.

The college enrollment this year is a few notches above what it was at this time last year, according to the news letter of President E. E. Jacobs. He reports 285 in the college department, besides the seminary and special departments. Professor Anspaeh, who is reported as being in attendance at Michigan University this year is a member and vice-president of the Brethren Publishing Company. Our readers will be eager to learn more of the progress of the local college Endowment Campaign. And they will not likely have to wait long as the campaign is to be completed by the end of October.

Doctor Bell's report of College Endowment progress comes from the loyal members of the Meyersdale circuit where Brother H. L. Goughnour is the capable and devoted pastor. The Meyersdale church and the Summit Mills church compose the circuit, each congregation of which did a splendid thing for the college, and this in the face of a depressed mining situation and some heavy local church improvements that were made not long since. At Meyersdale the gift was $2,368.04 and at Summit Mills $2,632, making a total of $5,000.04. This brings the grand total reported to date up to $69,476.84.

Professor J. A. Garber, General Secretary of the National Sunday School Association, gives us a brief report of the work of that very important organization, its officary and some of its plans. Doctor Beachler continues to head up the organization; a few changes in the other offices were effected, one being the resignation of Dr. Martin Shively from the treasurership and the election of Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh to take his place. Brother Melvin Stuckey is commended for his splendid work during the past year and is continued in the office of Field Secretary as a voluntary worker for whatever time he may have to give from his school work which he continues in Princeton.

An innovation for the dispensing of school work is the radio, which has been employed by several universities to date. And now the Moody Bible Institute announces that on September 21 it began its first regular educational course conducted by radio, to be broadcast from Chicago station WMBI. Two complete courses are offered, giving certificates of credit if the final examinations are passed. It is claimed that this method will be superior to the correspondence course, though, of course, it cannot reach so widely. Whether the grade of work accomplished proves to be very creditable or not, surely the distribution of religion in this manner will not be fruitless, and it is good to find these modern inventions being so nobly employed.

The Near East Relief is asking the people of America again this year to observe "Golden Rule Sunday" by the eating of a simple meal on the Sunday following Thanksgiving and giving the difference in the cost of the single meal and a big dinner to the feeding of the orphaned children in the Near East. These children have a simple fare every day and are glad for it. Their only guarantee of enough food to keep them from starving is the generosity of the American people. There are 105,000 bowls that must be filled every day. Food is the largest single item of expense—seventy-nine and one-half tons consumed daily. There were 132,532 orphaned children among the more than one million lives saved by the Near East Relief, 35,000 of which still remain in their care, and for which medicine and hospital supplies as well as clothing are a daily expense.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Task of the Song Director

By H. E. Eppley

The song director has long been recognized in the program of religious worship. By some his place may not be fully recognized while by others it may be overworked. Music adds to a service of worship and to have the best music without a director is difficult to imagine. The term director, however, is rather flexible and may be misleading. It is possible that in the past some serious mistakes have been made just here which have gone unrecognized. Religious leaders, and evangelists in particular, are learning that song directors should be divided into two classes if the maximum results are to be obtained. They may be named as follows for the purpose of distinction: choir directors and evangelistic song directors. In the strictest sense these represent two distinct fields. In the common or working sense there must of necessity be an overlapping of the two fields. Each field will be given consideration thus showing the distinctiveness of each and the necessary overlapping in practical use.

The field of the choir director is by its nature more technical than the other. What is the task, stated broadly, of the choir director, as applied to religious worship? Stated broadly it is to assist the pastor in promoting the most intense, impressive, and inspiring spirit of worship. Ideally the pastor is the master of the situation. He is the general superintendent, to borrow a term from the business world. He is the master-mind and his judgments should command respect and attention. Therefore the choir director should consult the pastor and ascertain the nature of the service to be developed at the next worship period. He should then give much thought to the selection of the music to be used. The words should be studied carefully. The type of music should be studied with equal care. A harmonious blending of the two must be had if the atmosphere of the worship period is to meet the ideal of the pastor and lift the people of the congregation to the highest spiritual level. The choir must be trained with this one objective in view. It must be instructed in the spirit to be sought in the worship period. In other words the desired atmosphere of the worship period must be developed in the choir and then imparted to the congregation. To gain this objective the choir must be trained in spirit as well as in musical technique. It must render service and not perform. It must seek to produce the desired atmosphere of worship and not entertain. To reach such an exalted ideal a thoroughly consecrated leader and choir members will be a necessity.

What is the task of the director of congregational singing or of the evangelistic song director? This question would no doubt bring forth many different answers. These answers would all depend upon the vision each would have of the task. The answer herein given, therefore, may be considered just one. The task as the writer sees it is to prepare the audience for the preacher. The director may be said to be the forerunner of the evangelist. The time allotted to this work is important and fills a big place in any campaign. Evangelists have long recognized the value of this preparatory period and sought the best leaders available. What is the work of the director during this preparatory period? What is his program?

This first thing I should name in the work of the director is to get a vision of the status of the audience as nearly as possible. This is sometimes easy while at other times it is exceedingly difficult. The occurrence of some calamity in the community which affects every one will determine the status of the audience even before it is assembled. In the absence of such or in normally quiet times a vision of the multitude of things which disturb the individual must be had. There must be a picture of an audience whose minds are filled with many and perplexing private problems. The importance of this cannot be over-estimated. The leader who fails here will not accomplish all that he should and may fail entirely in his work. The manner in which the status of an audience is obtained will differ according to the circumstances and the keenness and tactics of the director. Regardless of the acuteness of the situation and the difficulty of gaining the desired end the audience must not be allowed to feel with too much consciousness the attempt being put forth. It should be made to feel that the real purpose is to enter into worship rather than to feel that it is being drawn away from anything.

ELDER H. E. EPPLEY
Evangelistic Song Director

The second task I should name is the selection of the type of music best suited for the occasion and the manner in which the singing of it is directed. Every service will present a little different problem. That which will bring the best results one night will fail utterly the next. An illustration will serve to make this clear. A few years ago the writer was summoned by wire to assist in a meeting after one week had gone by. Upon arrival he found the music had been given little attention and was at low ebb. He faced the task of doing in the remaining two weeks that which should have had three weeks' time. First one method and then another was used but not with the desired result. Finally after two or three evenings an exceedingly heavy devotional hymn was chosen. The audience was led in singing it in a half dozen different ways until finally the degree of devotion and consecration was secured which the director desired. That night the preacher preached different. The entire atmosphere was changed. After the service the people were saying: "that was a real service", and "the preacher preached the best yet tonight." The preacher on the way to the rooming place said: "The ice broke tonight." "Sing anything" is the poorest of advice. It does make a difference what is sung and when and how it is sung. Selecting the hymn is a real task.

The third task I shall name is the use of special numbers. These are expected and anticipated by the audience. What is to be their design or purpose? Are they to entertain or are they to fill a more important mission? Every special number should have purpose in it and should fill an important place in the service. It should contribute something toward the preparation of the audience for the message of the preacher. A special musical number, whether rendered by an individual or individuals or the choir, merely to entertain or display musical ability will not add materially to an evangelistic campaign. The music and the rendition should so weave into the spirit and work of the preparatory period as to advance the spirit of the audience a little nearer to the message of the preacher. This consti-

The British Empire and World Peace

By Dr. Edward Shillito. Article II.

(An outstanding church leader of England, Dr. Shillito spoke at the fourth annual Conference on International Relations From the Christian Viewpoint at Chautauqua under the auspices of the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of Churches. He has been literary superintendent of the London Missionary Society since 1919 and is pastor of the Congregational Church at Buckhurst Hill, Sussex, England.

By request Dr. Shillito has put the significant parts of his address into two articles, of which this is the second.

When he points out that the supreme passion of England is for peace and that its great dread is of war, he interprets the heart of Americans as well. The American mind has become considerably confused as to method, but in many ways it has shown itself unwilling to think of war any longer as an acceptable means of dealing with international problems and settling disputes. The church is not unanimously agreed as to its responsibility in the matter, but there is coming to be pretty general agreement that the church can no longer bless war, nor to sanction it. Moreover, we should agree too that the Gospel of Christ is the only solvent of the world's ills, and that it points the way to international cooperation and good will.—Editor).

It may be claimed that the first interest of Great Britain as a nation is peace. The Briton who deliberately seeks war ought to be treated as a mental case. The very existence of the people of Great Britain depends upon the flow of trade. Anything that checks that interchange is dreaded. The breakdown of the normal relationships between nations means loss to others, but it means peril to the very life of the British Isles. Moreover the fact that its dominions are scattered on all seas is a sufficient reason for the dread of war.

The World War kindled within the hearts of Britons a strong desire to end war. It was the favorite slogan "The War to End War." Of the brave men who rushed to arms in 1914, there were few who delighted in war—there were many who willingly gave their lives as they believed to end this foul business. Their hopes are still unfulfilled in Great Britain; and the passion of those who fought for peace is fed by the memory of those who trusted us to carry through their hope.

Upon the strengthening of the League of Nations and the interpretation of its ideals, the mind of the Christian Church has been set from 1919 to the present hour. The League of Nations' Union has done much service through the press and the platform; while from the pulpits of Great Britain there has been a constant call to the Churches to give to the League of Nations that spiritual background which it needed.

In addition there is the World Alliance for Friendship Between the Churches. To this the best minds in the Church have given their time and service without stint; and a beginning has been made of a new fellowship of Churches, which may bring it to pass, that above the barriers of nations there will be the one Christian Church to speak the word of power, when the crisis comes.

There is much still to be done. In the modern world there are new forces with which to reckon. "Unless the Church is to surrender to pagan deities, Venus, Bacchus, Mars, Mercury, and Mammon, it must use the international road provided by the press." What is needed there is not propaganda for peace so much as a reasonable and continuous interpretation of the nations to each other. They ought to know the best in each other—not the worst.

The last battle for peace will be fought in the region of human thought and desire and longing. The one thing needed is the provision of new values. The Church of Christ has it in its power to set them forth. In Great Britain through the fellowship of Churches in Copee this is being attempted. In that Conference, which did not indeed adopt the pacifist position, it was definitely resolved by representatives from all the Churches assembled, that all war was contrary to the will of God, and the Churches were called to "condemn unreservedly and to refuse to support in any way, a war waged before the matter in dispute had been submitted to an arbitral tribunal, or in defiance of the decision of such a tribunal."

The Church of Christ in Great Britain is awakening to this call. It is well that it should be so, for in the long test it is with the Christian community in all lands that the issue will rest. "The Cross is the security of the world."

Meditations

By Egydio B. Romanenghi

Let us find our way into the great temple of meditation, that we may consider there, the thoughts, the lessons, and the examples which may afford greatest vigor to our personality. May there burn within our psyche the love of the beautiful, that the soul may be perfumed with the myrrh of great enthusiasm. To admire is to grow.

Our study centers around the following points: first, the tendency of our times; second, the gallery of great souls; and third, the man who has done most for the world.

THE TENDENCY OF OUR TIMES. As we study the intellectual currents and the ambient medium or circumstance of the age in which it falls our lot to busy ourselves with the harsh zeal of life, we find that it is not exactly an irreligious age but a realistic one. Our epoch is one that thirsts for the real, the true, the tangible. It is shot through and through with a passion for life inspired with a love for deeds.

Literature, science, philosophy, and religion are the four fountain heads through which one may study the tendency of a given age.

Poetry, to me, is sometimes, the truth transformed into sentiment. Science is the exact knowledge of the facts of nature classified and systematized for the scientists. Philosophy is the group of doubtful conclusions, which man, in his pilgrimage toward the truth, has been deducing from this world full of secrets and mysteries. Religion is the application of the facts of the true science, of the real conclusions of philosophy, the revelation of God to our individual life and to our conduct.

In the literature of the day we have predominant the experimental novel of Emile Zola, the romantic realism of Maksim Gorki, and the mystical realism of Leon Tolstoy.

Do not look for life only with all of its realism, but search it out with all of its grief and suffering.

In science the theories of Darwin and determinism have taken life and have said that it is only the result of environment. Adaptation accomplishes everything. The sciences, which have the greatest attraction, are medicine, which is struggling viciously against death; psychology which has said goodbye to metaphysics and has reached out its hand toward physiology; and mechanics which by using the forces of nature economizes those of man.

The pass word, the very quintessence of philosophy, is "adaptation." Living means adapting oneself. He who does not adapt himself fails miserably. August Comte preaches "The how, not the why; the fact, not the idea." The words of Dickens' character in the novel "Difficult Times" may synthesize the tendency of our age—"Deeds, only deeds!"

THE GALLERY OF GREAT SOULS. In my eagerness to bring to the youth of my time a resplendent vision with which to fill the voice of the soul, a message which may cause them to abandon materialism and indifference, and the frivolity in which they revel, longing to give them a sacred and noble thing to think about; I penetrated with the greatest of modesty into the austere temple of History.

History is like a great art gallery where master hands have tenderly placed the likenesses of great men. Going through the spacious halls of the temple, I have contemplated the most noble figures that humanity has produced: Moses, Abraham, Jacob, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Buddha, Zoroaster, Rameses, Alexander, Caesar, Socrates, Plato, Epimenides, St. Augustine, St. Paul, Dante, Milton, Shakespeare, Cervantes, Michelangelo, Leonardo de Vinci, Beethoven, Wagner, Columbus, Gutenberg, Napoleon, Washington, Bolivar, San Martin, etc. All superior souls that form an auroral effulgence in the eternal sky of immortality. Among all of them I find only one life that may not be excelled, a soul which remains solitary on the highest peak of humanity. Great men are the archetypes of civilization, they are the synthesis of an epoch. With reason did Victor Hugo say: "As light is condensed into the flame each epoch is condensed into a man; in the meantime the man dies, the epoch ends and God turns the page."

The death of Dante is the final point of the thirteenth century; the death of Shakespeare is the climax of the sixteenth century; the death of Voltaire is the wind up of the eighteenth century, after him can come the French Revolution.

"Institutions and society," says Emerson, "are the lengthening of the men who are opposite them." Only one here can modify a whole people. There are not many Leonardos di Vinci, there was only one, and all the artists of the Renaissance draw their inspiration from him. Maxim Gorki is a history full of symbolism. The mysticism of Leon Tolstoy pleases me but it does not satisfy me; Darwin, whom I respect as a scientist, interests me at times but does not convince me.

In my solitary moments, in my periods of meditation, I have called all these great men and they answered me. I was happy for a while, but I needed to call the one who has done the most for the world and he has satisfied all my desires.

I pity some of the students of my time. They have taken a four years' course and it suffices to throw overboard religious truths, to doubt the power of the Creator, to forget the precious blood of Jesus; yea, four years in College gives them the liberty to say the last word in every type of discussion.

The Victorious Life

By Nora Bracken Davis

"How can I hear what you say when what you are is forever thundering in my ears?"—Emerson. "When every line and curve of your being are speaking the thoughts you habitually hold, when movements of your features and form are telling the thoughts which are with you in the silence, how can we hear the passing words? You talk to us but we do not see you; we see you in your past; we see your fireside, your family; we see the harmony or the discord in your life, the success or the failure of your efforts, carved in delicate tracery of lines on your face and figure."

These words apply to all of us. We can only become victorious as we conquer self. We may become quite successful in collecting and earning material things and yet lack character. So in order to be successful in life it is necessary that we study self to see wherein we are weak and then try to overcome our weakness and grow in strength. We must live the Christian life, the Christ-like life. Some day we shall be like him. But how can we become like him? To become like the Christ we must live a life of faith and prayer and of service for mankind. Then it is only by daily living a sincere Christian life that we shall finally, when we put off mortality and put on immortality become like him. Therefore if the teacher would be victorious he will follow in the steps of the Master Teacher; he will strive to live a Christian life, thus becoming an ideal for his pupils, exemplifying what he teaches.

"What we take as our ideals grow to be our masters—dumb; In the stillness they will mold us; like themselves we must become."

Not the good thing we accomplish, but the better thing we plan,

Not achievement, but ideal, is the measure of a man.

And the great God will not judge us merely as the men we are,

But by what we love and strive for, he will judge us—cloud or star."

The teacher striving for his ideals will become an ideal for his pupils.

In order to win the love and confidence of his pupils, the teacher must study human nature. He must cultivate the habit of seeing the good that is in others, and more than that, striving to draw forth the best that is in them.

He must have a generous heart full of love and kindness for his pupils and for all mankind.

In Milton's Lycidas, where he mourns the death of his friend Edward King, he refers to him as a good shepherd and shows how he will be missed by his friends and all those whom he leaves behind by the following expression: "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed." There are many hungry sheep and lambs continually looking up to the teacher for food. The true teacher will feed the sheep and the lambs. He will teach his pupils so that they will unfold and develop into the fulness of Christian life. He will do his work willingly and teach for the joy of the teaching, as Kipling expresses it:

"And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;

And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;

But each for the joy of the waking, and each, in his separate star, Shall draw the thing as he sees it for the God of the things as they are."

Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

"Good and evil are so intertwined in the world that the purest soul may be caught in the coils of temptation and tragedy.—Snowden.

GIVING OUR LIVES

"We may be sure, although we know not how, we give our lives like coral insects, to build up, invisibly, in the twilight of the seas of time, the reef of righteousness; and we may be sure, although we see not why, it is a thing worth doing"—Robert Louis Stevenson.

ACTION

It is not to taste sweet things, but to do noble and true things, and vindicate himself under God's heaven as a God-made man, that the poorest son of Adam dimly longs. Show him the way of doing that, the dullest day-drudge kindles into a hero.—Carlyle.

The Inauguration of Jesus

By Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, D.D.

Author of "Pen Portraits of the Twelve," etc.

The early Christians revelled in the idea of Christ's triumphant return. They would greet each other with words which recalled this hope to their minds. It was the most precious tenet of their faith. Today it makes most of us uncomfortable. We think of its promise as a threat if quarrelling. We have made of the idea a bone of contention.

Some of us wish there were nothing else in the gospel. We try to make all passages point toward it and all parables teach it. We count that sermon lost which does not mention Jesus' return. And we are tempted to neglect everything else he said because we concentrate so on "his appearing."

Others of us wish the idea were out of the Bible altogether. We wish that Jesus had been content to reveal what he had to teach us about the nature of God and the ethics of life. If only he had not complicated the whole matter with this talk about "other-worldliness"! For this part of his gospel, which bulks so large in his teaching, seems to be less timely with each passing year.

The very figure of speech which he used has become worn into dinginess. He was constantly talking about his kingdom. Kingdoms are disappearing now. We do not pray that a kingdom should triumph over all other realms that might be used to put down his foes, that another place be reserved where we may reach the Kingdom and the blessings of God may be made real.

Neither did Jesus. Of course he used the word "kingdom," but wherever he uttered it, he tried to make plain at once that he did not mean a kingdom such as his disciples were talking about. He kept emphasizing its law of service, its conquest by love, and its promised coming here in our very midst. He taught us to pray: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." There is nothing in his idea of the quiet conquest of men's souls by the ideals of God which seems out of style to thinking men today.

People used to laugh at the idea that "at the name of Jesus every knee should bow," for they knew that the whole world could never hear his name shouted out at one time. But Calvin Coolidge sent his voice over the whole continent, and everybody could hear who listened. We used to ridicule the promise that "all flesh shall see it together." Yet radio will enable us to see anything we care to witness, however far away, in a few more years.

Every development of our years tends to make it easier to believe in the ultimate conquest of all life by Jesus. If you scoff at his methods, you prove yourselves out of date. For modern education is admitting that the only way to win people is not to hold conquest, by clever strategem, by a well-planned coup d'etat, but by passing the word along from life to life until we have all learned about him.

Waterloo has been fought. England was waiting for the critical news. Flares flashed the signals from hill to hill. Soon the word was reaching London. A watcher in a church tower caught the message, "Wellington defeated." Then a bank of fog swept in over the landscape, and the lights were blotted out. The watcher shouted down the sad words, "Wellington defeated," and all London was shrouded in gloom.

Suddenly the fog lifted. The signals were being repeated on yonder hill. "Wellington defeated—the enemy!" The words were shouted down to the anxious throngs below. London went mad with joy.

How much of the message have you read? "Jesus defeated" or "Jesus defeated all foes." Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.—C. E. World.

A Prayer for the Press

"A Book of Daily Prayers," written by the late Dr. John Henry Jowett, contains this petition for which all the goodly fellowship of the press will be duly thankful: "God of all grace, I pray for all who mold the opinion of our country. Bless all the editors of our newspapers and all whose ministry is in the public press. Illuminate their minds and elevate their lives that all their writings may be for the glory of their God." Never was there a time when the conscientious editor felt more deeply the need of divine guidance as he applied himself to his daily or weekly task of guiding the thoughts of others.—Christian Advocate (New York).
GOD CARES! DO WE?

Forget not that your first and principal business as a disciple of Christ is to give the Gospel to those who have it not. He who is not a missionary Christian will be a missing Christian when the great day comes of bestowing the rewards of service. Therefore ask yourselves daily what the Lord would have you do in connection with the work of carrying the news of salvation to the perishing millions. Search carefully whether he would have you go yourself to the heathen, if you have the youth and fitness required for the work. Or, if you cannot go in person, inquire diligently what blood mortgage there is upon your property in the interest of Foreign Missions, how much you owe to the heathen because of what you owe to Christ for redeeming you with his precious blood. I warn you that it will go hard with you when your Lord comes to reckon with you, if he finds your wealth hoarded up in needless accumulation, instead of being sacredly devoted to giving the Gospel to the lost.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

THE "FOURTEEN POINTS" OF HEART PEACE

1. To claim God as the reality of realities.
2. To practice persistently companionship with Christ.
3. To pray daily in simplicity and earnestness.
4. To read frequently the Holy Scriptures through devout spectacles.
5. To never lose an opportunity for thinking kindly of, and acting magnanimously toward, the other fellow.
6. To keep up the struggle for noble thinking.
7. To watch unceasingly for the best in others.
8. To cultivate the sense of humor.
9. To eliminate from our nature all vulgar and mean streaks.
10. To make the House of God our spiritual conservatory.
11. To mingle with and love children.
12. To make our dollars almighty in doing good.
13. To keep ever young in spirit.
14. To listen always with the idea of learning from every one we hear.—Southern Churchman.

tutes the ideal and will many times tax the wisdom of the song director.

These are a few of the major tasks of the song director. The prayer and hope of the writer is that they will help some one or some church in estimating the value of a song director in a meeting.

Write the Word

By Samuel Kiehl

No writer can please every reader. It should be the sincere desire of every writer for the Brethren Evangelist in some way to glorify the name of the Father; also, to be an inspiration along some spiritual line to one or more Evangelist readers. 2 Timothy 4:2 says, Preach the word; by inference also write the word."

Some time before his arrest and crucifixion Jesus said, He that believeth on me as the scripture hath said out of him shall flow rivers of living water (John 7:38 Diaglot). The next verse (39) reads thus, But this spake he of the spirit which they that believe on him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given because that Jesus was not yet glorified. The inference is conclusive, that after his glorification (ascension) those who truly believe on him immediately receive the Holy Ghost the Spirit of God (Acts 10:44-47). Having the Spirit of God, received by faith in Christ Jesus, dwelling in them they are children of God according to John 1:12 R. V. reading thus, As many as received him (Jesus), to them gave he the right to become (to be what they were not before they believed) children of God. First John 3:2 R. V. bears testimony to the same truth thus, Behold, now are we children of God; and Romans 8:16 R. V. confirms the preceding statements thus, The spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God. The preceding scriptures tell the whole truth in a few words as to how and when men, women, boys, and girls become children of God. These children having already confessed Jesus as Lord, and believing in the heart that God raised them from the dead (Rom. 10:9 R. V.) are fit subjects for baptism in a body (or stream) of water by immersion; in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost according to Acts 8:36-39, and Matthew 28:19.

After baptism Paul, addressing them, and other believers says, Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death (not into his grave)? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life (Rom. 6:3, 4). To these baptized children of God, whom Christ hath redeemed from the curse of the law (Gal. 3:13) he says, If ye love me, keep my commandments. He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me (John 14:15, 21). Keeping his commandments, not from necessity, but from choice, is proof that we love him. The scriptures written for our special benefit during our Christian warfare, enabling us not to become weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not, are the following, soul-cheering words, Come out from among them (the wicked), and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing (sin); and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty (2 Cor. 6:17, 18). To be a son or daughter of the Lord Almighty is greater honor, than riches, and glory, both here and hereafter, than to have possession and full control of all the wealth of the world.

Paul's prayer for spiritual men and women, that they might be filled with all the fulness of God (Eph. 3:19) undoubtedly consists in the living, working Spirit of God being in them (1 Cor. 3:16; Rom. 5:5), Christ living in them (Gal. 2:20; 2 Cor. 13:5), God dwelling in them, and they in him (1 John 4:15). By one, or all of these indwelling personalities is God daily working in every faithful believer both to will and to do of his good pleasure (Phil. 2:13). Truly, God is good. To all he saith, Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else (Isa. 45:22). To faithful believers he saith, All of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. To every member of the Brethren church he saith, Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you (1 Pet. 5:5-7). Blessed be the Lord and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort (2 Cor. 1:3 R. V.) Bless his holy name for that ever-present, soul-reviving comfort!

Believers in Christ Jesus, who, through faith, have God, the Son of God, and the Spirit of God dwelling in them are heirs to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for those who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time (1 Peter 1:4, 5); when the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore (dear Evangelist readers), comfort one another with these words (1 Thes. 4:16-18).

LABORERS OR IDLERS?—Matt. 20:1-7.

"Shall this life of mine be wasted,
And this vineyard be unfilled?
Shall true joys pass untasted,
And my soul remain unfilled?"

"No! No! No! No!
Even faithful I will be,
And each precious hour redeeming,
Wait for thee, eternity."

TUESDAY

THE LOVER OF THE LOST—Luke 15:1-7.

"Jesus my Shepherd is;
'Twas he that loved my soul,
'Twas he that washed me in his blood,
'Twas he that made me whole."

WEDNESDAY

THE EVENING PRAYER—Luke 24:27-31.

"Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide,
The darkness deepens—Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!"

THURSDAY

THE DANGER OF NEGLECT—Matt. 25:1-13.

"Late, late, so late! and dark the night and chill!
Late, late, so late! but we can enter still.
Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now."

FRIDAY

THE SOUL'S REFUGE—Psalm 46:1-7.

He hideth my soul in the cleft in the rock
That shadows a dry, thirsty land;
He hideth my life in the depth of his love,
And covers me there with his hand.

SATURDAY

ONENESS WITH CHRIST—John 17:21-24.

"O, blessed fellowship divine!
Oh, joy supremely sweet!
Companionship with Jesus here
Makes life with bliss replete:
In union with the purest One,
I find my heaven on earth begun."

SUNDAY

LOVE FOR GOD—1 John 4:8-20.

"My Jesus, I love thee, I know thou art mine;
For thee all the follies of sin I resign;
My gracious Redeemer, my Savior art thou,
If ever I loved thee, my Jesus, 'tis now."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Mountain Top

By J. C. McBride

OUR GUIDE

If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themselves upon the earth (Eccles. 11:3).

For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I set it (Isaiah 55:10-11).

Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness (Acts 14:17).

And the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the Lord called Moses up to the top of the mount: and Moses went up (Ex. 19:20).

And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light (Matt. 17:1-2).

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man (Eccles. 12:13).

OUR OBSERVATION

There is one point in Southern California where twice as much rain falls, as anywhere else in all the surrounding country where the government maintains rain gauges. That point is Mount Wilson near Los Angeles, and has an altitude of 6,000 feet. My Sunday school class recently said the reason was, that it was nearest the supply, and another answer that it was higher up—both right.

As I stood on Lookout Mountain in Tennessee and looked out over Chattanooga and that part of the state I exclaimed it was a wonderful sight. We too can have a more wonderful conception of the beauties of God's handiwork when we climb to the mountain top and "view the landscape o'er."

The sunshine and rain are the two most wonderful blessings God gives to the earth. They are needed that the earth may bring forth her best fruits in due season.

Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit were the two most wonderful blessings God ever gave to the people of the earth for they are both essential and must needs be that we may bring forth much fruit at the harvest time. Both are from Heaven and their abiding love, guidance, grace strength and protection cometh down from heaven, even as the rain cometh down, that all may partake of the Water of Life and grow strong by the grace of God.

Then if the mountain top records a greater amount of rainfall than the valley, why not seek the mountain top for God's blessings—getting higher up, or nearest the supply? So many Christians are content to rest peacefully in the valley of contentment awaiting the coming of the Lord. But not so with the mountain climber who strives to reach the top. His is a journey ever onward and upward. When he has at last reached the mountain top he beholds the wonderful things which God has prepared for them that love him.

When God came down on old Mount Sinai he shook the earth and changed the appearance of the whole mountain: then he called to Moses and said "Come up." Oh the beautiful words of Jesus when he says, "Come, ye blessed," and we are taken to the mountain of transformation and are given a view of the glory land where Jesus is the sunshine, and eternal joy is the raindrops of the water of eternal life.

And now, brethren, may I exhort you to search for God's richest blessings on the mountain top in the fear of him who gave his Son for us, and may we seek to keep his Word written on fleshly tablets in our hearts as a witness of him in the earth.

OUR DESIRE

Oh, God, our Author and Creator of all things, we are truly glad that thou hast called us to come up higher, even to the mountain top, that we may see and understand the many riches in the glory land which thou hast in store for us. We realize our heavenly Father, that we must be lifted up by thy hand above the valleys of sin and apparent contentment before we can get a glimpse of the divine purpose of thy coming. Make us all better soldiers for the Cross that we may unite around the banner and together climb to heights of eternal glory in the name of Jesus our Lord and Savior. Amen.

All Bible Lands in One Trip

After Thrilling Adventures Amidst Scripture Scenes on an Unprecedented Journey, Dr. William Ellis Returns with New Tribute to The Old Book

Newspapers report the return to America of Dr. William T. Ellis of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, from a ten months' tour of Bible Lands, wherein he has covered every geographical region mentioned in the Scripture.

Dr. Ellis says that, so far as he can learn, this comprehensive trip over all Bible Lands has never before been made by any one man, in either ancient or modern times. So accustomed are even church folk to consider simply Palestine as the Holy Land that it is with a measure of surprise that we learn how vast is the area comprehended by the Bible Story.

His travels took Dr. Ellis from Paul's Rome, down the Appian Way to Rhegium and Syracuse, in Sicily; throughout Greece and Macedonia; over Paul's route in Turkey and to St. John's "Seven Churches of Asia"; from Antioch, in Syria, where the disciples were first called Christians, throughout all of Bible-marked Syria and Palestine, (he was under fire in Damascus) and into the untravelled recesses of the Sinai desert; then, over all the way that Moses knew, through the length and breadth of Egypt, and across into Arabia, where he got within fourteen miles of Mecca, nearer than any undisguised Christian has ever before gone; afterward he traversed the Trans-Jordan region, with its still-standing ruins of cities where Jesus doubtless preached; subsequently he followed the route of Abraham and of the Hebrew exiles and of the Magi down into Babylon and into Ur of the Chaldees. This arduous search for Scripture sites ended in Persia, with a visit to Shushan, and its memories of Queen Esther and of Daniel and of Nehemiah; to Persepolis and to the ancient Jewish tombs of Esther and Mordecai in Hamadan.

Once in Arabia Dr. Ellis and Mrs. Ellis barely escaped with their lives, after a fight with the Arabs. "More interesting, and far more important, than any of our adventures is the mass of confirmatory and corroborative evidence we have gathered attesting the historicity of the Bible," said Dr. Ellis, after his return. "This expedition has fairly opened up a new field of Christian apologetics. To trace the entire geographical course of the Scripture story is to demonstrate in a compelling fashion that the Bible is a place book; and that its authenticity is supported by the extraordinary accuracy and reasonableness and unity of its geographical allusions. I have written a book for Appletons, 'Bible Lands Today', covering our travels; but there is not space between its covers for the whole thrilling tale of the new light which old lands shed upon the inspired record. Something like a revival of religion would ensue were the churches to give themselves to intelligent study of all the Bible backgrounds; and of Bible lands as a testimony to the Book."

LESSON LIGHTS.

(From the Illustrated Quarterly)

The Situation. The Israelites had now come to the borders of the Promised Land. Between them and it was a natural defence of hills up which they must go to the higher land, and something of a wilderness. All that could be done for them in the 15 months since they had departed from Egypt had been done. They had had various experiences of God's goodness and power, and of the reality of his presence. They had a wise leader, religious worship, political organization, laws, food, and guidance. They had only to trust God and go forward, and in less than two years from leaving Egypt the land would have been theirs. The God who had delivered them with a mighty hand, who had made a path through the sea, who had rained manna and brought water from the rock, and spoken from Sinai, and entered into covenant with them, and was leading them by his visible presence—he bade them go up and take possession of the Promised Land. They should have trusted and obeyed.

The Second-Best Plan. But the people were afraid. They had been for generations slaves to the Egyptians, and had lost the initiative which belongs to a free and independent people. They were not trained in arms nor was their army fully organized. They had heard of the strength of the land and imagined more than they had heard. They begged Moses to send out men who should find out for them what they were to meet. Had they not been under the direct leadership of an almighty God this would have been the wisest thing for them to have done. But with their Leader it was only the second-best thing.

The Journey of Exploration. It is not at all probable that they went in one band, as that would have meant courting suspicion, and investigation, and would have defeated their purpose. They probably scattered in various directions, going as Egyptian travelers, for the Egyptians had held this country under their control at times, and were familiar figures there. There appears from the narrative to have been two main divisions of the spies. One, under the leadership of General Joshua went through the whole length of Palestine, 300 miles from Kadesh to the pass between the Lebanon mountains, "the entering in of Hamath" (v. 21), a city north of Damascus. The other, under the leadership of Caleb, a very shrewd observer, went only about 100 miles, as far as Hebron and the Esheol Valley a little beyond it. Caleb, in that case, returned first, and is mentioned alone in Numbers 13:30; 14:24 as making a brave report; while Joshua, taking the longer journey, afterward joined Caleb in his courageous stand (Num. 14:6, 7).

The Two Reports. Both reports agreed in all the material facts, and the only difference in the reports was the deduction each made from these facts. The "evil report" of the majority asserted that Israel was not strong enough to conquer the cities and the people they had seen. The "good report" declared that they were able to so conquer. The first distrusted God and his promises; the second trusted him and accepted his promises in full measure.

Illustration. In the London Strand some years ago there was a series of pictures in each of which one element was omitted, and the readers were asked to guess what element was left out, and the change its presence would make. In one picture there appeared a man rushing forward with wild outstretched hands, while men and women were scattering in every direction to keep out of his way. He seemed like a homicidal lunatic escaped from an asylum, attacking a terrified and fleeing company. The element left out was merely a pocket handkerchief tied over his eyes. With this added the scene was transformed into a harmless game of

The element the cowardly spies left out was the presence and the power of God, and all that God had done for them in the past. It was an evil report of unbelief. They forgot that God was on their side, and that "one with God, is a majority." They dwelt on their own weakness and lack of resources, and forgot that all the resources of Almighty God were on their side. The good report of Caleb and Joshua took these into consideration, and their faith in God gave them courage to obey, though the way did seem blocked.

The Consequences. The punishment of this lack of faith was great. The ten men who brought the evil report died at once by the plague. All the adults who had had a voice in the decision were to perish in the wilderness. Only those who at the time of the refusal were thought to be likely to become the prey of the tribes in the land, and to suffer though they could not fight, were left alive to conquer the people their fathers were afraid to encounter.

The Courage of Faith. "Always and where faithless means foolish, faithless means cowardly." "Faith is the parent of wise courage, where duty is, which is God's voice, points, difficulties must not deter; when we have God's assurance of support, they are nothing." "We are cowed by opposing numbers, and forget the fact that the Bible is a long history of the triumph of very small minorities."

Church School News

By Prof. J. A. Garber, General Secretary

This new caption represents an agreement made by the officers of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren church at the late General Conference. They agreed that the current name "church school" rightly emphasizes the fact that the church's school meeting on Sunday belongs to the church. It further stresses the fact of the church's responsibility for such a school.

The Past Year

The officers were greatly encouraged with the gratifying reports of the past year's work. Brother Stuckey, our Field Secretary, informed us of the hearty reception accorded him in his tours among the churches, and assured us of a determined effort on the part of our workers generally to make their schools count for lasting good. The Treasurer's report, presented by Dr. Shively, revealed the largest White Gift offering in the history of our organized work.

The Educator

A fine interest was manifested in the church school session of Conference when two strong addresses were given. Brother O. C. Starn spoke on "Evangelism Through Religious Education" and Brother N. V. Leatherman discussed "Missions in the Sunday School." President Beachler closed the period with a gripping appeal for "Bigger and Better Church Schools." These fine messages along with other helpful articles may be found in the Brethren Educator. It is planned to make this monthly magazine increasingly helpful by adding to both general article and the lesson notes.

The Officiary

On the inside front cover page of The Educator the reader will find a complete list of our National Officers. Only a few changes were made. President Beachler continues his office for which he is so well qualified. Brother W. I. Duker of Elkhart, Indiana, was elected Vice President. Because of added responsibilities in connection with the College Endowment Campaign Dr. Martin Shively asked to be relieved as Treasurer of the National Sunday School Association and Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh was chosen for this position. He came to the college from Waterloo, Iowa, and has proven himself to be a fine church school worker in Ashland city and county. Prof. A. B. Cober of Berlin, Pennsylvania was elected Superintendent of the Adult Division and Mrs. H. M. Cook of Meyersdale was chosen Superintendent of the Home Department. Miss Etta Lichty of Waterloo had asked to be relieved of the latter position because of other heavy duties.

Plans for the Committees

By Rev. Robert P. Anderson

Something Simple and Just a Little Different. Try These Plans

SWEET REMEMBRANCES

For Sunshine Committee

It has usually been left to the flower committee to carry remembrances to shut-ins and old people, but the sunshine committee may also take a hand in this work, for a change.

One simple and beautiful way is to make up small packages or boxes containing candy, and carry the boxes to old folks or shut-ins. In every package, of course, there will be a message from the society, perhaps a Scripture passage (selected by the superintendent). Old people like candy as well as young folks, and they do not get so much of it.

WATCH THE CHILDREN

For Lookout Committees

Lookout committees that are alive watch for children of Junior age that come into the community or Sunday school, and invite them to attend the Junior meetings; but often they neglect the small folks in their own homes, or in homes in the street. The lookout committee should have a cradle-roll. As the children grow to Junior age, the lookout committee should go after them and invite them to come to the meetings.

A good plan is to have a special meeting each year to which all the younger children are invited. This may be either a regular Christian Endeavor meeting or a social. The aim is to make the children feel that they belong to the Junior society even before they begin to attend its meetings, and that as soon as they are old enough they will take their places as members. We must not let the children slip away from us.

MISSIONARY TABLEAUX

For Missionary Committees

One way of giving the Juniors a fine idea of the teaching of the missionary book they have been studying is to present in a series of tableaux the main scenes described in the book. The missionary committee and the superintendent together will prepare for this. The superintendent (or perhaps a worker from the Senior society) will write out the tableaux and arrange them. The Juniors will help to get the costumes, which will be very simple. They may practice their parts before the meeting when the tableaux are to be presented to the whole society. It may be desirable to give short speaking parts to some of the Juniors. In this way a very impressive missionary meeting may be arranged.

THE SOCIETY'S BIRTHDAY

For Birthday Committees

The birthday committee, of course, will remember the birthdays of the Juniors and send to each one a greeting, as well as make recognition of the birthday Junior in the meeting. A special prayer should be offered in the meeting for every Junior who has a birthday. But besides this, the birthday of the society should be remembered. Place a small bouquet on the table as a birthday offering to the society. Have an older person tell the story of how the society was formed. Read the names of the superintendents who have served it. Tell of some of those who have graduated into the Intermediate or Senior society. Sing a birthday song. A few touches like these will add interest to the meeting.

A WINTER AND SUMMER PARTY

For Social Committees

Supper should be served at this party. Have two tables, one for the Juniors whose birthdays fall in the first half of the year, or the summer half, and one for those whose birthdays fall in the latter half of the year, or the winter half. On the winter table have a small Christmas tree as a centerpiece; on the summer table, a bouquet of flowers. The decorations will be in keeping with the ideas of winter and summer. Have contests between the summer group and the winter group: a spelling-bee; a verse-finding bee; Christmas games; summer games, like skipping rope; football played with balloons, fans

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

Four Men Who Carried the Torch. Matt. 4:18-22

Last month, if you attended Junior Christian Endeavor on Torch Sunday, you had a very important lesson. Do you remember it? It was about Jesus, the Light of the World. All of these Torch-bearers who carried torches before the time of Jesus were preparing the way for him. Then Jesus came and his light was greater than any that had gone before. Jesus possessed all of the qualities that we have talked about. Jesus' light was so bright that men have been lighting their torches from his great Torch all these years and it still glows just as brightly as ever.

While Jesus was here on earth he gathered men around him. These men went with Jesus day after day and each day they would see the bright light of Jesus' qualities. Can you think what some of these qualities were? There was Helpfulness and Love and Faith and Prayer. Then there was Truth and Patience and Sympathy. Oh, the qualities of Jesus are too many for us to name, aren't they? Well, these men who went with Jesus caught a part of the great Light and their own torches burned brighter and brighter. Then you remember, Jesus was taken from them and they were left. At first, it seemed to them that they could not go on. Even after they knew that Jesus had risen from the dead showing that his Light was the true and living light which would shine forever, these people felt that they could not go forward without him. Then, Jesus sent his Spirit into their hearts and soon their torches were shining brightly again and they were going about telling people about the Light of the World.

Four of the men who had been with Jesus a great deal were two sets of brothers. Peter and Andrew were brothers and James and John were brothers. These men were very important in starting people out to tell the Gospel story. There was one special quality that was in the Torch of Peter that I think we should talk about. Peter possessed a quality that we have talked about before. Others may have had it but Peter showed it especially. This quality was broadmindedness. Do you know what that means? It means having the kind of mind that will be considerate of the views and the rights of others. It is the kind of mind that will try to give other people their place at all times. I'll tell you about Peter being broad-minded. But first, I want to ask you to try to think up the qualities that made these other Torches in our lesson burn bright. I'll give you a hint just for a little starter. All of them must have had Faith in Jesus for you see all of them were Jesus' followers and went about the world telling about him.

One time, the only people who knew about God were the Jews. When Jesus came he chose his helpers from the Jewish people and so when Jesus had gone away and left his helpers to carry the Torch over the world, a lot of them thought that the Light was only for the Jews. For a long time Peter felt this same way. Then one day, he had a dream that he could not understand. Later he was called into a Gentile home, that is a home that was not Jewish. There he was surprised to find that the people wanted to know about Jesus and the Light of the Spirit of Jesus shone among them. Then Peter realized that the Gentiles had just as much right to the Light of the World as the Jews, so he baptized these people. So Peter was the first man to be broad-minded enough to receive the Gentiles into the church.

A Japanese Missionary to Formosa Head Hunters

The head-hunting savages of Formosa had been very free from epidemic diseases until the Spanish Influenza struck them, as it did all other peoples twenty years ago. This great curse had come upon them, they argued, because of the Japanese occupation. They therefore swore vengeance and one day the Japanese community at Karenko was suddenly surprised by a savage attack from the head-hunters and revenge was secured when the savages carried away the heads of 26 Japanese.

Among these men that lost their lives in this savage attack was the father of Inosuke Inoue, then a student at the Seisho Gakuin (Bible School) in Kashiwaga Yodobashi, conducted by the Oriental Mission.

The Samurai way would have been to have sworn vengeance; to have gone among the head-hunters as a soldier or policeman and to have killed a number of them. Young Inoue however, was trying to follow Jesus Christ and he remembered how when Jesus was nailed to the cross he prayed for his enemies. Therefore Inosuke Inoue resolved to go to the head-hunters and teach them the Christian way of life.

In preparation for the work he studied medicine one year and learned many practical remedies and how to help in emergencies. With this preparation he went to the natives in the mountains of Formosa with a message of peace and good-will and a desire to help.

He found them very suspicious at first but gradually he won their confidence and found that they had many admirable qualities. Their idea of the Supreme Being is that of an "All-seeing eye" to see all the deeds of men. He sees such bad deeds as stealing, therefore there is no stealing among the members of the tribe.

The life was most simple and the hardships not a few so that his health broke down and he returned to Kyushu and spent three years in evangelistic work there.

When he had learned the language of one of the tribes called the "Taiyaru," he returned to the head-hunters, consisting of about 35,000 souls. There are still about 135,000 savages in the seven tribes.

Mr. Inoue spent seven years at a settlement in the mountains called "Karapai" and gave himself unstintedly to the people to help them in any practical way that he could and to teach them to know Christ and his Gospel. During all his time his work was carried on as a personal enterprise. While his work was a labor of love he did receive some gifts from the savages in return for his medical aid. With this and native fruits and occasional help from friends in Japan he managed to carry on in a life almost as simple as that of the natives.

Mr. Inoue has just published a study of the head-hunters of Formosa, and has just succeeded in getting a supporting committee organized through the cooperation of the Tokyo KyoKwa Doshi Kai. Among those who have thus taken the responsibility of securing financial support for Mr. Inoue's work are Mr. Hampei Nagao, Judge Watanabe, Dr. Takada, head of the Nanko Hospital, Mr. M. Tsuge, of the Japan Oil Co., Mr. B. Tada of the Taiwan Sugar Co., Mr. B.

Fukunaga of the Keisei Sha Publishing Company. This committee have undertaken to raise Yen 2,500.00 per year to support Mr. Inoue's self-sacrificing work.

Mr. Inoue told his story recently before 500 pupils of a public school of Tokyo at the invitation of the principal who introduced him as the Livingstone of Japan.—(From the World's Sunday School Association).

Our Relation to the New Turkey

(Excerpts of an address at the Conference on International Relations from the Christian Viewpoint. The author spent 16 years in the Near East and is said by church leaders to be an authority on that section of the world.)

"There is no more controversial subject before us today, than the question of what our relation to the new government of Turkey should be. It seems to be exceedingly difficult to lay aside old prejudices and the backward-looking habit and to believe that the intolerance and fanaticism that have characterized the Turk in the past can be really undergoing changes so remarkable that they leave us bewildered.

"Of deep significance, however, is the fact that workers in Turkey, whether in educational, missionary, philanthropic, financial or commercial work, are strongly in favor of the ratification by the United States of the treaty with Turkey. These are the people who have seen the most and understand most deeply and sympathetically what Turkey is trying to do.

"If the realities that have braced us in Turkey within the past three years had been prophesied five years ago we would have called them dreams of a disordered mind.

"Let us list some of the changes, far-reaching in their possibilities, without embellishment and without superlatives.

"The abolition of the Caliphate which has removed for all time the menace of Pan-Islam.

"The separation of the state from the domination of religion.

"The closing of the old Mosque schools, which were centers of fanatical teaching, and the reorganization and secularization of education.

"The adoption of a new code of laws, patterned on the Swiss, repudiating the authority of Islam.

"The branding of polygamy as illegal and the reorganization of the social life of Turkey on a basis of equality of the sexes.

"The translation of the Koran into Turkish.

"The adoption of the Western calendar, from the birth of Christ instead of the Hegira of Mohammed, a stepping forward six centuries from December 31, 1341, to January 1, 1926.

"The emancipation of women, endorsed by the government and recognized as an essential of progress.

"The attempt to come abreast of Western civilization as shown in drastic reforms in dress and in the fields of science, agriculture and economies.

"There is an intensity of nationalism in Turkey that we failed to understand. The Turks' new consciousness that they have been different and that their civilization has been behind that of the West makes them supersensitive to an unusual degree. But they have been persistent and fearless, braving the antagonism of conservative Islam and the criticism of the West. They are making mistakes, to be sure, and probably more will be made in the future. These are to be expected. Instead of scorn, ridicule and unbelief, should not our attitude be one of patience and understanding with this country that is showing its desire to move forward?

"In all history there has perhaps never been a movement that offered greater opportunity for Christian effort than the church has today in the Near East. The field is swept clean of traditions that bound it. A Moslem government has thrown aside the rule of Islam, has emancipated its women, and by its persistent desire for Western civilization has opened the way for the entrance of Christian ideals.

"I hold no brief for the Turk and his deeds of the past. I do hold the strongest brief for the future peace of the world which will come the more surely from our recognition and appreciation of the efforts of a nation to throw off the old shackles of ignorance and fanaticism and to move up into the civilization of the world.

"The backward look that shuts Turkey out will strengthen misunderstandings, race prejudices and intolerances. The forward look that draws Turkey in is toward the future peace of the world and will prove the answer of Christian influence in the Near East."

The report of the finance division of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church shows that this denomination has during the past three years given $7,110,000 to colleges and to Christian work at state universities. In the South, West Virginia with one college and one university center has pledged $350,000, and Arkansas with one college pledged $30,000.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL-ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Meyersdale and Summit Mills Churches Make a Splendid Gift to Ashland

These two churches are served by one pastor and are only about four miles apart. This group at one time consisted of three churches, which included Salisbury. Many of the members of the last named place moved away and only a small group was left, so that church property was sold and the work centered in Meyersdale and Summit Mills. Meyersdale is a thriving town of about seven thousand. We have here a fine brick church and parsonage. Summit Mills is a country church, located in a thickly settled community. Brother Herbert Goughnour is the pastor of both churches. Meyersdale is located in Somerset county and you can find people in most all our congregations that can trace their ancestors back to this county. The pastor and people gave me every consideration and I rejoice with them in the support given to our college in the campaign. Here like all the mining sections in Pennsylvania, was suffering financial reverses and business depression.

The Meyersdale church had recently spent quite a sum of money in church improvement and remodeling their pipe organ, but did not hesitate in doing their best for Ashland. The total amount of the Meyersdale gift was $2,368.04.

The Summit Mills congregation which is small in numbers, put the campaign over the biggest for any church of its size yet this was due to some large gifts, the total being $2,632.00.

The combined gift of the Meyersdale and Summit Mills congregation was $5,000.04. This we consider a mighty fine piece of work for these people. So they boost the dial around for another $5,000.00 mark.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The enrollment in the college department is about what it was last year at this time, 285. The Seminary enrollment is also about the same as usual. We have had some new enrollments in this department which promise well. Miss Minnie Deeter one of our missionaries to Africa enrolled recently for a year's work. Any friend who wants to help any of our missionaries while in school should write to me.

The Saturday courses will be started the first Saturday in October and will be as large as usual according to present indications.

Professor and Mrs. Anspach are now at the University of Michigan where Professor Anspach will take work this year.

The Campaign

The local campaign is getting under way. We have had a good many preliminary meetings and are at this writing trying to organize the county. No one who has not gone through such a campaign can properly appreciate the great amount of work involved. Mr. W. L. Miller of New York, who is here to organize the work, takes over the main burden. He came here as a stranger to the school but in the short time he has been here he has become enthusiastic about our claims, ability, and the general outlook for success. The campaign will be over by the end of October.

The prospects for a good year in athletics are good. We have a good group of men this year. You will want to read the Collegian to get the results of the games.

IMPORTANT FACTS ABOUT THE PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Conference will be held at Berlin, Pennsylvania, beginning Monday evening, October 4 and closing Thursday evening, October 7. It will be ONE DAY SHORTER this year than in the past. The Berlin church is well equipped to entertain the conference and urgently invites all to come. Night's lodging and breakfast will be furnished free in the homes. Dinner and lunch will be served at the church for a reasonable cost.

ALL REGULAR REPORTS are to be given on Tuesday morning and that in writing. This includes Statistician's, District Evangelist's, Ministerial Examining Board, District Missions, and all other regular reports. Some churches wait until conference to bring their district missions apportionment. You MUST have it in the hands of the Secretary, Brother Trent, by Tuesday morning or it will not be included in the report.

No church will be acknowledged in membership nor her pastor nor delegates be given membership in the conference unless her full conference membership dues are paid. This is a rule the Conference Membership will strictly enforce this year without exceptions. Carelessness will not be excusable along this line.

The Program is one of the strongest possible. The Committee has been at work for six months planning it. It is not a hastily thrown together affair, but a definitely planned program. We believe it to be a well rounded, instructive, inspirational program that will care for all the varied interests of the district.

Now, each speaker and each organization has been assigned a definite period on the program and will be expected to stay within that period. Discourtesies of running over on another's time will not be allowed. Please plan your messages accordingly and avoid embarrassments.

Come prepared to secure a vision of larger things for the District and to vote bigger, forward looking, programs of expansion and apportionments. Bring your problems, but bring your faith and courage also.

Moderator, CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

A NOTICE

The purpose of this notice is two-fold. First, to remind the good people of our Pennsylvania District that our Conference will be held in Berlin October 4-7. The Berlin church is preparing to take care of a large delegation. Let the pastors urge their people and come with a full quota of delegates. Second, to give directions. Some have been inquiring as to how to reach us. Berlin is on a highway connecting the National and Lincoln, leaving the former near Grantsville and the latter at Jennertown. Those traveling on the Pennsylvania railroad will come through from Johnstown on bus. You can leave Johnstown as late as 5:30 P. M. and be in time for the evening session. Those traveling on the B. & O. will come from Meyersdale or Garrett—the latter is nearer—on the bus. If any come in from the west on train No. 16, miss the bus at Garret and will phone me from there, we will send a car for you. We are praying for a great conference.

Berlin, Pa. W. C. BENSHOFF.

CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN PLANNING TO SERVE THE CAUSE OF WORLD PEACE

Our Church and World Peace

Among the outstanding acts of our last Annual Conference was the decision "To instruct our General Welfare Board to prepare a statement of our church's opportunities to serve the cause of world peace." This should lead to crystallizing the best thought of the Brotherhood on this question, which is one of the most vital and timely questions of our generation.

There is one way in which the situation of the church of our day in relation to this question differs from that of the church of our forefathers: in the former period of our church this was not held to be a practical question. It was then far from being an issue in the affairs of any nation. It was then purely "academic," and therefore, of no practical interest to the general public. This was the light in which this question was held in the eyes of the people generally. But at the present time how astonishingly different is the situation! World peace is now one of the foremost questions of the day in every civilized country in the world, and in our own nation is rapidly becoming a public issue—or political issue, if you please. In my own State, Illinois, the leading issue between two of our recent candidates for the United States Senate was the question of being for or against the World Court. Even down to the election of aldermen in Chicago this issue came to the front. "No World Court for George Harding," read a big street banner in Chicago last spring.

How, then, does the situation of our church today in respect to war differ from the situation of our church of yesterday? Is it not in that we are forced to face the question in the form of a practical issue? Only two days ago in the assembly of the League of Nations at Geneva, when a statement was made that Germany's entrance into the League of Nations would undoubtedly cause controversies, the quick retort was made by a leading statesman: "It is better to have a battle with words than a battle with bullets." This puts the issue in clear-cut terms. Differences of opinion between countries are bound to exist; indeed, must be expected to increase in number as the nations become more closely associated in their dealings with each other. How, then, are these differences of opinion to be settled—with words (reason and justice) or with bullets and poison gas and liquid fire? In other words, by the operation of law applied by the World Court, or by the war system, which our own country is the last to give up in favor of the World Court? Our own nation is being forced to take a stand on this issue. Is our church going to be forced to take a stand on this question? Or is our church going to consider this issue in the light of an opportunity to declare her position on this question, as the champion of Christ's teaching on the subject of taking the sword, and of regard for human life?

What statement will the General Welfare Board prepare as setting forth the church's opportunities to serve the cause of world peace? Perhaps the Board might be aided in the preparation of this statement by those who have been attempting constructive thinking along this line. There must be a number of such thinkers; for instance, some in the church which originated this query—the Harrisonburg (Virginia) church.—George Fulk, in The Gospel Messenger.

THE DOUBTER

Yes, Jim was a doubter, and gen'rally speakin',

I never boost doubters a bit,
For faith is the virtue I'm prayerfully seekin',

And doubt in my creed doesn't fit.

But any unb'liever like Jim wuz, God bless him!

His doubtin' most gladly I'll sing.
Quite certain 'twill never react and distress him

And leave in his bosom a sting.

When anyone "whispered" some neighbor or other

Had gone, "it was rumored," astray,
Jim would ask, "Do you know?" and the story would smother;

"I doubt it!" he coldly would say.

And his doubts were so chillin to gossip and scandal

That few ever tackled him twice.
For findin' they couldn't use Jim for a handle,

Their "talkin'" would end in a trice.

Yes, Jim wuz a doubter, as I wuz a-sayin'
"Tales" had to be proven to him.

And while for more faith all my life I've been prayin',

I'll boost any doubter like Jim.

—Philip Burroughs Strong, in "The Christian Evangelist."

CULTURE OF GREECE AND CROSS OF CHRIST

It is interesting to observe how through all the centuries Christians have held to the Cross. Very early Christians have felt the impact of Greek culture and the influence of Greek thought. The friends of Christianity themselves did their utmost to turn it into a philosophy congenial with the philosophies of the day. But there were innumerable simple-minded people who had found that Christ and his Cross had power to transform their characters and instincts, and they clung to the Cross as the great rock foundation against which the flood beat in vain. Tertullian pointed out that men did not care to die for a compromise between the faith of the church and philosophies of the heathen world. I remember that Bishop Phillips Brooks says somewhere that the easy faiths are always the weak faiths. And it has always been true that when Christianity has yielded to the temptation to let itself down to the level of popular thought it has soon lost its power to stir men deeply and to change the lives of sinners.—Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, in The Missionary Evangel.

SUDS

If a man has washed his face it isn't necessary to leave some of the soapsuds on it as an evidence of the fact. The absence of dirt, rather than the presence of soapsuds, is the all-sufficient proof. And if the preacher has dipped into science and philosophy in his studies, he will not need to smear his discourse with technical terms or direct references to the text-book or names of authorities in order to afford evidence that he has invaded those fields. Unless he can show evidence of it in clear thinking and in the clearer light he is able to throw upon life's everyday problems, the scientific or philosophical soapsuds will not help him or his cause. The message may well carry the clean face of genuine scholarship, without the suds. When the suds are made too conspicuous—by constant reference to books and writers and the use of technical terms—it is pretty safe to conclude that they are used to hide the dirt.—Religious Telescope.

WHEN YOU HAVE READ ALL THE REST APPEALING TO REASON

"Request" is a stronger word than "command." However little it may sound so, it does work out that way. Ask the employer who has made the test, the one who has taken his employees into his confidence, who has requested their co-operation in elimination of waste, saving of time and other elements of profit and loss. The manager of a Cleveland hotel says he effected a forty per cent saving in the breakage of crockery and glassware by taking the hotel employees into his confidence and securing their co-operation in a reasonable effort to save and stop the waste. Invariably it works out that way. Here lies the difference between appealing to reason and unreason, to sympathy and indifference. A request suggests equality, a command, inferiority. Business that has made this discovery is far ahead of the other kind.—The Continent.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Two Little Shoes

"Is she asleep?" whispered the Left Shoe from under the edge of the bed.

"Sound asleep," answered Right Shoe, who was where she could see little golden-haired Betty, now sleeping soundly in her little white bed.

"My, but we've had a busy day!" laughed Left Shoe. "I could hardly wait for night to come to talk it over with you, dear. I wanted to ask if you saw all the things I did. But of course you did."

"I don't believe I missed a thing," whispered Right Shoe. "No, not a thing in all that wonderful park. It kept me busy, though, I can tell you, keeping up with so many interesting things. I did enjoy the merry-go-round, didn't you? And the swings and the seesaws were such fun. But the slide! O, that quite took my breath away! We were first up so high and came down so fast. It really was the most fun of all. I was afraid, though, I was going to get skinned up. Those poor Brown Shoes—that belong to Bobby Jones! How sorry I feel for them! They must have a hard life."

"Why, I didn't notice them," answered Left Shoe. "Isn't Bobby Jones just full of play? Don't ever be sorry for any of the Shoe family if they belong to a child who is full of play. I mean a child who loves to romp and skip and run. You know yourself, dear, that shoes enjoy helping the child run fast and skip lightly. Why, we have so much fun when Betty plays as she does."

"O no, it isn't that," said Right Shoe. "They would love it if he were just full of play. You see, I got acquainted with them at the shoe shop yesterday when we were there to be half-soled. They were there for the same purpose, and I had quite a long talk with them while you were with the shoe man. I haven't had a chance to tell you about it. They said that he made them do so many things that were unkind, and they were so unhappy. He made them step on little ant houses after the dear little ants had worked so hard to make their home. He kicked a little dog and stepped on a cat's tail. They said they wouldn't mind so much how he treated them if only he wouldn't make them do unkind things. He has almost scorched them several times putting them too close to the stove to warm his feet. He always steps right into the muddiest places, so that they just can't keep themselves looking clean. They wouldn't mind so much if he wouldn't make them step on dear little ant hills and do things like that. Why, when his mother called him the other day, he ran and hid and wouldn't go in. They tried so hard to take him in the house, but he wouldn't go for a long time."

"Poor dears!" sighed Left Shoe. "Aren't we fortunate to belong to such a dear little girl as Betty! Don't you enjoy helping her skip along when she goes so cheerfully on an errand for her mother? When she runs to meet her daddy, she is always happy and bright. She is loving and kind to everybody. She has never made us do one unkind thing.

I was so excited the other day, but I might have known better than to worry a minute. A beetle was lying on his back and couldn't get up. As we passed by it I felt myself being lifted right over him. O, I thought for a minute that Betty was going to make me step right on him! Of course I should have known she wouldn't do a thing like that. She only turned him over gently with her foot, and he was so thankful that dear Betty—"

"Sh-h!" said Right Shoe, "isn't she waking up?"

"No, only turning over in her sleep," whispered Left Shoe, peeping up into the little white bed. "But we'd better go to sleep ourselves, dear; we must be ready for our dear Betty in the morning. I heard her mother say she was going to take her to see her grandmother tomorrow. That means a happy and a busy day for us, you know. Good night, dear."

"Good night and pleasant dreams," answered Right Shoe, half asleep already. -- Our Little Ones.

CHURCH vs. CONGREGATION

A crowd is a congregation. A congregation is not necessarily a church. To gather a congregation, a mere crowd, in a single place is one thing. To organize that crowd, to weld it together in Christian fellowship, to mold it into an achieving church, is another thing, and a much greater thing. You can have a congregation without any effective organization, without real fellowship or sense of cohesion; but you cannot have a church without these elements. A congregation is a mass of unorganized material. A church is that same material after it has been "fitly framed together", built "into a holy temple—a habitation of God in the Spirit."—United Presbyterian.

being used to strike them instead of the feet. Use some of the common games as well. The book, "Successful Socials," contains a lot of information about socials and games for them.

A DOLLAR MEETING

For Prayer-Meeting Committees

This meeting should be a contest between two sides. First make out a list of points to be given for various things done by the Juniors in the meeting: one point for a sentence prayer, one point for reading a clipping, five points for giving a thought in the speaker's own words, five for giving a recitation. Call the points cents instead of points. See which side can make the most money in the meeting by piling up the larger number of cents. Send out invitations to attend this meeting. On the cards of invitation draw a dollar sign. Announce the meeting as a dollar meeting. The new name and the idea of making money will make the meeting a little different from the ordinary.

Some Plans

Inasmuch as Brother Stuckey plans to resume his school work at Princeton he will not be engaged in active field work this year. He was continued in office as a voluntary worker, and holds himself in readiness to render such service as he may find possible. He did a very commendable piece of work in the field during the past year, and we, as well as our workers who learned to appreciate him and his work, are happy to know that he will continue to aid the work with his pen (or typewriter) and voice. The other officers and departmental leaders stand ready to assist schools within reach of them. Pastors and superintendents will do well to avail themselves of this personal aid. In addition it is planned to print some leaflets dealing with various phases of the work.

And Now

It is important that we get started promisingly with a real rally day service in every one of our churches. Make the watchword "Bigger and Better Schools" and show such a worthy objective can be realized in each school.

IN THE SHADOW

YETLEY—Myrtle Huldah Haynes was born at Garwin, Iowa, September 4, 1904, and departed this life at the Deaconess Hospital, Marshalltown, Iowa, August 10, 1926, aged 21 years, 11 months and 6 days.

She accepted her Lord and united with the Carlton Brethren church in November, 1915. She had always taken an active part in the church and Sunday school work. At the time of her death she was a teacher of the Junior class. Her class will miss her for they all loved her. I am sure her life will go on as an uplifting influence in the lives of these boys and girls for her example was always the best.

She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, father and mother, five sisters, one brother, and a host of other relatives and friends. The writer was called and funeral services were conducted in the church, assisted by Rev. Carl Helser, just as she had directed.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MACKEY-EDWARDS—On Tuesday evening, September 7, 1926, at the home of the bride's grandfather in Portland, Oregon, the wedding of Mr. Hattie Myron Mackey and Miss Grace Allera Edwards was solemnized. Only the members of the immediate families and a few close friends of the bride witnessed the ceremony. The contracting parties were attended by Miss Neva Edwards, sister of the bride, and Mr. Ralph Mackey, brother of the groom. On the morning following the ceremony the happy couple left for an extended auto trip through Oregon and California. After their return they are to make their home near Sunnyside, Washington. These young people have many friends who wish them every happiness. Ceremony by the writer. J. C. BEAL.

MINNICH-MINKLER—At high noon on August 4, 1926, at the Commercial Hotel, Yakima, Washington, Mr. Gerald Minnich and Miss Vernice Minkler, both of Sunnyside, Washington, were united in marriage in the presence of the members of the immediate families. Mr. Minnich is a member of the First Brethren Church, Sunnyside, Washington, and Mrs. Minnich is a member of the Baptist Church. They will make their home in Sunnyside where Mr. Minnich is in the employ of the Sheller Motor Company. Their many friends wish them every happiness. Ceremony by the writer. J. C. BEAL.

LICHTY-FUERST—On the evening of August 7, 1926, at the home of the bride in Grandview, Washington, occurred the marriage of Mr. Frank P. Lichty and Miss Emma Fuerst. A large gathering of the immediate families and old friends witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Lichty were the recipients of many beautiful gifts. Both the contracting parties are members of the First Brethren church, Sunnyside, Washington. The bride, for a number of years, has been a most successful teacher in our Sunday school. Mr. and Mrs. Lichty are to reside on a ranch near Sunnyside. The best wishes of the entire church and a host of friends are theirs. Ceremony by J. C. BEAL.

A REPLY TO THE CATHOLIC BISHOPS ON THE MEXICAN SITUATION

By Manuel G. Preto, Mexican Consul

In the columns of the press on September 16th appeared a statement by the Catholic Bishops of the United States in which the administration of President Calles was referred to as "a tyrannical government." The same article contained the statement that the Mexican Catholics are "the real champions in Mexico of religious and civil liberty."

In the interest of fair play I ask place in the press of the United States to place certain facts before its people.

The only possible basis upon which the Catholic Bishops of this country can charge the Mexican government with being a tyrannical one is the insistence upon President Calles' part that the sovereign will of the Mexican people as expressed in its constitution must be obeyed by everyone, irrespective of their position in society; that the Arch-bishops and Bishops of the Catholic Church in Mexico must obey the law just as the humblest citizen must obey it.

No statement has ever been made by the Catholic Hierarchy of Mexico that the laws which President Calles insists must be obeyed are in any way extra-legal. They have, however, arrogated to themselves the right to say that these laws should never have been placed in the constitution; and not only have they refused to obey them, but some of the Bishops have issued statements saying that the laws of the church are superior to the civil laws of the country. It was this attitude of the Catholic Hierarchy that brought about the present so-called "religious crisis."

The statement of the Catholic Bishops of the United States that the Catholic Hierarchy in Mexico is "fearlessly resisting armed force in defense of the inalienable rights of man," is not in consonance with the known facts. Not one priest in Mexico was driven out of a single place of public worship. Not an attempt was made by the government to interfere with the spiritual functions of the church. Upon President Calles' refusal to abrogate the provisions of the constitution, which in his oath of office he had sworn to obey, the Catholic Hierarchy of Mexico left the churches and refused to administer in public places of worship the consolations of religion to the people.

As to the assertion that the Catholic Hierarchy of Mexico are "the real champions of religious and civil liberty," I beg leave to submit the following facts, all of which can be verified in histories of Mexico, written, not by Mexicans, but by well known writers of the United States, such as the historian, Bancroft.

A quarter of a century after the people of the United States had achieved their independence and founded a government in which church and state were absolutely divorced, the Bishops of Mexico were still conducting the Inquisition.

A half century after independence had come to the United States, the Bishops of Mexico were supporting the forces of reaction in that country which guaranteed to the church special privileges, including responsibility only to ecclesiastical courts and recognition of the Catholic as the only religion allowed to be taught in Mexico.

Nearly a century and a half after the United States had become a free nation, the Mexican Bishops were supporting the militarist, Victoriano Huerta, and their spokesman in the United States, Bishop Francis C. Kelley, was publicly denouncing the presence of the Protestant ministers in Mexico as an insult to its people and charging them with making atheists and infidels of those influenced by their teachings.

These facts disprove absolutely the claims in the statement of the American Catholic

Youth

We have heard the trumpets calling
Youth.

We have seen their proud reply,
Laughing as they leapt to die,
Boyhood in their battle cry.

We have heard the World's tears falling
For slain Youth.

Lads transfigured to redeemers, Youth,
In a moment grown sublime
Saved the smitten hope of Time,
Cleared the way that life might climb
On toward God—our saints, our dreamers,

Holy Youth.

Still a sterner strife is calling Youth.
Madness beats upon the gates
Of old selfishness; age prates,
Cavils, queries, hesitates,
Nearer roars the storm, appalling
All but Youth.

—Youth that hears diviner voices,
Youth

That has faith in brotherhood,
Courage to attempt a good
Only visioned yet, that would Build a world where life rejoices, Generous Youth.

Still we hear the trumpets calling
Youth

On to heights beyond the tread
Of the Past, though brightly led
By young spirits of the dead,
Souls that sprang from bodies falling, Shining Youth.

—Katherine Lee Bates.

Bishops that the Catholic Bishops in Mexico are "the real champions of religion liberty."

As to the record of the Mexican Bishops in Civil Liberty, the following incontrovertible facts are submitted:

On the 16th of September, 1810, a humble Catholic priest raised the banner of revolt against the Spanish tyrants. His name was Father Hidalgo. For this offence he was excommunicated by the Catholic Bishops, and suffered a most cruel death at the hands of the Spanish rulers. Another Catholic priest, Father Hidalgo. For this offense he was excommunicated and killed.

When the Spanish power fell, the Catholic Bishops of Mexico backed the usurper, Itur-bide, who proclaimed himself Emperor and continued the special privileges of the church. For the next forty years the Mexican Church Hierarchy, as a matter of absolute record, supported every reactionary government and attacked every liberal one.

When, in spite of all they could do, it seemed that the liberal elements in Mexico were to triumph under Juarez, the Archbishop of Mexico went to Europe intrigued with Napoleon Bonaparte III, brought a French army to Mexican soil, and placed Maximilian Archduke of Austria, on the throne of Mexico as Emperor, supported by the bayonets of an alien army. For years the soil of Mexico was drenched with the blood of its people by this French army, whose presence there would have been impossible without the influence of the Catholic Hierarchy.

Always their record has been one of opposition to all enlightenment that the statesmen of Mexico struggled to bring to his people. Always has the Catholic Hierarchy been arrayed on the side of the huge land owners, who kept the peons in a state of virtual slavery. Every liberal principle has been anathema to them. The enlightened social legislation which the Obregon and Calles administrations have sought to put into operation has found in the Mexican Hierarchy the most bitter opponents. Being themselves seekers of special privileges for the church, they have championed the special privileges of the great land owners, the financial interests, and that large industrialists there are in Mexico.

How little care they for the physical interests of a people impoverished by ten long years of revolutionary struggle is shown by their deliberate backing of what they term a "boycott." The announced intention of this plan was to create financial and industrial chaos in Mexico. They helped thus to compel the government to continue the special privileges which the Hierarchy has never ceased to struggle for.

What the Pastor Owes the Church

Last week we considered the subject, "What the Church Owes the Pastor," and promised a further consideration of the complementary subject, "What the Pastor Owes the Church." It is profitable to have a general understanding of the mutual responsibilities of pastor and people. The pastor naturally feels the need of and yearns for an understanding on the part of his parishioners of their relationship and responsibility to him and the work in which God has made him a leader. This situation will be frankly faced on the part of the people most quickly and honestly when he is willing to acknowledge freely and sincerely what he owes to them. And it is with the purpose of encouraging such a frank acknowledgment of the mutual obligations of the parties to this sacred relationship that we offer these suggestions.

In the first place the pastor owes it to his people to keep himself unspotted from the world, to live a life that is holy and blameless in all respects. He should keep himself separated from the world and free from worldliness. If any one is to respond to the divine pleading to "come ye out from among them and be ye separate" and "touch not the unclean thing," surely it is the pastor of the flock. To him comes first and with supreme force and insistence those reproofing words of the Great Apostle, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Nothing is more fundamental and indispensable to a successful ministry than just this. It is the sheerest folly for any one to presume to be a leader of a people of God without first having decided fully and definitely to break with all worldliness and carnality and to live the life of the Spirit. And not only must he keep his own conscience free but he must be regardful of the consciences of others; he must be blameless. It is easy to say that the preacher has every right that the layman has to mingle with the things of this world, and from the standpoint of strict justice, possibly he has. But he has a higher responsibility as a leader in righteousness to seek to keep ahead of his people in spirit and conduct, to live above the commonly accepted standards, that he may be able to point them the way and be an example unto them. From this standpoint he has much less right than his members to indulge in questionable amusements, to be a party to an unworthy enterprise, to be actuated by ulterior motives, to be given to gossiping or carelessness of speech, to be inconsiderate of the feelings of others, disregardful of his promises, neglectful of his financial obligations, or extravagant in his expenditures. In every way he should seek to walk circumspectly, scrupulously blameless, a true light shining in the darkness of the world, to the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. Every pastor owes it to his church to be that sort of a man.

He owes it to his church to be wholly devoted to the work of the Christian ministry. He should feel the compulsion of Paul, Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel. He should feel himself divinely called and ordained to his holy office, and it should be the supreme purpose and ambition of his life to be able to give the finest possible account of his ministry. Nothing should be allowed to divert his attention from his high office, nor to divide his interest and effort. He should feel himself dedicated and consecrated to the one great work and should concentrate his whole being upon it. Paul's slogan should be the constant aim and determination of his life, "This one thing I do." There is little chance for failure when a minister of the Gospel is wholly devoted to his ministry, and that is what the church has a right to expect.

The pastor has an obligation to keep his mind fresh, vigorous and growing. He should be continually enlarging his vision, increasing his knowledge, broadening his sympathy and searching deeper into the wells of truth. One of the undisputed claims of the pastor for an adequate salary is to this very end, that he might be able to secure for himself the needed equipment for a constantly growing mental life. And the man who fails to insist upon this right, or to use it when he has it, is cutting short his future and lessening his usefulness. That man will certainly be held responsible for depriving the church and the Kingdom of his largest possible service. "Feed my sheep", says Jesus to his undershepherds, but how can they when they starve themselves mentally? Who knows how many a lean congregation owes its condition to a lack of mental energy on the part of the pastor?

The pastor should take care that his soul is kept growing and expanding and becoming richer in grace continually. Only so can he lead his people to a higher plane of spiritual experience, and only so can he be accounted worthy in the sight of God. We are sometimes inclined to become so professional in our work that we all but lose the sense of our own spiritual need. We forget that we are but humble children of God, whose only hope lies in keeping our souls struggling toward the shining goal, just the same as those whom we lead. There is a tendency against which we must guard, of studying God's word merely for the sake of getting some new truth to pass on to those whom we are to teach, without taking the time to prayerfully meditate upon it and endeavoring to build it into our own lives. It is primarily a problem of keeping conscious of our own need and of maintaining a thoroughly sincere attitude in our devotions and a never-ceasing hunger after the righteousness of God. Such a desire will not encourage, nor permit him to become neglectful of the spiritual welfare of others; it will make him more concerned, and he will be less professional and more sincere in his efforts.

Furthermore he must keep the flame of evangelistic fervor burning in his soul and seek to spread the fire into the hearts of his people. The church must never cease to share the holy passion of Christ for the saving of the lost—that is its great mission, but we cannot be surprised that it wanes when the pastor's heart cools in this regard. That outgoing, seeking, yearning, wooing spirit that pervaded the life of Jesus expresses the very heart of the Gospel, and he who has lost this, has lost the real life and power of it.

An outstanding obligation of the pastor is to fellowship freely and frankly in the homes and social life of his people, entering into their tasks and problems, sharing their joys and sorrows, encouraging them in the Christian way and inspiring them with Christian ideals and ambitions. The pastoral duties constitute an exceedingly big field of ministerial opportunities and responsibilities, and they are as varied as they are large. He who fails here, fails at one of the most strategic points of his ministry, and denies the church of one of its most important means of growth. Sometimes we hear a lament because of the heavy demands of the churches for this type of service, but that very demand points to the vital need of it. Jesus himself set the example with a personal ministry of remarkable success, and from that day to this that personal touch has never ceased to occupy an important place in the church's program, when it has been characterized by vitality, aggressiveness and growth. It is an essential part of the pastor's work and the church has a right to insist on it.

"Reprove, rebuke, with all longsuffering", that is a part of the pastor's responsibility, though a part which no one likes to be called upon to discharge. But there are times when the reproof must be given, and even the rebuke administered, but it must be done in love and kindness and by a heart that is full of sympathetic understanding and patience. And here it is that the fellowship and intimate relationship that is built up between pastor and people by means of the personal contact or pastoral work, serves him well and enables him to carry out such disciplinary measures as are necessary with that wisdom, tactfulness and kindly concern that increases the chances of success many fold.

The great function and responsibility of the minister of the Gospel is to preach. Everybody knows that, of course, and it would be unnecessary to mention it in this connection except to say two things about it. First, the preacher owes it to his people to preach a full Gospel, and second, to preach it in such a way that Jesus and his great work will become outstandingly real and powerful, filling the whole horizon of the worshippers, while the preacher remains in the background unnoticed. It is no easy matter to keep self in obscurity. The tendency is to let self stand out so prominently that Jesus himself is scarcely seen. Or the sermon bulks so large that the Gospel story is obscured. That is human nature, but it spoils the preaching and makes of it a vain show, wholly unsatisfying. The hungry souls of men want to see Jesus and not the preacher; they want to hear his message of hope and consolation and not the wisdom of man; they want to be thrilled by the story of the cross and not by any feats of oratory. And they have a right to the kind of preaching that will satisfy.

And finally (though we have omitted for want of space many things we had in mind to say), the pastor owes it to his people to intercede for them before the throne of grace. Every earnest pastor does this, but we all need to ask with the disciples of old, Lord, teach us to pray. We need more earnestly and constantly to implore God in behalf of those intrusted to our care. The people possibly do not depend on, nor desire the exercise of the minister's priestly functions as they once did, but he must not, and will not, permit it to die out. So long as we have the record of the deadly earnest intercession of Moses and the incomparable high-priestly prayer of our Lord, and so long as we have faith in the divine promises and such evidence of human need, the true shepherds of the Lord's flocks will continue to intercede in their behalf. So, may God help us all to the kind of pastors the churches have a right to demand, and help the churches to do their full duty to their pastors, for the sake of the Kingdom's progress.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. C. F. Yoder gives encouraging news regarding the work at Huinca Renanco, in the Argentine, where, as a result of a week's meeting, eleven confessed Christ, and the love feast was observed with forty communicants present. At Rio Cuarto two publicly accepted Christ and a number await baptism.

Brother J. L. Kimmel, pastor of the mission church at Fort Wayne, Indiana, notifies us that his address is changed from 918 East Rudisill Boulevard to 535 East Leith Street, Fort Wayne, Indiana. Those interested please take notice and make the change on your own mailing list.

Brother Glenn Carpenter, prominent lay leader of the Ardmore church of South Bend, Indiana, reports the holding of Home Coming Day and the change of pastors on that day. Brother B. H. Flora, who has served the church well for more than a year, retires and turns the work over to Brother Edgar Duker, who is to give the church every Sunday service. Brother N. V. Leatherman of the First church was one of the preachers of the day.

The Ohio conference program is to be found in this issue and some good things are in store for those who will be privileged to attend. Churches ought to see to it that they have their full quota of delegates started on their way to Fremont on Tuesday, October 19, and instruct them to stay throughout the conference. The pastor of the entertaining church, Brother S. C. Henderson, gives some instructions as to how to reach Fremont in a special notice.

We are reproducing a pastoral letter sent out by Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor of the Warsaw, Indiana, church, to his parishioners, because it is a good letter for any church and is an excellent plea to increased loyalty and activity, of which all our churches stand in need. Accompanying this letter was a splendid picture (an electrotype reproduction) of the entire Grisso family. We bespeak for them the loyal cooperation of the Warsaw church in their forward movement.

From the Bedford county circuit in Pennsylvania we are pleased to have another of Brother W. S. Crick's quarterly reports. He is able to show a steady progress in all three churches of his parish. At Raystown the work was strengthened by one addition by baptism and two by reconsecration. The Bible school work at both New Enterprise and Yellow Creek is being strengthened. We appreciate Brother Crick's regular and excellent reports, and we hope a goodly number of our pastors may catch the spirit and write often.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, reports his canvass in the Berlin church of Pennsylvania, where he found a very loyal and sacrificing spirit manifest. This splendid church has recently built a noble sanctuary at a cost of $65,000, but they did what they could for the college nevertheless. Brother W. C. Benshoff is the loyal and able pastor of this people. Their gift was $905.79. The Listie church, which is being served by Brother Walter Nowag, who carries this work along with his secular work. This church subscribed $250, which is good considering their numbers and financial strength. A total of $1155.79 is added to the endowment fund this week, which makes the grand total $70,632.63.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, one of our most regular correspondents and who always writes an interesting letter, tells of his vacation trip and of the various points of interest that came within the scope of that trip. A church is wise that makes possible to its pastor such a profitable vacation trip. Not only the pastor but the church benefits thereby, and we hope more of our pastors will find it possible to avail themselves of such privileges. When Brother Carpenter and his good wife returned they found the church redecorated, due to the initiative and financial strength of the ladies' organization of the church.

Brother R. A. Hazen, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio Mission Board, informs us that the payments on apportionments have been coming in splendidly from the churches. However there are several that are back somewhat and we hope they will make an effort to clear the slate before the Ohio Conference at Fremont. The actual situation will be reported and placed before the conference and you will not want your church to be shown up as being in debt. The only way to avoid such embarrassment is to pay up, or make arrangements with Brother Hazen for the payment, before Conference.

Brother F. C. Vanator, the energetic pastor of the Canton, Ohio, Brethren church reports the laying of the cornerstone for the new church plant which is in the process of erection. This congregation has made very commendable growth in recent years and with the larger equipment which this new church will make possible, and the very prospective field in which they are situated and which they are doing their best to take possession of, the future is bright indeed. Dr. R. R. Teeter, as previously stated in these columns, gave the special address of the day and other ministers assisted in the services. Brother Vanator is proving himself an able leader and his people are giving fine response. The prayers of the brotherhood are requested for this work.

You will be interested in President Jacobs' news of the college this week. He makes further statement regarding the burning of the gymnasium and that arrangements are being made to carry forward the athletic program of the year notwithstanding this severe loss. It occurs to us that this misfortune which the college has suffered ought to cause the brotherhood to come forward with financial support in a way that will wipe out the handicap and cause the disaster to turn out to be a blessing in disguise. Nothing is more vital to the life and future of our church than our church school, and it would be to turn this disaster into calamity if we should allow it to be the means of hindering Ashland College in its development and holding it back from its large place of service in the church and the world. It appears that this incident is going to have a quickening effect upon the local campaign, and if so, surely it ought to have a like effect on the still more important campaign in the brotherhood.

GENERAL ARTICLES

One In Christ

By N. V. Leatherman

Christ prayed in his great intercessory prayer, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are. . . . Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one."

Certainly this short quotation is sufficient to influence our minds and hearts to a certainty of Christ's desire for the unity of his followers. This is a day when much is being said about church union. Hence we believe our subject is a point at issue. There are some communities where denominational lines are being entirely eliminated in order to build a union of churches. The Scripture above is very often quoted to bring the different minds together for this purpose. Most often the larger argument for the consummation of these unions is a type of economy so often proposed in America, an economy which disregards the future and more wholesome principles. Some of these efforts have met with success to the grief of the devout. Others must be commended for their sensible positions taken and good results attained. That certain congregations in the Brethren church will be called upon to make their decisions for or against such movements, there seems to be very little doubt. That these decisions might be made right, our people should be sure of Christ's idea of ONENESS.

Furthermore, some are asking, are we not as Brethren making the requirements for applicants entering our beloved fraternity, more rigid than God has made for entering into fellowship with himself? The reasoning is, that God does accept and fellowship those of other persuasions, people who do not do the things we practice, thereby demonstrating his grace better than we. What shall we say to these things? What mind shall we have, and how shall we respond?

There is no doubt remaining as to the urgency of Christian unity. "That the world may believe that thou hast sent me," is the burden of Christ's prayer. Which church shall I join? seems to be a stumbling-block to some today. Especially of those who want to find all possible reasons for their holding aloof from the church. The Mohammedans think their prophet was greater than Christ because of the separateness of Christ's churches and the union of the Mohammedans, which union of course is held fast with the threat of death over the head of every Mohammedan. Certainly the Christian church has lost much power in testimony, by reason of its divisiveness. But how can we be one? If the Brethren church holds fast to the things which has made us a denomination among Christians, will we be hindering or giving aid to what Christ had in mind by being ONE?

It is with these thoughts in mind, that we approach our subject, "One in Christ." And we take the position that we will be supporting the interests of Christian unity in our day, by holding to the Faith of our Fathers. This position may seem fanatical and absurd or crude, but because our mind and heart are persuaded after this fashion we must take it. And we take it to the point that we would urge it upon our general consideration.

ELDER N. V. LEATHERMAN
Pastor First Church
South Bend, Indiana

Three things make Christians one. They are, truth, sentiment, and expression. Our experiences in life verify this assertion. A mob is a mass of people with one fact or truth before them, a criminal in jail. They all think alike about that crime. They all feel disposed the same way towards the criminal. They all make a dash for the jail. Our political parties gather in conventions and make their platforms. Politicians proclaim their platforms so that the people think and feel about them like they do, then go and vote their tickets. Our denominations likewise form their platforms, magnify their teachings, get others to think and feel with them about these truths and act accordingly.

Now our position grows out of the fact, as we believe, that it is better for each denomination, to hold fast to and proclaim the truths they have, than to do like so very many are doing today, calling all our differences non-essential, thereby proclaiming many truths which God has given, of no value, or of no consequence. Liberty can never be gained by ignoring the truth. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

Truth is what it is. Our thinking never makes the truth. All men may be liars; but God is (true) faithful. Our thinking about God, does not make God. God is, he was and ever will be. Our thinking never made electricity. It always was, since the present order of the earth at least. So it is with Christian truth. Our different denominations do not make God's revelation of truth to themselves. Yet our Christian unity depends upon whether or not we see God and think about God and his Word. (This article does not permit the discussion of the veracity of the Word.) In other words, we do not make the truth, but should allow the truth to make us. In no other way can we be one. The neglect of first principles always means divisiveness. The holding to first principles should mean unity. And for the Brethren church to break away from the truth God has established in and through his ordinances, as well as other doctrines means that we are separating from the only power in heaven and earth which can make for unity.

Other men than our own admit there is loss in breaking away from what God has plainly told us to do. If our views of truth are heterodox, or not correct, then let us change our views. But if they are orthodox, who are we to disregard what God has spoken? And may we know, that the argument and persuasion against our position is not so much that we are in error, as that we are foolish for keeping so-called non-essentials, and our forbidding full standing membership to those who do not think like we do about the practice of ordinances. If we require for membership in our church things which God has declared, we are right. If others do not stand for these truths, through either ignorance or carelessness, that is their error and our responsibility certainly must end by standing for the truths ourselves and in every way possible trying to bring them to see as we do. Surely Christians in other persuasions cannot say we are pointing a "better than thou" finger at them. For as a people we must still pray, "God be merciful to me a sinner." We do stand for the ordinances as a unity. May God help us to stand a unit in all his teachings.

Oneness in Christ also means one in sentiment and expression. When we see things alike we will be moved alike and act alike. May God give us wisdom to demonstrate these things. One large reason why many do not agree with us is on account of other sentiment in relation to our teachings. This sentiment is made by home conditions and surroundings, as well as by church and school influences. Sentiment is the way by which the heart and mind are made plastic to receive the truth. Folks accept the truth of redemption when their hearts are made plastic by their thoughts of the suffering Redeemer. Too much of our presentation of truth has been to the abuse of sentiment.

We can reach the hearts of others by remaining faithful to our teachings when we ourselves exercise a proper attitude. Some men cut their influence in the church tremendously, not because they do not stand for the truth, but because they present the truth in such a way that raises a sentiment against, rather than for it. Our Lord's teachings and parables are wonderful examples of presenting truth in a taking way, that does not abuse sentiment in favor of the things he taught. We must not only create an interest in the truth, but stimulate a sentiment in favor of it. Folks must be made to think and feel alike about God's truth. Then can we expect them to yield and obey alike. Then can we expect a Christian unity. For such it is. Let us be one. But may it be God's way. South Bend, Indiana.

Home Religion

By Wilbur Brenner Stover, Missionary to India 1894-1920

Family Prayers: The Present Need

(We are indebted to Elder Stover for this first of a series of monthly messages which he has agreed to contribute on "Home Religion." Brother Stover writes out of a rich experience and on a most vital subject and we hope his desire to stimulate a greater interest in home religion may bear fruit among us.—Editor).

Having spent half my life on the Mission Field in India, and in the last five years having been in a great many of our home churches, and of course, in many more of our American Christian homes from New York and Pennsylvania to California and Oregon, I have a very definite conviction that Home Religion is of the utmost importance both to our individual and to our national life, and that when functioning properly such will find vital expression through the daily family prayers. There is a very respectful atmosphere in many a home; husband pays all due regard to his wife, and she shows him every deference; children are kind one to another and have respect for their parents; yet there is something wanting, there is no expression of religious life and fervor, no expressed attitude towards God, when the family worship is not there. The good folks of such homes do not realize the lack, nor yet feel the coldness, but they who have become accustomed to such daily prayers of the family certainly recognize the difference, even if they do not comment upon it.

As a boy in a Pennsylvania home where the family prayers were regularly held in the evening, I came to realize a value which I could not express. I also came to feel that if people had any worth while religion, it was sure to find expression in this way. No one ever said as much to me, but I instinctively caught that feeling as a result of my parents' attitude to worship. On my going to Illinois at the age of sixteen, I was in the home of good farmer folk, whose religious life was commonly recognized. In the evening we went to bed without prayers; my astonishment and disappointment were complete. I was not yet a confessed Christian, but in my room I knelt down by my bedside and prayed for them, these good people who had not enough religion to call the family together and pray together. In the morning I was called early, with the added word, "We are about ready for prayers." This mellowed me, and again I prayed, this time that God would forgive me for my hasty judgment of others. We always had prayers in the evening; they in the morning. I had not known.

We may apologize as we wish, and our apology be never more sincere, yet before those who know what the daily family worship in a home group is, and what it means to every individual in the group, neglect of this service is tragic. There are from 8,000 to 10,000 foreign students attending our colleges and universities. They are here for a few years, then will return to the mother country, from which they came. One of these, a Chinese girl, was invited into a good hospitable home to spend the Christmas holidays. When leaving, to return to her school, her kind hostess expressed the hope that she had enjoyed her vacation. Imagine the good lady's chagrin when the laconic reply was given: "In our country we have in every home our household gods, and some time is given daily to their worship. I have enjoyed my stay, sure, and you have been very kind to me, but in your home I have missed the worship."

There are three things to be remembered, if we wish to make our family prayers most profitable; first, a Regular Time. Dr. Jowett once said: "At seven o'clock in the morning, I confess to a natural bias for the prayer room." He had accustomed himself to the hour of prayer, and when the hour came, the spirit came also. Any old time will not do, if we seek the best results. To pray only when an emergency arises is pure selfishness. Having a fixed time, either morning or evening, is almost an essential. Some one has said it is better to have prayers in the morning, for it takes more grace to live well in the day than to sleep well in the night. Of Dr. Alexander Smolie it is written: "The family life must have been very beautiful. The father and mother and two boys had family worship, always twice a day; immediately after breakfast in the dining room, and then about nine o'clock in the evening in the drawing room. On Sunday nights they always sang 'The Lord's our Shepherd.'"

Second, the daily worship will be at a Regular Place. The place becomes sacred with usage. The Lord will hear prayer, wherever offered, if offered in a right spirit. And that's the point exactly; a regular place helps mightily to enter into the right spirit, that spirit shared by all. The family worship looks to the needs of all. This principle of religion will flourish in the home.

Third, the daily worship will be most valuable with Everyone Present. Not by compulsion, but by the creation of a healthful desire, will this be accomplished. When one is absent he misses something. Such realization cannot be created on the spur of the moment; it is the result of usage and experience, and comes into one's thinking like a gentle rain comes upon the earth. And it is not a matter of the imagination. A college senior was necessarily absent from the morning prayers of his home for two consecutive days. When on the third day he was home again, he said: "I tell you, Mother, it makes a difference." The recognition of this fact every Christian parent desires to have injected into the spiritual equipment of his child: there is a difference between the lives of those who find time to pray and those who fail to do so.

These three points are to be remembered if we would have a family worship worthy the effort; a regular time, a regular place, and every one present. The baby may not know what is doing, but as he lies looking around, or perhaps trots here and there while all others are kneeling, he will get his first impressions of God, and no one can possibly tell just when. These first impressions will be acquired in the home. And they will be more lasting than if acquired anywhere else. But he who never has time for family worship will not agree to that.

Meditations—Second Installment

By Egydio Romanenghi

The man who has done most for the world.

Great men have been named but now I bring forward the man who never wrote a book, who never won a battle, who never composed a musical chord. I have seen the sepulchres of great men. Their monuments stand glorious but solitary. There is only one man whose grave no longer exists, but which at the same time is guarded by love; one man whose body the grave could not hold in bonds, one soul that became the soul of history, the heart of human civilization.

He was a Master whose steps the good of today try to imitate, a Master who touches us and inspires us with love. Poetry, music, and painting have exhausted their resources in order to render him homage; philosophers and thinkers have meditated upon his works and confessed his superiority; martyrs and apostles have given their flesh and blood to martyrdom, illuminated by his memory; and all needy souls have sought him eagerly in the moments of grief, and they have found him, not on a throne nor in a palace, but between two thieves, nailed on the cross of infamy.

History is the art gallery of great souls. In this gallery we find also the picture of this man, superior to all others. Men have studied him from all angles. Philop-ophers claim him in their assemblies, sectarians have him symbolized in their various creeds, the mystic finds in him a soul that stands beyond the human, the socialist considers him as the benefactor of society. Notwithstanding that this man has done so much for the world, this great world is forgetting him. Drawn perhaps by my pessimism I can not help but exclaim that this world is forgetting Jesus and the only hope of the world is he, and without him this world would be nothing else but a shadow, a dream, an illusion.

If this country is beautiful, great, blessed, it is not due to science, nor to philosophy, but to this man whom I adore, not as a great master, but as my beloved Savior; and not through fanaticism but on account of my own experience.

Let us examine three opinions, three opinions which synthesize the last word of religious criticism. Renan came from France to contemplate the picture of Jesus, and he found in him the atmosphere of Paris. To Renan, Jesus is the cheerful Rabbi, he is a being in love with the beautiful, a moral beauty which he bore within himself. Jesus was a master who captivated the multitude with his genuinely Parisian enchantment.

Schenkel came from Berlin to study the picture of Jesus and seeing his face, declares that he is similar to the German philosophers. Seely came from London and found in Jesus the image of common sense; his is not the fact of an artist, much less that of a heretic, it is the face of a reformer.

And now I strum my pessimistic lyre although you may criticize me for singing the woes of this world. Our age is an age thirsting for life, the morning of life, but it is at once an age of hate. Everywhere there seems to be venting itself the war of fierce animosity, stern grudge. The reddened earth gives forth only thorns. From the fields in desolation there break forth only hoarse imprecations. Our age is a materialistic age, the mess of pot- tage of Esau has captivated it, the flesh pots of Egypt, if you prefer. The world needs to be filled with ideals, atheistic and materialistic epochs have always been the forerunners of ruin, calamity or destruction.

I said many times that the salvation of this world is this country, but lately I discovered that I was mistaken. When in one year 65,000 girls disappear, you better try to save your own country. When there are so many girls who are mothers but not wives, and so many children who never will know their father, I repeat, you better save your country. Nevertheless I harbor within me the hope of seeing this your beautiful country going back to Jesus with all its heart. In the same way, some other countries too. The world without Jesus could not exist even when it could exist without any science or philosophy. Forget all the great men but do not forget Jesus. I want to say to you that my only substance properly so called is the life of Jesus in my soul. What are the other things without him? Mere shadows, pretext, figure, symbol, dream!

And now in conclusion I beg you to accompany me that we may render to Jesus the just homage that is due him.

Thou, the reverberant bell
To announce the coming day—
To him who sorrows, balm,
To the smiling and prosperous, cheer.
Thine to begin the vibrant song,
Which awakens work and energy,
And delight with notes of joy
The dreaming hour of heart of love;
To say to womankind, release,
To the hardened sinner, lament,
To the old, think on thy past,
And in the sublime death of the poet
To break his lyre mid paeans of glory.

Foundations of Prohibition as a Permanent Policy

Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington

"The structure of American prohibition which for 150 long, weary, tedious years has been a-building, will either stand or fall by the supreme test of today.

"The rain of doubt and criticism and faint-heartedness and abuse as never before is descending upon this structure of prohibition. The floods of vicious propaganda, of insidious suggestion and false logic, are rising about its walls to undermine if possible the base on which it stands. The storm winds of violent opposition, of appetite and greed and political demagogery are trying the very fibres of the building. Prohibition's supreme test will determine whether after all prohibition is a passing fad or a permanent policy of free government, whether its foundations have been laid in sand or on granite."

"None of the many tests has approached in importance and significance the supreme test which prohibition now faces. The past is safe. The real problem has to do with the present and the future. The destiny of prohibition and sobriety for America and the world cannot rest in safety on Chinese philosophy.

"Enforcement efficiency, appropriations by the states and nation, the strictest of laws, both state and national, even the Eighteenth Amendment, carry in themselves no guarantee of permanency of prohibition. The psychology of the crowd may change. Enforcement may wax and wane. Observance may become a dead letter. Laws may be modified—constitutional amendments may be repealed. Political expediency may support tomorrow what it condemns today. Emotions may rise and fall as do the tides and even public opinion may swerve and shift. Something far deeper, more substantial and more fundamental than all these must be found to guarantee the permanency of the structure of prohibition and sobriety. The real question is whether, in our day and civilization, there are such factors in the case.

"The age in which we live is primarily an economic and industrial age. Coincidental with the coming of prohibition there have occurred two momentous changes which are already profoundly affecting American institutions and American life. One of these changes is the industrial revolution in the throes of which America now finds herself. That revolution promises to be of more far-reaching importance than even the old industrial revolution of the period between 1780 and 1840. The key word of this modern revolution is 'mass production.' The transformation already taking place is almost unbelievable. Throughout the entire industrial realm, electrical current is being rapidly substituted for human muscle and for most other kinds of power which characterized the industries of yesterday. The conservation of man power by the use of this intricate and delicate electrical equipment has served to transform the human factor in industry from the unskilled laborer of yesterday to the highly skilled workman of today whose imperative requirements are not muscle but keen eyes, quick wits, steady nerves and clear brain.

"Where in all this new industrial regime, with its implications and its complications, with its delicate machinery and equipment and with its exacting demand is to be found the place for beverage alcohol?

"The other momentous change which has come coincidental with the coming of prohibition is the all but complete transformation in means and methods of communication and transportation. These two factors have invariably been the two most important factors in the development of every civilization that the world has ever known, yet before our very eyes in a score of years these two factors have undergone a greater change than took place in them during the two thousand years before 1900.

"No less remarkable is the transformation that has taken place in transportation which this day is recording. Time was when the newspaper headlines would charge a railroad wreck to a drunken engineer, but of the 110,000 locomotive engineers in America today, who ever reads of a drunken engineer either on or off duty? The American Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, with more than 90,000 members, is one of the greatest total abstinence societies on earth. Why? Is it because of the Eighteenth Amendment? No, it is due to the great economic law of the age and the greater law of public safety.

"The nation's agricultural and manufactured products, a few years ago, were transported on short hauls by wagons with teams and teamsters, when if a teamster happened to get topheavy with alcohol he could throw the lines over the dashboard and depend upon the mules to avoid collision and the ditch. That cannot be done with a modern auto truck. America within two decades has become automobilized. There are 500,000 miles of surfaced highways in America today and the present investment of the people in automobiles and surfaced highways is already greater than are the total investments in all the railroads and railroad equipment of the nation which has been developing for a century. The United States has 6 per cent of the population of the world, yet of the 23,500,000 of automobiles in all the world, 20,000,000 are in America. Consider for one moment what the old beverage alcohol systems of yesterday would mean today with 20,000,000 automobile drivers!

"The revolution in transportation, however, is only in its infancy. When Peary went from civilization to the North Pole 17 years ago, with all the modern appliances at his command, the trip required eight months. When Commander Byrd made the same trip last spring he went to the Pole and back within 15 hours.

"The old age with its ox cart and stage coach and water mill has passed into history and there must inevitably follow upon their heels beverage alcohol, which can never be attuned to this new age of the skilled laborer, the fast express, the electric dynamo, the automobile and the airship."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Spirit Filled Life

By Austin R. Staley

(Sermon preached on Wednesday evening of General Conference week Winona Lake, Indiana, August 25, 1926)

"Be filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5:18.

And as a brethren church we claim to believe in a Triune God—Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Yet I often wonder whether today we do rightful honor to the third person in the Holy Trinity. The Holy Spirit is associated with the Christian life in a practical way.

We are taught many times in the Bible that God is One. But God has revealed himself to us as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. At Jesus' baptism the Holy Spirit descended upon Jesus, and the voice from heaven spoke to Jesus, the Son of God, "Thou art my beloved Son; In thee I am well pleased." Again Jesus and his three most beloved disciples are alone on the mountain top. An unseen hand pulls back the curtain of the night and a baptism of light falls upon the Divine Son of God. The disciples are permitted to see him in the glory which he had in the beginning. They also heard God speaking from the cloud saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." The last commandment that Jesus gave to his disciples was the Great Commission, to go and make disciples of all nations, to baptize them into the name of the Father, and into the name of the Son, and into the name of the Holy Spirit. By all these texts it is clear that God is a trinity and that the Holy Spirit holds an all important place in the trinity.

First, we want to think of THE NATURE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. The Holy Spirit is a person, "the personal Spirit, perfectly good, who in holy love orders the destiny of the church and man. The Holy Spirit's personality is as definitely set forth in the Word of God, as is the personality of the Father or the Son. In baptism as commanded in the Great Commission he (the Holy Ghost) holds an equal place with the Father and the Son. In his power to know to feel and to will as set forth in such passages as 1 Corinthians 2:10, 11; 12:11; Romans 15:30, he is given equal place with God the Father and God the Son. God the Father is creator and source of all things. God the Son, is God in Christ, God incarnate. God the Holy Spirit is God imminent in the world, in his church and in human lives. In speaking of the Holy Ghost we should always use a personal pronoun. He is the third person of the trinity. He is the living personal Spirit in our midst, in the church, and in every human life that allows him to enter.

Second, THE CHURCHES' STRENGTH IS TO BE FOUND IN THE POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. "Ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost shall come upon you." Acts 1:8. Power is a magic word of this age. On every hand man is searching for power. This ambition is being realized to such an extent that human achievements of the present day would have been regarded as miracles even a hundred years ago. Steel bridges of immense weight are thrown across our great streams. Steam engines draw a mile of heavy freight cars. Birdmen fly aloft like huge eagles. We can talk around the earth, and send forth the radio message unheard by the human ear, but caught by human-made instruments thousands of miles in every direction. But are all these proof that the world is better? The more we study man and the conditions of the present day, the more firmly are we convinced that the pride that led to the dispersion of the Jews, is felt today by teeming millions of men, reaching for material things. We are living in an age in which the wreck of the material, is more talked about than the wreck of the home, where lies the greatest danger to America. For if the home goes, all that we love and enjoy as American people, will soon follow.

When speaking of the Churches' Power, we do not have in mind material power, the power of numbers nor the power of money; both history and Scripture show that these may be a hindrance to the cause of God. Neither are we thinking of brains or education or organization. God's gift of intelligence, developed by education, and applied in the process of organization, is not to be discredited. Still, there must be something behind all this—it is in this lofty bestowment of the Holy Ghost that the church finds its strength.

It is a marvelous truth that Jesus promised greater power to his disciples in every age than he himself experienced while in mortal flesh. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth in me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to the Father." John 12:12. More than ever today do we, as church members need to realize the presence of the Holy Spirit in our midst and to apply the power of the Spirit to the work of winning men and women to God.

As Jesus stood on the mountain top with his disciples, just before he ascended into heaven, he said, "that they should not depart from Jerusalem but wait for the promise of the Father . . . you will receive power when the Holy Ghost has come upon you, and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria and to the remotest parts of the earth."

Too few of us have even experienced Pentecost to say nothing about going into all the world as a real witness for Jesus Christ. But the disciples obeyed the command. About a hundred and twenty of them gathered in the upper room and spent ten days in a prayer meeting. Today only a small percent of the Christians can find time to spend one-half hour a week in prayer. "And when the day of Pentecost was now come, they were all together in one place. And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting . . . and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit . . . Now there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, from every nation under heaven, and when this sound was heard, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language." "PETER, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and spake forth." No fear of servant maids now! But can this be the man who shrank before the look of the waiting-maid who charged him with being "with the Nazarine?" Can this be the man that "began to curse and to swear, I know not this man of whom ye speak? The very same, and yet not the same; for the baptism of the Holy Ghost has changed Peter, so that he can stand before that surging multitude, their hands dyed crimson in his Master's blood, and without fear charge home upon them the awful crime, "him ye did crucify and slay."

Pentecost was not an isolated incident. On that day he came to take up the work where Christ laid it down, to officiate in Christ's stead, to be with and within the church until she shall be, "caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thes. 4:17.

Abiding in Christ is not a physical contact. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit." His promise is that the Holy Spirit is waiting to vitalize and energize every human soul on request. "If ye being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father in heaven give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

As Christians we deal more directly with the Holy Ghost than we do with the Father, or with Jesus Christ the Son. Many Christians overlook this fundamental truth. How little we hear, even from the pulpits of America on the absolute necessity of being filled with the Spirit of God, if we are to be saved to serve. How many sermons have you heard from this conference platform in the past several years, that were dedicated to the Holy Spirit? How many sermons have you the ministers of this assembly, preached on the nature, the works and the power of the Holy Ghost? I read many volumes of sermons yearly and am deeply impressed with the fact

GOD'S SPOKEN WORD—2 Tim. 3:14-17.

Blessed Bible, sacred treasure,
Precious Book of all the best,
There is comfort never failing
And a calm abiding rest.

Read with reverence and commit it,
Verse by verse, and day by day;
'Tis the Word that God hath spoken,
And it cannot pass away.

—Fanny Crosby.

TUESDAY

WHAT GOD HATH WROUGHT—Exod. 14:26-31.

All is God. If he but wave his hand,
The mists collect, the rain falls thick and loud,
Till, with a smile of light on sea and land,
Lo! he looks back from the departing cloud.

—Longfellow.

WEDNESDAY

DISCOVERING GOD—Exod. 3:2-5.

We lack but open eye and ear,
To find the Orient's marvels here;
The still small voice in autumn's hush,
You maple wood, the burning bush.

—Whittier.

THURSDAY

TO THE SOWERS—Mark 4:9.

"I gave thee of my seed to sow, Bringest thou me my hundredfold?"
Can I look up with heart aglow,
And answer, "Father, here is gold"?

—Lowell.

FRIDAY

THE MOUNT OF VISION—Luke 9:33-36.

"Not always on the Mount may we Rapt in the heavenly vision be;
The Mount for vision—but below
The paths of daily duty go."

SATURDAY

THE SIGHT OF FAITH—John 11:20-27.

Lord, give us more of faith,
For in our mortal sigh,
Life and our little death
Shut out the hills of light.

—Nancy Byrd Turner.

SUNDAY

STILLING LIFE'S STORMS—Matt. 8:23-27.

"And, Oh, when the whirlwind of passion is raging
When sin in our hearts in wild warfare is raging,
Then send down thy grace, thy redeemed to cherish, Rebuke the destroyer, save, Lord or we perish."

that for one sermon on the Person and power of the Holy Spirit there are literally hundreds on all other subjects imaginable. The hymn book we have been using has three hundred and twenty-nine songs in it, and out of that number only eight are specially dedicated to the Holy Spirit. Yet the power of the Holy Spirit is vital and fundamental to the growth and development of the Church of Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit is the greatest power in the world today.

WITHOUT THE HOLY SPIRIT THERE IS NO CHURCH. Without the work of the third person in the Trinity we might as well burn our churches, throw away our Bible and quit playing religion. The security of the spiritual life of the church depends upon her ability to hear the voice of the Spirit in all her affairs.

The early church was a growing institution because Spirit Filled. The outpouring of the Spirit came to the disciples on the day of Pentecost. Peter boldly declared the new message recorded in Acts 2:38, "Repent ye and be baptized into the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." This is the message of the church to the world. All can have the blessings of a Spirit Filled life, on condition of faith, repentance and baptism. When the church needed deacons they wanted men who were full of the Holy Ghost. "Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom ye may appoint over this business." Philip's converts received the Holy Ghost. Philip was directed in his work by the Spirit. Paul after his experience on the Damascus road received his sight through the power of the Spirit. Cornelius and his family, who were Gentiles, also received the Holy Spirit and were baptized. The council at Jerusalem, called to settle the new problem that arose through Gentile converts, was directed by the Holy Spirit. The missionary work was started, guided, and blessed by the Holy Spirit. We read that on different occasions that thousands were added to the church. Why was this? Because they were "walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost." Acts 9:31.

Today, when so much is being said about religious education, the tendency on the part of many religious workers, is to leave the Holy Ghost out of our church programs. This explains why so many churches are cold, dead, and without fruit. The church that fails to emphasize the doctrine of the Holy Spirit loses her revival and spiritual energy. Religious education, church organization, equipment, and machinery are not enough. We must remember that it is, "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

I wonder what would happen if St. Paul could stand in some of our modern pulpits today and feel our spiritual pulse. I wonder what he would say? I am afraid that he would ask us the same question that he asked the church at Ephesus, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" Some of us like the Ephesians would have to admit, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."

But who shall reveal the Holy Ghost to the world? Who but the men and women in whose hearts he reigns and rules supreme. The Holy Spirit cannot live in the heart that is filled with thoughts of the world and worldly things. We need not expect him to stay with us, if we neglect our God-given opportunities for Christian fellowship and worship on the Lord's day. You cannot experience his power, if you attend Sunday school and church services on Sunday morning, then go to the golf links, ball game, movies or card game in the afternoon and evening. Do you expect the Holy Spirit to stay in your heart when you prefer the jazz radio program to the prayer meeting? How can you expect him to stay with you if your thoughts and desires are unholy and unclean?

If you want the blessing of the Holy Spirit's presence you must pay the price. You cannot serve Christ one day and the devil the next. You cannot hold onto Christ with one hand and to Satan's black paw with the other. The Spirit Filled life is not like that. "Touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and be a Father to you." "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have from God." It is a wonderful thing to have a soul and body which is not a tomb of buried possibilities; but a real temple of the Holy Spirit.

When the Spirit comes into you, you will know it. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Life will never be exactly the same afterwards. Life will be fuller, sweeter, more lovable and more gracious than ever before. You will be a more conspicuous Christian, or you will be more conspicuously Christian. The church whose membership possesses this power will be terrible as an army with banners against sin.

A man has lost his way in a dark and dreary mine. By the light of one candle, which he carries in his hand, he is groping for the road to sunshine and home. That light is essential to his safety. The mine has many winding passages in which he may be hopelessly bewildered. Here and there marks have been made on the rocks to point out the true path, but he cannot see them without that light. There are many deep pits into which he may suddenly fall, but he cannot avoid the danger without the light, should it go out he must soon stumble, fall, perish. Should it go out the mine will be his tomb. How carefully he carries it. How anxiously he shields it from sudden gusts of air, from water dropping on it, from everything which might quench it! We are like that lonely wanderer in the mine. Does he diligently keep alight the candle on which his life depends? Much more earnestly should we give heed to the warning: "quench not the Spirit." Sin makes our road both dark and dangerous. If God gave us no light we should never find our way to the soul's sunny home of holiness and heaven. But he gives us his Spirit to enlighten, guide, and cheer us.

"Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

May we enjoy the peace, satisfaction and power of the Spirit Filled Life.

"Hover o'er me, Holy Spirit,
Bathe my trembling heart and brow;
Fill me with thy hallowed presence,
Come, O Come, and fill me now.

Thou canst fill me, gracious Spirit,
Though I cannot tell thee how;
But I need thee, greatly need thee,
Come, O Come and fill me now.

I am weakness, full of weakness,
At thy sacred feet I bow;
Blest, divine, eternal Spirit,
Fill with power, and fill me now.

Cleanse and comfort, bless and save me,
Bathe, O bathe my heart and brow;
Thou art comforting and saving,
Thou art sweetly filling now."

Conemaugh, Pennsylvania.

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab,
There lies a lonely grave.
And no man dug that sepulchre,
And no man saw it e'er;
For the angel of God unturned the sod
And laid the dead man there.
—Mrs. Cecil Alexander.

The Greatness of Moses. 1. Heroism runs as a marked characteristic through his whole career. Who but a hero could have defied Pharaoh in his own palace; or, a hero of faith, led his people through the Red Sea? Almost every crisis for 40 years demanded heroism.

2. Meekness in enduring complaints, weaknesses, faults, and misrepresentations, with self-control and self-sacrifice, is one of the noblest and most difficult forms of heroism. He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city.

3. Moses was a Great Prophet (34:10), one who speaks and acts under the direction of God, the medium through whom God reveals his will to men.

4. Moses was a Great Patriot, giving up the best of his life for his nation, true to his trusts, incorruptible, unselfish.

5. Moses was a True Statesman. He welded a mass of freed slaves into a body politic. He had marvelous control over men, and great fertility of resource. And he was guided by God.

6. Moses was a Great General, possessing in peace, and in his dealings with other nations, all the qualities that are required in managing armies.

7. Moses was a Great Author, of literature more lasting, more read, more influential than any other.

8. Moses was a Great Orator, and a Great Poet. Read the latter chapters of Deuteronomy for these, and also Psalm 90, which is attributed to his pen.

Unfinished Work. Most men who die, while, like Moses, their vigor remains and their minds are clear, leave cherished plans unfulfilled, life-work unaccomplished, visions unrealized. This is especially true of those who, after intense longing, high purpose, and long preparation, are taken away at the beginning of their career. And parents, when they lose their children in early years, are bitterly grieved as they see their visions and hopes and dreams fade away.

Now to these feelings the experience of Moses gives two answers.

1. The work of Moses would like to have done himself was done by his successor. That which Moses wanted most of all was granted to him, only it was done by another.

2. Moses' experience teaches us that "death does not end all," for many centuries later he appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration with Jesus.

It teaches also that the change from this life to the life beyond is a change to a larger and more glorious life. Death cannot itself change the character. All that any one has gained of mental and moral power remains, and becomes a preparation for the larger work and greater opportunities to which one is transferred by death.

Glimpses of Our Promised Land. "Faith has always its Pisgah Mount which commands the glorious land ahead, and where, above the mists of sin and doubt, we see the sunny splendor of promises fulfilled. Christ, in the darkest hour of his life, saw the breaking of the everlasting day, the coming morning when the shadows would disappear. . . . So we who have learned of him never lose entirely that vision from the mountain top."—Greenhough.

The Naturalness of Death. The circumstances of the death of Moses teach us how natural and easy is the process of death. "When an aged New England saint had arrived at the frontier station and a friend asked him how death seemed to him, 'Very much like going into the next room,' was his answer. All these things, I imagine, are going to look very natural and very simple to us when we have passed through them and view them from the other side of the frontier. To a child before it has passed the gate the great unknown world looks very appalling and weird, but once outside it soon comes to find it to be but an extension of its own father's dooryard."—Parkhurst.

God Hid the Burial-place of Moses that it might not become a temptation to superstitious reverence. "Let the Jews once learn to give the honor and the glory to Moses, and not to God, and the whole of their strange education went for nothing. Instead of worshiping God they would begin to worship saints. Instead of trusting in God they would begin to trust in men; whether in earth or in heaven matters not. So Moses must vanish out of their sight."—Kingsley.

The Book of Deuteronomy—Moses' final gift to the nation, was to the great Prophet of Nazareth, when he appeared many centuries later, "the great book of the Law. Its phraseology weaves itself into his speeches, and it is almost invariably from this one book that he quotes. Sentences from Deuteronomy rise instinctively from his lips as weapons with which to repel the tempter. And when he sums up the whole of God's law to his chosen people in two words, it is the central sentence of Deuteronomy which he cites as the first and great commandment."—Moulton.

The Teacher's Decalog

Rev. Murdoch MacKinnon, of Regina, Canada, has a card printed with the heading given above and the text matter which follows:

I. Thou shalt sanctify thyself for the sake of the young people entrusted unto thee by parents and by the Church of Christ.

II. Thou shalt search the Scriptures daily that thou mayest bring out of this treasury things new and old both for the benefit of thy class and for the culture of thine own soul.

III. Thou shalt give diligence to all the interests of thy class that it may have the necessary leadership in thy person and service.

IV. Thou shalt take a personal interest in each pupil, knowing that God made every human soul separate and distinct.

V. Thou shalt honor fathers and mothers by frequently visiting them in their homes that thou mayest know the antecedents of the children unto the third and fourth generation.

VI. Thou shalt not kill the spirit of thy class by irregularity of attendance but shalt in this respect teach the children by example as well as by precept the virtue of perseverance.

VII. Thou shalt not commit the grave offense of being absent from thy place except for reasons thou canst conscientiously take to thy God, and when the class is thus destitute of thy presence thou shalt secure in thy place one who shall be well prepared for the duties of that day.

VIII. Thou shalt not steal any of the time allowed for the school but shalt be in thine appointed place for a brief period before the school reverently engages in public worship.

IX. Thou shalt not bear the insignia of the teacher in vain but shalt search the byways and hedges for any lambs straying away from the fold and like a good shepherd thou shalt continue the search until thou find them.

X. Thou shalt not covet any one his privileges in comparison with thine own but shalt remember in thy prayers and in thy studies that thou art set apart to lead the young people committed to thy keeping into the joy and fellowship of Jesus Christ.

A NEW COMMANDMENT

Thou shalt love the members of thy class with all thy heart and soul, even as Christ loved them and gave himself to them.—Homiletic Review.

The best investment any of us can make in this world is each day to set about doing something, however small or big, that will clear the pathway for some one else.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has put out in a year more than ten million copies of Scripture, that is Bibles, New Testaments, and small portions. This amount has been exceeded only twice in its history, in 1915 and 1916.

Selected Suggestions for C. E. Workers

A TRAMP CONVENTION For Social Committees

The Endeavorers of the Festus, Mo., Christian church recently held a "tramps' convention" in the basement of the church. The young people, says Miss Ethel Louise Cron, came attired in garments fit for any Knight of the Road. The most interesting feature was the reports of the tramp delegates, such tales of poverty as might have melted the heart. Hot chili and coffee were served in tin cups, and the hobes gathered around a companion who played the mandolin and lustily sang old-time songs.

A PROGRAMME OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MISSIONARY SERVICE By Elizabeth A. Bury, Missionary Superintendent of the Rhode Island Christian Endeavor Union

Prayer

For ourselves, that we may get a vision of the world's needs.

For strength to do our share.

For the missionaries; send for your year-book and pray for them by name.

For more workers and money; pray, and leave the results with God.

Mission work is God's work, and he has never failed.

Giving

Systematic giving of our money.

Plan to give a certain sum each year.

Service

Pack boxes, remembering to send only the best.

The postage is the same; so if we give, let us give willingly.

Write to your missionaries; tell them that you do not expect an answer, you want them to know that you are praying with them.

Time

We are so busy, and we have so little time; but if we pray, "Thy kingdom come," we must find time to help answer this prayer.

Mission-Reading Contest

Divide the society into two sides, and give one point credit for each page of missionary literature read.

Life-Service Day

Plan for a Decision Day. Most of our missionaries, home and foreign, come from the young people's societies.

Missionary Programmes

Plan for one every month.

Stereopticon lectures.

Mission teas, plays, and pageants

A "what our board has accomplished" evening. Get facts from your board, emphasize the work that has been done, then show the need.

THE INTERMEDIATES' PRAYER

By Ethel H. Boxell, Intermediate Superintendent of the Minnesota Christian Endeavor Union

Intermediates need help from the superintendent, that they may use their Quiet Hour to the best advantage, and definite plans for Bible study are eagerly accepted. Also choose Bible passages to be memorized, repeating them in the prayer meeting. Urge members to give helpful suggestions and illustrations from their Bible reading when taking part in the prayer meeting.

The value and power of prayer cannot be emphasized too often in the prayer meeting. Have different members give short talks on various phases of prayer. List, occasionally, on the blackboard objects for thanks and petition before praying. Suggest that each member have a prayer list. Learn Bible prayer verses.

Thus we can do much to develop the Intermediates' natural craving for communion with and understanding of God.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for October 17.)

Story Books I like Best. Prov. 2:10; 8:10, 11

Johnny and Joseph were going to bed. Johnny was seven years old and because he had been going to school for several weeks and taking care of himself on his way without having someone else watch for the autos for him, he was beginning to feel very grown up. Joseph was two years younger than Johnny and had to stay home, so Johnny told him all about school. He told him about the things he studied and the games he played. On this particular night that we are talking about Johnny had been telling about a story that the teacher had told that day. When Johnny had finished his story both boys decided at the very same time that they wanted their mother to tell them a story.

Mother asked what book they wanted her to read from and immediately Joseph said, "I want to hear an 'Uncle Wiggly' story." but although Johnny had always liked "Uncle Wiggly," tonight he said, "I would rather have a true story, I want to hear about someone who really lived. Tell me about some little boy just my own age who once lived and tell me the things that happened to him."

So, mother decided that she would have to tell them two stories. First, she told about the time that Uncle Wiggly gave a dose of medicine to a little sick boy. Johnny and Joseph both enjoyed it, too, for they liked to make pictures in their own minds of Uncle Wiggly out on his adventures.

Then, mother asked Johnny if he had any particular story that he wanted to hear. He said, "No, just so it is true." Then mother said, "Well, I think that some of the nicest true stories that we can find are in our Bible. They are such interesting ones that I want my two little boys to learn a lot of them. Don't you think that it will be nice to learn about the little boys and girls that once lived far across the sea in the Bible lands?"

Once upon a time there was a wee little baby named Josiah. When this little boy was born, he was very rich. His home was a big palace and there were many bright jewels and much shiny gold and silver that he could watch. But, though the wee little baby was rich in these things, yet he was very poor in one way. He had a bad daddy. Little Josiah's daddy lived a wicked life and the terrible thing about it was that he not only was wicked himself but he led a lot of other people to be wicked, too, for he was a king.

Now Josiah's mother loved him very much. She loved him so very very much that she tried to make up for the lack of a nice daddy by being with her boy as much of the time as possible. She taught him about God. She taught him to be honest and to love to do good. And, as he grew Josiah became a very obedient, kind little boy, just the sort of a boy that every mother wants her little boy to be.

When Josiah was eight years old, something terrible happened and something very nice happened. The terrible thing was that his daddy was killed. But, the wonderfully nice thing was that our boy, Josiah became king. Just think, he became king when he was only eight years old. Then, his mother was truly proud of him because he was a good king. He taught the people about God and did many wonderful things showing that he still remembered the things that his mother had taught him.

"I like Bible stories, mother, and I think that it is lovely to know about such boys as Josiah. I believe that the Bible must be the very nicest story-book that there is," said Johnny and soon he was asleep, dreaming that he was a king and was helping people to be happy.

O God, who in thy mercy hast sweetened our forward-looking faith with promises of good, help us to live in this and every other day as citizens of an eternal kingdom; rich in poverty, cheerful in adversity, serene in labor and perplexity, ever rejoicing in thy presence and thy love. We bless thee for the good that we have known and for deliverance from the evil in the world; for our calling as disciples and for the brotherhood of saints. We praise thy name that we have seen already some fruits of our sowing, and that there are harvests yet to come. Give us a steadfast courage for all experiences of our education here and may the airs of heaven breathe about us and refresh our souls when we are weary. Let thy Good Spirit lead us and make us witnesses for Christ. In his name and with grateful hearts for his life of brotherhood and the lovingkindness of his enduring love. Amen.—Christian Index.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

Since writing last it has been my privilege to visit our flourishing mission in Huinca Renanco where I preached for a week to good crowds. One meeting was held in the public plaza and one in a rented hall on Main street. The meeting closed with a love feast attended by about forty. Eleven confessed Christ as a result of the campaign and the work is promising.

Here in Rio Cuarto we have begun a small branch Sunday school in Pueblo Alberdi with Adelina Zeche in charge. In our Sunday night service this week two more publicly accepted Christ. There are now quite a number awaiting baptism, which we hope to celebrate after a revival campaign next month.

There has been considerable sickness this year on account of an open, damp winter, and since the awakening in athletics has come the Sundays are all occupied by football games, and those not interested in the Gospel find diversion there.

Another conversion is reported from Buenos Aires.

Themes that Challenge Missionary Leaders

The Committee of the International Missionary Council held their session for 1926 in the picturesque region of Dalecarlia, Central Sweden, and as guests in Vilohemmet, the Rest Home of the Swedish Missionary Society, near Rattvik, and overlooking Lake Siljan. Dr. John R. Mott, chairman of the Council had just returned from an extensive tour around the Pacific, including visits to Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, Malaya, the Dutch East Indies, Australia and New Zealand. Mr. J. H. Oldham, one of the secretaries, had during the first six months of 1926 visited South Africa, Tanganyika, Kenya and Uganda. The membership of the Council limited to 200, is worldwide in its personnel and vision, including not only representatives from missionary societies and sending agencies, national and international, and representatives of rising indigenous churches and a limited group of specialists and men of exceptional experience. Among the themes that claimed the time and challenged the thinking of this group was "Spiritual Vitality." "Realizing the inadequacy of the present efforts to meet the needs of the world, the members of the committee became deeply convinced that only as new tides of spiritual life begin to flow within the church can the waiting tasks be fulfilled." Among the other interesting topics for study were these: "Presentation of the Christian Message in Relation to Non-Christian Faiths," "Enlisting the New Generation," "Enlisting the Interest and Service of Laymen," "Christian Education", and "Racial Questions." The next meeting of the Council will be held in Jerusalem, March 19 to April 1, 1928, when the main themes for consideration will be those which held their attention at the recent meeting. For a worthy consideration of these themes a world-wide preparation is to be made and it is hoped that out of it may come a new missionary passion throughout Christendom.

In Foreign Lands

Of 3,880,320 people living in Switzerland, 57.5 per cent or 2,230,597 are Protestants, according to "Das Evangelische Deutschland." Roman Catholics numbering 1,585,311 comprise 39.9 per cent of the population, the Jews 1.5 per cent with 20,979 adherents, the remaining 1.1 per cent belonging to other confessions or professing no faith.

It is important to note that since the 1910 census the Protestants in Switzerland have increased 122,700 while the Catholics have decreased 8,200.

Bandage Making Suggestions

Material: Muslins, thin cotton material curtains, dress material, sheets, in fact anything except gauze shirts and heavy woollens. The material may be taken from old and discarded articles, but must be clean. All colors and designed goods will do.

Size of Bandages: The roll may be as big as 2 inches in diameter for the wider bandages. However the narrower ones should be no more than 1½ inches when finished. There are four suggested bandages. Width 1¼ inches for toe cases; 2, 3, and 4 inches. At least one-half of the bandages made should be of the two-inch width and the 1 or 1¼ the least amount.

The sewing of the bandages is very necessary. The bandages should be without breaks in its length. Therefore the sewing of the ends of the strips of material together is very necessary. The sewing machine method is the most rapid. After the bandage has been tightly rolled the end should be tacked down with thread so that it will not come unrolled by handling.

If the strips were torn from the material (having uniform width) before bringing to bandage making groups it would save time and muss. Then there would be needed a couple of girls to do the sewing on machines, a couple to sort and arrange strips of bandages for the machine girls, one or two girls to turn the bandage roller (according to the number of rollers available) while another girl or two would feed the bandage roller, and another girl tack ends of bandages.

I suggested that a committee be appointed to get in touch with the lady members of their church to help contribute material for bandages and also to collect the same. Announcements should be made in church services.

A bandage roller will be necessary and can be kept on hands for the group work. They cost from $1.00 to $3.00. The width of bandage should be considered in the purchase. You may be able to borrow a roller from a doctor.

Sending the Bandages:

1. Bandages amounting to 50 or 55 pounds when packed should be sent to Montgomery Ward and Co., Chicago, Ill., (c/o Export Department for Foreign Missions.)
2. Instruct Montgomery Ward and Co. to send bill of freightage from Chicago to field in Africa to Miss Alice B. Longaker (Foreign Mission Office Secretary of the Brethren Church.) 1925 E. Fifth Street, Long Beach, Calif.
3. Also instruct Montgomery Ward and Co. to address box as follows:
Miss Mary Emmert,
c/o Mission Oubaighi Chari, Boali par Bangli,
Oubaighi Chari,
French Equatorial Africa.
4. Always write M. W. & Co. that you are sending a box giving them the number of freight ticket, date of sending the box, and state contents of box (home made bandages) and that it is packed ready for sending and need not be repacked. Also ask them to drop both you and Miss Longaker a card as to the arrival of the box.

5. Never give a box of this weight more than $2 or $3 value even though it is worth $50 if one was to buy the bandages made by a factory. Duty at Bangui is very high and one is taxed according to the value placed on the goods. In reality the S. M. M. will be saving hundreds of dollars for our mission board. To buy these bandages for three mission stations as well as the new leper colony would mean a large sum of money. May I add here that I wish to thank those who have sent us bandages in the past and I know that your work has been much appreciated both by the board and missionaries and acceptable to our Lord.

6. Keep in touch with Miss Longaker about the time when other freightage is being sent to the field, because M. W. & Co. only send out large numbers of boxes at a time, making large shipments. Then it will not be necessary to pay storage on your bandages. Also write her when you are sending M. W. & Co. a box, the date, weight of box, number of freight ticket, etc.

Packing of Bandages:

1. Light wooden boxes measuring about one and one-half by one by three feet will be necessary to hold 50 to 55 pounds of bandages when packed. The weight should not exceed that amount when packed and sealed. So always weigh after packing box.
2. Line box with a large piece of oilcloth or canvas. It will not be necessary to cut or sew the lining if it is large enough to fold in at the corners. The box should have no cracks in it to allow the entrance of water.
3. If parcel post is sent, which is much more expensive, you will not be able to send more than 22 pounds in one package (box plus contents). Address box directly to field to Miss Emmert who is field secretary. Pack in heavy corrugated pasteboard boxes. This will take two boxes the one fitting into the other. A single pasteboard box is not suitable. A single light weight wooden box will do but the box must be screwed at one end. Line either kind of box with oil cloth large enough to cover entire contents. Do not sew—wrap and tie with rope (no wrapping paper needed) and address the box in several places. Do the same with outer box. The law says no parcel post packages can be sealed. You may insure it.

(Editorial Note—For further information you are requested to write Miss Deeter at 2000 West Third St., Dayton, Ohio. She would enjoy hearing from the various Sisterhoods about this work.)

In the provinces of Eastern Siam where missionaries of the church have never been permitted to enter, the American Bible Society reports that their workers have been admitted, carrying the Bible message to the people, and paving the way for the entry of regular missionaries. Government officials receive the workers with ceremony and assure them of help in case of need.

The Hebrew Lutheran (Baltimore) places the Jewish population of the world at 14,163,543, about one per cent of the entire population of the world. Of this number 3,500,000 live in the United States and 9,232,576 in Europe, being divided as follows: Poland, 2,829,456; Russia, 5,523,324; Ukraine, 1,772,449; Roumania, 834,344; Germany, 575,000; Hungary, 473,000; Czechoslovakia, 354,342; Austria, 300,000; Great Britain, 280,000, and France, 150,000.

"A Chinese student in Singapore had arranged to be baptized shortly after his graduation," reports The Big Inkwell, "but to his surprise he won a scholarship of $500 a year for four years in the Hongkong University. One of the conditions was 'The winner must be Confucianist.' To a poor student the temptation to defer baptism was very great, but he resisted and stood before the altar for baptism at the appointed time. A friend, a Confucianist, stood next in line for the scholarship, but was so impressed that he refused the scholarship, saying, 'If Christianity is worth so much to my classmate, it can be worth no less to me. I will be a Christian.' He also was baptized."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Berlin and Listie Churches do Their Part for Ashland

Berlin

This is a historic landmark in the history of our church. It was here that Henry Holsinger went through trying days with those who supported him in his stand for the Bible alone as the authority and guide for God's children. It was my honor several years ago to preach his funeral from the Berlin church. He was buried just on the edge of town in the Berlin cemetery and a fine memorial monument was placed on his lot by the Ministerial Association of our church.

The Berlin congregation had just recently erected a fine imposing brick church at a cost of $65,000.00, which for architecture, beauty and arrangement is hard to beat. This is not a large congregation and the building will stand as a memorial to their faith, sacrifice and love for Brethrenism.

We felt that it was an imposition to canvass for the College so soon after the dedication of the church, but the pastor and people said, "Come, we will do what we can." Realizing it would be several years before all the burden of the church debt would be lifted we went and were well received.

Brother Benshoff, the pastor, is a graduate of Ashland and a booster for the college, he gave me his full time while there and helped in every way. Brother Benshoff has done a fine work in Berlin, under his leadership a great work has been done there during his ministry. The total gift of the Berlin church was $905.79, but this will not be all as we have the promise of some good gifts in the future and we feel that the church did well under the circumstances.

Listie

This is a small congregation about seven miles from Somerset. They have no resident pastor, but are being served by Brother Walter Nowag of Johnstown, who is a grandson of H. R. Holsinger. This is a mining town and hard hit financially at this time, as most of the men are out of employment. They have a good Sunday school and were planning on enlarging as soon as they are financially able. The membership is small, but in proportion did their part. Their gift was $250.00. The total gift of these two congregations was $1155.79.

W. S. BELL.

NEW ENTERPRISE, PENNSYLVANIA

Since our last report in May, of the New Enterprise-Raystown-Yellow Creek pastorate in Bedford County, Pennsylvania, we have received one mother into the fellowship of the church at Raystown by baptism, and a husband and wife by reconsecration. More earnest effort is being shown in the Christian Endeavor meetings as a result of planning and prayer. The Woman's Missionary Society is pressing steadily forward in its campaign to reduce the indebtedness still more on the church. Regular monthly devotional meetings are held and weekly "work days." An installation service for newly elected officers was held recently in connection with a morning service of worship, and the sermon theme was on "Woman's Work in the Church." This auxiliary now numbering twenty-four members has "raised" one thousand and twenty-six dollars for the church since its organization five years ago. The Bible School is seeking to increase its efficiency by holding regular Workers' Councils, and adding to the equipment of the school. The Sisterhood has sustained a distinct loss in two of its active members entering hospital training, and others accepting positions elsewhere. But the gap is being filled with recruits from among the younger girls who show promising ability.

New Enterprise

Interest in the Bible School and services of worship throughout the summer has been sustained at New Enterprise, and improved methods are being introduced. Brother M. A. Stuckey visited each of these three schools just before National Conference, and already, we are reaping some of the benefits of his inspiring addresses and practical suggestions. During the summer, four of the young members of this church married, and are establishing homes away from New Enterprise, where opportunities for a livelihood they believe are better. This we are told, has been the experience of this congregation throughout its history. But the faithful workers here have the satisfaction of knowing that a great many of its former young people who enlisted in the services of the Lord Jesus Christ here, are now valiant workers in the churches in their chosen communities.

Yellow Creek

The Yellow Creek workers are evidencing a deeper interest in constructive work by recently organizing a teacher training class. There are fifteen who have indicated their intention to work faithfully in this course of study. Several of the members of the class are young Christians who are engaged in public school teaching. We expect great benefit to accrue from this study class. This church is again on the "Evangelist Honor Roll."

One of the encouraging and enjoyable events of the summer was a real "union" picnic of the three Bible schools of the pastorate. One hundred and seventy members were present. The good fellowship, entertaining games and "stunts" and bountiful "eats" surely broadened the acquaintance and opened the way for better cooperation between the three units of this pastorate.

We ask an interest in the prayers of readers of this report for the greater growth of this part of the Lord's work.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF ARDMORE

South Bend, Indiana

Our first home-coming at Ardmore was held Sunday, September 19th. The day also marked the change of pastors. Brother B. H. Flora, who has been serving us so faithfully for more than a year, preached his closing sermon at the morning service. Brother Flora had been called by the church for another year, but resigned to take up work at Dutchtown. The Ardmore church made decided progress under his leadership. Brother Flora is not only a strong pulpit man, but is a real pastor to his people. He leaves many friends at Ardmore.

At the noon hour a basket dinner was enjoyed in the church basement. In the afternoon Rev. N. V. Leatherman, pastor of the South Bend church, preached an inspiring sermon. At the close Rev. Flora with very fitting remarks installed our newly-elected pastor, Rev. Edgar Duker. For the first time since our church was organized we will have full-time service. Ardmore is a growing community and we are looking forward to big things in the work of the church during the coming year. A parsonage is under construction and will be occupied by Brother Duker and his family as soon as it is completed.

At the evening service Brother Duker preached. His earnestness and enthusiasm in the Lord's work make him a real leader. May the united efforts of pastor and people result in bringing many souls into the kingdom.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

As announced in last week's paper, the Gymnasium was burned late Saturday night, September 25. The origin of the fire is unknown. It was so completely destroyed, that we were able to collect the full amount of the insurance. However, the shower rooms and some of the dressing rooms were not so much burned but what we were able to inclose them and use them until the football season closes.

Mr. Kilhefner, vice president of the Board, took charge and in a few days had the place under cover. We dismissed school for part of one day and the students cleaned up the place so that we could enter the remaining part. The school board kindly offered us a vacant room in the Grant Street school building for the gymnasium work. The Armory Board has offered us the use of the armory for basketball this winter.

We took part of the insurance money which was to cover the equipment and Mr. Kilhefner went to Cleveland and bought new equipment for the present season so ceremonies. The following was clipped from the Canton Daily News gives a short history of the church and the program of the afternoon:

The first church was organized into a mission in 1904 in the assembly room of the city hall and the first sermon was preached by Dr. C. Orville Witter on July 10 of that year. Later the congregation moved to the W. C. T. U. rooms, where the movement for the building of the present church building on the corner of Tuscarawas Street, East and Schwalm avenue, was launched. The cornerstone of this building was laid on August 15, 1909 and the congregation moved to this location early the following year.

DESTROYED BY FIRE

The old Gymnasium, which has done service on College Hill for nearly a quarter of a century, was burned to the ground.

that now the school is going forward as usual.

Meanwhile the local Board took up the matter of a new gymnasium and by the time the full Board meets in the spring, we hope to be ready to submit plans to them for building.

The Enrollment

The total enrollment at this time is 284, almost equally divided between the men and women. This does not include the special departments which are about as large as usual.

The Campaign

The campaign is moving forward with nothing new to report yet. The work is very strenuous for me as I have more than my usual classes with Professor Anspach at Michigan. However after the end of the month, the work will let up a bit. But the building of the Gymnasium next summer will be an added burden. For the first time, I have a full time office girl, Miss Etter from Dayton, and that helps out.

Parents who read this letter may be assured that as it is being written every one is well and all right and that your sons and daughters are contented and busy.

CORNER STONE LAID AT CANTON, OHIO

Sunday, September 12, 1926, was a red letter day with the Canton church for it was upon that day that the corner stone of the new church was laid with appropriate Finding this building inadequate for Sunday school facilities it was decided to rebuild upon the present site, but upon further deliberation it was found to be too small to house properly the size Sunday school that has grown in the community in the past few years, it was voted to move to the location where the new church is now being built.

The following program was carried out during the day:

Sunday school, F. B. Lindower, Superintendent, 9:15 A. M. Morning worship, 10:30 o'clock. Invocation; offering; hymn; scripture: Luke 1:26-35, Rev. Leslie E. Lindower; anthem, "All Hail, O King," Wagner, choir; prayer, Rev. D. F. Eikenberry; anthem, "Our Glorious Hope," Jordan, choir; sermon, "And They Called His Name Jesus," the pastor; hymn; benediction.

Dinner hour and renewing old acquaintance, 12 to 2 P. M.; the service of laying the cornerstone, 2 P. M. Those gathered at the old church will form in line and march to the new church on Hartford and 2nd St., N. E. Hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," led by F. E. Clapper; scripture, 1 Corinthians 3:8-23; Psalm 132:1-9, 13-16, Rev. Eikenberry; hymn, "The Church's One Foundation," prayer (concluded with the Lord's Prayer); offering, conducted by S. W. Link, financial secretary building committee; male quartet, "For Me," Meredith, Messrs. Lindower and Lindower, Clapper and Vanator; address, Dr. R. R. Teeter, Ashland, Ohio, a former pastor of the Canton church; laying of the cornerstone, the pastor and the building committee; doxology and benediction. There will be no evening service.

The building committee is composed of the following: F. B. Lindower, president; F. E. Smith, vice president; C. E. Clapper, secretary; M. S. Itskin, assistant secretary; S. W. Link, treasurer; Rev. F. C. Vanator, pastor; Rev. D. F. Eikenberry, member of financial committee.

The morning services were largely attended and a fine fellowship hour was spent at the noon time when we ate the mid-day meal together.

The Building Committee hopes to get the building under roof before the bad weather sets in and to this end we are working and praying, trusting that nothing will delay us in the work to which we have addressed ourselves.

We ask for the prayers of the brotherhood for the work here in Canton.

FRED C. VANATOR, Pastor.

HAGERSTOWN MARYLAND,

"The Gateway to the South"

Just a few vacation jottings. A month of change, not idleness, describes our vacation season. Someone wrote in "The Educator" urging making one's vacation an aid to his vocation. Of course fishing and picnicking and visiting the ol' swimmin' hole have a place to fill in the ideal vacation, but the suggestion in the Educator is appropriate and worthwhile. Our first brief stop was with Brother Reuben Sandy and family at Annville, Pennsylvania, a part of our own parish. We were to preach on that Sunday evening in the Church of the Brethren at Palmyra, but on arrival we noted on the bulletin board that the evening sermon would be in German. The Elder had reconsidered the proposition to which he had agreed with Brother Sandy, had called his council and decided that it would never do. Not that we were anxious to preach, but we are anxious that the day may soon come when such feeling will be fully replaced by Christlike fraternal love.

A brief stop at Eaglesmere, Pennsylvania, a center for young people's conferences. This is a beautiful resort on top of a mountain, 2,000 feet high, with a fine lake in the hollow of the summit. Eaglesmere is a cool place in the hottest weather.

Then came a visit to Watkin's Glen, New York, one of the least known and most beautiful spots in America. It appears as though an upheaval of the earth had split open a ridge of rock, one and a half miles in length. The state has built a walk, rather a series of stairs, through the glen, and while varied vegetation adorns the sides of the rock walls, a stream of clear water flows down a rocky bed, forming here and there beautiful falls. It will pay you to go out of your way and spend two or three hours seeing this attractive spot.

A brief stop at Niagara Falls and a night in Canada came next. It is reported that some people who live within the hearing of the roar of the falls having never seen them. While "distance lends enchantment" it is also often true that "familiarity breeds contempt." The advice, "See America first" is timely. The waters are wearing the rock, the falls receding each year about six feet. Better hurry and see them before the rocky ledge is all worn away.

Then came a week at Chautauqua Lake, New York, through the kindness of a good friend. The first visit was thoroughly enjoyed. Going to school with Dr. Shailer Matthews, a noted modernist, as teacher was an unexpected experience. But worry not, for he only strengthened our belief in the whole Word of God. He would not commit himself on some basic doctrines. Those who so choose may depend upon humanistic philosophy and religion, but I prefer to take our Lord at his Word, and believe what he says, and obey what he commands, whether I can fully explain it or not, as long as he proves in my experience the trustworthiness of his Word. There is plenty of man-made theology, but why not accept unchanged God's plan of redemption, as long as it proves sufficient. The summer school is large. The Chautauqua program is high class. The music is the best. The atmosphere is intellectual to a high degree but not evangelistic. It is indeed a noted intellectual center.

After visits to Ashland and South Bend the next stop was at Winona Lake, Indiana. The Bible Conference had a record attendance. Its atmosphere was intensely missionary and evangelistic and withal intellectual. Preachers by the hundreds went away from Winona to do and dare in the work of his Kingdom as never before. That was the purpose of the conference.

Our own church conference was well attended, the weather ideal and Winona never more beautiful, with the health of Winonians never better. The mission interests of the church, home and foreign, were well presented, with encouraging reports and promising outlooks.

Back in Maryland, hard at work, with the program full to the brim is the order of the day. The first thing on arrival was a real surprise. During our absence the Ladies' Aid Society had redecorated the interior of the church auditorium. They did not do the painting, but as the ladies often do they did the paying. What an improvement. It ought to make the preacher do better preaching and the worshipper do better worshipping. Surely the Lord appreciates an attractive house where he can meet his people and bless them—if they keep the appointment. Thanks to the faithful women.

Brother Clarence Sickel's visit to our church was highly satisfactory. He leaves a host of friends here who will be the more interested in him and his family and in all the mission work of the church. Our church gave him the largest single offering thus far received on his visit to the churches. Come again, Brother Sickel.

On the evening of September 26, a group of twenty-five children from the First Brethren church of Winchester, Virginia, came to Hagerstown and under the direction of their loyal pastor, Brother Emerson J. Rohart, repeated the closing program of their Vacation Bible School. The large audience enjoyed it from start to finish. The exceptional program reflected much credit upon pastor and children. A liberal offering was given them to help install their new heating plant. The members of this new church are greatly encouraged and plan to go forward. This is a mission church but the members are already talking of the day when they will no longer be thus designated. The Lord prosper them.

Yours for Victory,
G. C. CARPENTER.

ENCOURAGEMENT

By Burt Shram in Christian Index

A word of encouragement is the sedative that quiets the tumultuous roar of the ambitious into a firm and steady resolve and causes a responsive vibration of the dormant forces in the self satisfied one.

Sometimes we say that our fellow associate is too enthusiastic and that he is headstrong. This we confide in low tones to one in whom we think there will be no dissenting voice. This someone usually says, "Yes, yes, go on—just the other day he told me that he could do so and so. Now let's watch him and see where he lands." It would be much better if we would go direct to the headstrong person and slap him familiarly on the back and say, "Old boy, you are on the right track but take it easy. Look around you well and be sure of your ground. Go by degrees and you will hit what you are aiming at."

And on the other hand we remark to the same sympathetic person, "Do you know that Mr. Blank is the laziest, most good for nothing man that ever lived, etc., etc., why he doesn't even provide for his family?" Wouldn't it be much better for us to casually meet him and say, "Old man, it's a pity you are out of a job. Would you like for me to help you take a look around and try to find something you can do? I know it must be provoking to you not to be able to find work and your family depending upon you. Buck up though, everything will come around all right as soon as you land that job." Little fibs, did you say? Sure they would be but you would notice the angel of goodness slyly wink while you were telling them.

THE WRECKING TOOLS OF A CHRISTIAN

Paul Morrison, in Western Christian Advocate

Not every church member has learned the trade of a Christian. Or who dare cry "Scab labor" in the face of one Jesus writing upon the ground and revealing his meditations by saying, "Let him that is without sin among you, cast the stone"?...

The wrecking tools of a Christian are:

The Hammer

The hammer is used by shallow and unwise Christians for the purpose of criticizing and finding all manner of fault with the way things are done in the church, and is especially convenient to use on sincere faithful Christians who are trying to do their best. With the hammer, knocking can go on continuously—morning, noon, and night—but never without making dents in some good cause, honest effort, or upon some faithful soul. The hammer is able to absorb a delightful amount of energy that could be constructively expended for the good of the Kingdom and the glory of the church. It can be used following all occasions: after a funeral the relatives can be knocked for crying too much or too little; after a service when the minister has preached too long or too short; following a prayer meeting, an official board meeting, or any stated meeting of church organizations. ...

The hammer can knock down the benevolent giving of the church; can terminate the pastorate of a useful minister, or can turn a hungry soul away from God.

The Chisel

The chisel is used to cut down or reduce an object, never for the purpose of enlarging. So by the would-be-useful church member the chisel will carve down personal responsibility—their share in the regular work of the church. They will reduce the New Testament implications of discipleship to the minimum. ...

THE BRETHREN CHURCH

"The Church with a Cordial Welcome"

OUR PLEA: The Whole Gospel for the Whole World. C. C. Grisso, Minister, Residence 915 E. Market Street.

Warsaw, Ind. Sept. 27, 1926.

Dear Brethren:

It is a great privilege that I have of coming to you in this quiet way in behalf of the work you have entrusted to our care. At this season of the year it seems necessary to put forth a renewed effort to strengthen our work along all lines, and in order that you might help us we are designating the month of October as "Loyalty Month." It is our purpose to have every member of the church to renew their loyalty to the church of which they are a member, by being present at all the services of God's house during this month.

This means that you will have to lay aside everything that has hindered you in the past and promise before God that you will attend the Bible school, the preaching service, and the Young People's and Mid-week Prayer Meetings this month.

This is the first thing we are asking. The second is like unto it,—bring some one with you. Think of the unsaved and the unchurched of East Warsaw. How long since you spoke to a friend about the church? We are Christ's representatives in this community.

The church is the noblest institution in the world:—it stands uncompromisingly for the right in the community; it seeks to bring to all classes and conditions of people the best and most comforting message. In view of this it is not asking too much to ask every member to throw their whole life into it. The pastor cannot do it all. His message must be interpreted and lived by every member of his parish.

As your pastor I am going to ask a few things of you this month. Your response will be your answer to me.

FIRST: Lord's Day, October 3, is Rally Day in the Bible school. We should like to see you there. Two hundred and fifty is our aim.

SECOND: The worship hours,—how about it? Sit down and think,—how long since you heard your pastor preach? How long since you worshiped with God's people on his Holy Day? How easy to search for an excuse now! But think of the future and the days of regrets. Begin next Sunday and do better.

THIRD: I do not know how much of material things you are giving to the Lord. I am simply reminding you of this privilege which you should not overlook. How much for self? and how much for the Lord? God has blessed you. Out of this abundance let us return unto him that his cause may go forward, not hindered because of our failure to give.

FOURTH: Let us love the church a little more,—give it the first place in our thinking and in our living. To be, possibly a bit more charitable. You and I are members, therefore it is not perfect. But if we will pray for it and speak favorably of it at all times, we can help make it a better church.

FIFTH: Be ready to do what you are asked to do. None of us want to be idle. If you see something that ought to be done that is God's call for you to do it. The obligations are many,—the organization varied,—there is a place for you. I am asking that you pledge your best for Christ and his church these passing days.

NOW LASTLY: The pastor is asking a favor; we want you to help us. We shall esteem it a great favor if you will inform us of any person needing our spiritual help. We desire to be kept busy. We will visit the sick, the aged, the shut-ins, in fact help in every way irrespective of church membership. We desire to know your needs, and the needs of all. We are but an humble servant of him who came "not to be ministered unto but to minister." So Brethren, if you will pledge us these things, the work—our work—shall go forward in a great way. We are only passing through this world once, any good we can do, let us do it now.

Faithfully until he comes,

Your Pastor, C. C. GRISSE.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FAIR HAVEN CHURCH

Communion service will be held Sunday evening, October 10 at 7:30 P. M.
A. D. CASHMAN, Pastor.

OHIO STATE CONFERENCE AT FREMONT

The Ohio State Conference meets with the First Brethren church at Fremont, October 19-22, 1926. Plans are being made by the local church to entertain all delegates and those attending by the usual Harvard plan. The Brethren church is located on South Street, between Wood and Whittlesley Streets in the Southwestern part of the city.

The city of Fremont is located on the southern Division of the New York Central Railroad, the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad, and the Nickle Plate (Lake Erie and Western), the Lake Shore Electric and the Fremont and Fostoria Electric. Through cars are run to Lima by the Lake Shore Electric over the F. and F. Connections can be made at Lima from Dayton and Bellefontaine. Those coming by automobile will find good paved highways leading into Fremont from all points of the state.

Plans are being made so that delegates who wish can visit Speigle Grove, the home and burial place of the late President Rutherford Hayes. The Memorial will be open to visitors. Fort Stephenson park is another place of historic interest made famous in the war of 1812.

The church extends a hearty welcome to all churches to send delegates.
S. C. HENDERSON, Pastor.

The BRETHERN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

Power From On High

GOD is the same yesterday, today and forever. His disposition toward his creatures has never changed, is incapable of change. Yet in his dealings with them he acts according to law. The free agency and consequent moral accountability of man are recognized in all his dealings with the human race. Therefore he can impart no more light than there is capacity to receive; he can give no more grace than man is ready to accept. We cannot fully understand these principles of the moral government of God, but we may rest assured that he is saving the world as rapidly as it can be done in conformity to the principles which pervade and uphold the moral universe. The living light forever shines; but there must be a channel for the stream, an atmosphere for the refraction of the light. We are workers together with God in our own salvation and the salvation of others whom we can in any wise touch with any measure of influence.

'In Remembrance of Me'---A Communion Meditation

As we contemplate the fall communion, the heart is made serious and we are moved to meditation upon the wonderful words and deeds of the Lord Jesus that cluster around this service. We cannot be other than serious as we approach the Lord's tables, for here we find ourselves in touch with the most sacred emblems and most fundamental doctrines connected with our blessed religion. Here indeed we come into the spiritual presence of the holy Christ himself and hear from his lips the most profound words that ever fell upon human ears. It is good for us to tarry in such an atmosphere that we may experience the exhilaration of heart, the uplift of purpose and the purifying of thought that is there possible. Let us not hasten away, nor allow the appeal of the material to neutralize our inmost heart's appreciation of the spiritual verities there to be contemplated, nor dull the keenness of our ears for the gracious words of truth there to be heard. Let us anticipate that service as we would a transfiguration scene, prepare for it as for the reception of the Holy One of Israel in whom center the Law and the Prophets, and then sit about those tables with hearts charged with serious purpose and full of understanding, as we hear those divinely spoken words—words which point the significance and reveal the purpose of it all—"This do in remembrance of me."

What is the significance of that phrase, "In remembrance of me?" It is evident that Jesus wished to be remembered. But what was the basis of that yearning to be remembered? Was it merely his love for his disciples and sadness at the thought of separation that moved him to express the wish, as one friend sorrows at the prospect of being separated by the cold hand of death from another and finds his grief assuaged by the thought of being remembered? Or was there in the mind of the Master something more vital? If it had been the former, there would have been nothing mysterious or unique about it; we would have understood it clearly. For there is no normal person but will confess to a desire to be remembered when he has shuffled off this mortal coil. Men everywhere revolt against the thought of being forgotten. The wish to be remembered is a universal and imperishable characteristic of the human spirit. Nature itself at this season of the year is in harmony with that spirit. With its falling leaves, ripened crops and blighted foliage, it seems to mourn the thought of a summer soon to be forgotten. And much less will the human heart yield to the thought of being forgotten as soon as it is out of sight. It would increase immeasurably the dread of the hoary frost of age and would intensify the horror of the icy waters of death, if we were compelled to believe that we would have no place in the thoughts of our loved ones as soon as we had passed from the scene of action. On the other hand it takes away some of the wretchedness at the thought of passing to know that there are those who care and who, when we are gone, will treasure the pleasant thoughts and experiences growing out of their associations with us. But such a feeling could not have accounted for the extraordinary measures which Jesus adopted to make sure that he would be remembered. No one would have been justified in such a course. There must have been something more fundamental, more essential to the welfare of those whom he was leaving. And so there was. There were at least two vitally significant reasons why Jesus wished to be remembered and made provision for a perpetual remembrance. First, because of who he was, and second, because of what he did, and does.

Jesus was the Son of God, and as such he wanted to be remembered, for the sake of the people. God had been manifest in flesh; the eternal Father had revealed himself through his Son, and that revelation must be preserved. The destiny of the race depended upon it. What he was and is able to do for man depends upon who he is. If he is no more than a man, he can make only a man's offer, but if he is God, then he is able to save to the uttermost all them that call upon him by faith. True, Jesus became a servant of mankind, but by his own act and will. He took upon himself the form of a servant. He is therefore no creature, but Creator. "He was in the beginning with God, and without him was not anything made that was made." And by very definite and clear statements from his own mouth he claimed to be divine and the co-equal with the Father. As such he would be remembered, and as such we acknowledge him when we observe the communion as he directed, "in remembrance of me." With the conviction of Thomas we acclaim, "My Lord and my God."

He would be remembered also for what he did and does for mankind, that is as Redeemer and Intercessor. The announced purpose of his coming into the world was that he might die and become the Savior of the world. That saving work he accomplished by his death on the cross. And "as oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye show forth the Lord's death till he come", and we thereby bear witness that he is able to save to the uttermost all them that call upon him in faith. He not only redeems us from the bondage of sin, but keeps us continually by the power of his grace. Paul had gained such confidence in the keeping power of the grace of God that he said, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." Thank God for such a Savior, for we are utterly unable to keep ourselves. And he is enthroned at the right hand of God the Father, where he ever liveth to make intercession for us as our great High Priest. Thank God for the Savior and Keeper of our souls. As we surround the Lord's tables and partake of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of this mighty Savior, we deny dependence in the arm of flesh, and acknowledge our salvation and our hope of continued victory to be in the cross of Christ. Our confidence is in the fact that "he suffereth for us and died for our sins according to the Scriptures." And so by eating this bread and drinking this cup we indeed show forth the Lord's death till he come," if we truly do it as the Lord Jesus himself instructed us, "in remembrance of me."

The Tithe a Moral Requirement

The Sunday school lesson for September 12th afforded a splendid opportunity for the teaching of the law of the tithe, not as a Jewish enactment, but as a moral requirement. This law, as the law of the Sabbath or one day of rest in seven, is based upon a divine principle and is not abrogated with the passing of a dispensation. The Jewish law did not originate it, though it emphasized and enforced it, neither did the passing of Jewish legalism annul the law of the tithe. The Gospel of Grace requires it as the minimum acknowledgment of the principle of human stewardship and divine ownership with a compulsion that is as strong as the legal enactment was demanding. It is a requirement based upon a principle that is moral and essential to the very constitution of things, and therefore unalterable.

But in this dispensation of grace we are to look upon the tithe not as an exacting debt to be paid and with the payment of which we are released, but as the minimum obligation of love and gratitude, an obligation which grows and should be more keenly felt and more generously discharged as the hand of God's blessing is opened the wider. It is in that spirit that all moral requirements should be met by the follower of Christ. It is that spirit that Jesus sought to induce in all his instructions and requirements of men. In John's Gospel he said, "If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." It is the obligation placed upon the loving disciple by one who has all authority and yet prefers and seeks to inspire a spontaneous response of loyalty and obedience, rather than to secure it by direct command. And it is that spirit of generous and genuine obedience which the Master fain would have found in the hearts of the Jews when he rebuked them for their hypocritical professions and yet approved the principle of the tithe in these words, "These (the tithing of mint and anise and cummin) ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone."

Are we giving serious attention to this great divine plan for financing the Kingdom? It is feared that we are negligent of our duty at this point, that in this particular we are not preaching a whole Gospel. It is difficult to see how ministers who profess the implicit obedience and whole hearted loyalty to the Word of God that ours do, could overlook this vital teaching, and yet we hear very little about it in pulpit or on conference platform and we are making but slow progress in getting the principle accepted by the rank and file of our membership.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The second church of Los Angeles is looking for a pastor. Interested parties see "Announcement" department for address.

Members of the Ohio Conference should be planning to journey towards Fremont in large numbers. Especially we urge the brethren in the Miami Valley to surprise those in the northern part of the state by a banner delegation. The moderator, Brother R. D. Barnard, would like to see each church represented by its full quota of delegates. And remember two things: the payment of your conference dues is required whether your delegates are in attendance or not; and every church should endeavor to have its mission apportionment paid in full.

Word reached our office from Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Missionary Secretary, who is visiting two of our western conferences and some of the churches in those districts. At the Illiokota conference held at Des Moines, Iowa, he says the attendance and messages were good and the weather ideal, which is more than we can say for weather in Ohio recently. "I think the people out here are sociable, hospitable and easy to get acquainted with," says he, "and I am enjoying myself immensely." He promises us a report soon.

Brother Freeman Ankrum tells us of the progress of the Lord's work in the parish under his care at Oak, Hill, West Virginia. Two revivals are reported, one at Salem, with Brother B. F. Owen doing the preaching, resulting in ten confessions, five being reconsecrations, and the other meeting at the Oak Hill church with Brother A. L. Lynn as the evangelist, where seven confessed Christ. Following the meeting another was added to the list. The Sunday school at both places is experiencing commendable growth. Brother and Sister Ankrum enjoyed a remarkable vacation trip in mid-summer, traveling 3,000 miles, through fifteen states, visiting numerous points of interest.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes briefly of certain events of interest on our African mission field, and also of her own plans for reaching France, where accompanied by her daughter Marguerite, she will pursue further work in medicine. The brotherhood will rejoice to learn of the birth to Brother and Sister Kennedy of a little son, named Lester Washington, his arrival being July 4th. In behalf of the Evangelist family we extend congratulations and pray them God's constant protection against the ravages of African fevers. She states that the marriage of Chauncey Sheldon and Hattie Cope was to have been consummated the last of October and that they were to enter immediately upon a new station at Bossangoa.

Brother R. D. Barnard, pastor of the church at Mansfield, sent out a weekly message to his members in the form of a mimeographed letter bounded by an outlined suggestion of the superstructure, the church, bearing the words, "The Christ Our Only Foundation." It contains news, announcements and exhortations in brief, and is received, we have learned, with much appreciation. In a recent letter it was stated that the final amount of the debt of $428.00 on the church property owed to a city building and loan association had been paid. This amount was given in forty-eight different gifts, and is indicative of the splendid spirit of loyalty and cooperation that is being generated under the leadership of the pastor.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie, in charge of the mission work at Krypton, Kentucky, reports the establishment of a tuition school and the building of a girls' dormitory, and they have named the institution "Lydian Girls' Boarding School." It is evident that the school must go hand in hand with the church in such fields as we are occupying in Kentucky, if permanent results are to be obtained. The instances related by Brother Kinzie indicate a real need for the doing of school work at Krypton, and the pastor and his wife are to be commended for the sacrifice to which they have gone to make such a school possible, which, as they admit, is only a beginning. It is to be hoped that not a long time will need to elapse before not only more adequate arrangements for girls can be made, but also the boys can be provided with dormitory privileges.

An attractive bit of Rally Day advertisement comes from the First church of Pittsburgh, containing among other items two of general significance. It was stated that the purpose was "to rally the forces of Christianity" and that the weather should be "immaterial." That is a real job that the churches are ever facing, to cause the forces of Christ to maintain such a spirit of devotion as to look upon the weather as an immaterial factor in the discharge of their obligations. For the vast hosts of Christian professors the weather, and even more insignificant matters, do make a difference. It is a fact of universal observation that the most trivial affairs are allowed to interfere with our acknowledged duty. A situation that permits religion to play so small a part in our lives is one of the principal causes of the tardy advancement of the church, and may well give concern to the heart of every pastor and church leader and inspire the most vigorous efforts to overcome.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Paris edition of "The New York Herald" reporting the observance of an International Golden Rule dinner in Geneva preceding the opening of the Assembly of the League of Nations early in September, attended by over 500 from all parts of the world, some of them internationally known personages. The food was typical of that served in the American orphanages in Greece, Syria, Armenia and Palestine and cost but four cents per plate. The cups and plates used were made from oil and milk cans by the boys of those institutions to which the proceeds above the actual cost of the dinner were to be devoted. This meal was the first of a series of similar gatherings designed to focus attention on the relief work being done in the Near East. These dinners will be brought to their culmination on Golden Rule Sunday, December 5, when it is hoped that the observance will be very widespread, and that the amount saved by the use of a very simple fare will be sent to the Near East Relief to feed the dependent orphans. The ideal that is sought to be inculcated by this Golden Rule movement is "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you", and is to be an expression of international goodwill. And in these days of tense feeling on the subject of a satisfactory adjustment of war debts, it is especially important that America maintain her leadership in private philanthropy, and in the expression of a genuine fellow-feeling and goodwill toward those in the Near East and elsewhere who lost everything, including home and parents, in the late war. We therefore recommend to our people a very general and hearty participation in this good movement on December 5th.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Christian Endeavor and the Young People

By Homer A. Kent

(Address at the Christian Endeavor Session of the late General Conference).

The subject upon which I am to speak should be of vital interest to our conference, our brotherhood, our local churches, our homes, our country because it has to do with our youth. Young people always have been interesting, are interesting today, and always will be interesting. Daniel Poling,* President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, has said of youth, It is the greatest going concern. And I believe you will agree that he is right. Youth is always on the move, always doing something, must be doing something, and is miserable unless it is doing something. This fact produces endless problems not only for the parents of youth but for the churches which claim the youth. It is ours to help to solve some of these problems. If we as a brotherhood, as local churches, as pastors, as Sunday school teachers, as laymen, are failing to care for the youth or to be interested in them we are neglecting our solemn duty and are failing to avail ourselves of one of the greatest opportunities that lies at our doors.

The subject assigned me for consideration tonight has to do with one of the outstanding organizations of the church for the care of our young people. Christian Endeavor is that organization. During the last forty years of its history it has made remarkable strides. It has grown from a nucleus of a handful of far-seeing, consecrated individuals until today millions of the finest young people in the world are touched by its influence. Its scope of activity is tremendous. Its accomplishments have been innumerable. It is fitting therefore that we should stop here in our Conference and analyze its work briefly. What is its reason for existence? What its purpose? Then for us individually, is my Christian Endeavor Society measuring up to the standard set for it? If not, why not, and how can a remedy be affected?

I. At the outset I think we are justified in saying (and it has been said repeatedly) that the Christian Endeavor society is the training school for future service. Some may object immediately and say that it is more than that. It is not only a training school. And that is certainly true. The Christian Endeavor society does more for our young people than to train them for future service, far more, and that should be emphasized, but still after this emphasis has been given it remains that the Christian Endeavor is a training school in Christian service. It is the place where the young people meet in groups of their own age and learn to worship. There they gain experience in using the Word of God, in praying in public, in speaking with force, in handling executive affairs, in doing a multitude of things that never would have been learned in all probability had it not been that the Christian Endeavor society offered the open door of opportunity.

Were the request made here tonight for testimonies as to the value of Christian Endeavor in your lives in developing you for service I am wondering what a variety of testimonies would be given. Thousands can testify that for the first time with trembling lips and shaking knees they offered a public prayer in a Christian Endeavor meeting. Thousands can say that they first learned the love for Christian service in a Christian Endeavor society. There was there fanned into a flame the desire to do something worthwhile for Jesus Christ. Others can testify that Christian Endeavor was the means of developing their powers of public speech. Many a first public testimony was given in a Christian Endeavor meeting.

Thus through these means a vision of the Christian life was opened up before the young people that has sent them out to live for their Lord.

Christian Endeavor influences young people at the most impressionable age and thus its opportunities are redoubled. In a few short months it can change the life of a young person—alter his desires, inspire his ambition, renew the horizon of his entire life, and develop his talents. Happy indeed is the pastor who has a splendid group of young people to oversee in a development of such transcendent importance. This it seems to me is one of the greatest joys in a pastorate. It is a joy to me to be surrounded and supported in our Washington church by a splendid group of young people. The greatest joy in the contact with these young people is the joy in watching them grow in Christian service. I am thinking now of one young man who not many months ago made his decision for Christ in the Washington church. At once he entered the Christian Endeavor society. Soon he read his first slip, then he made his first talk, then he offered his first prayer, soon after he led his first meeting. Last Sunday night I watched him lead his second meeting. I marveled at the progress he has made. He is developing into a splendid speaker, a fine young Christian worker. Christian Endeavor in a large way is responsible for his remarkable progress. It gave to him the opportunity for expression. This instance has been cited because it has come under my personal observation recently. It is typical of multitudes of other cases where Christian Endeavor has served to develop the Christian lives of young people. You, brother pastors, can cite similar instances in your own congregations. Let it be said again that the Christian Endeavor society if properly conducted can prove of immeasurable blessing to your church in the development of your young people.

II. But it is not true that the Christian Endeavor society is solely a training school for future service. This has possibly been too often overemphasized to the overlooking of the service that the young people are rendering in the present. Let us think of the Christian Endeavor as the young people serving. We make a mistake in failing to look upon the work of the young people as real service in the church. They feel it as such. The church ought to as well. Well do I remember my first experience in public prayer. It was in a Christian Endeavor meeting. I did not look upon it as training. It was real worship. I meant it as much as any prayer ever offered any time since. The love for Christ which prompted the prayer was real. When a young person speaks in a meeting it should not be looked upon as training. It is real service. It is being done for Christ. Some of the finest, most earnest work done by the church is done by the young people. Many have been won to Christ through the Christian Endeavor. It has been shown that more Carnegie medals of honor for heroic service have been awarded to boys and girls from ten to twenty years of age than to men. Youth is the time of heroic appeal. And in the church the young people are ready to serve. They are not training to serve, they are serving now. I wonder if we as pastors, as Sunday school teachers, as leaders are making use of the love for the heroic in youth that we should. Are you encouraging the efforts of your Christian Endeavor society? Christian Endeavor is set for service. Its record in the past is noble. Thousands of missionaries sent to the white harvest fields. Thousands of ministers and Christian workers developed. Multitudes of Christian Endeavor societies organized not only in this country but in practically every land in the world. They are ministering to the soldiers and the sailors, the Indians and the lumbermen. Their service for the church is challenging.

It is the business of the church to give to its young people the opportunity for this service and they will not fail. Young people will respond to hard tasks. They will rally to an interesting work. Let us show them that there is no more challenging task than the challenge of the cross. Let us show them that the Master's service is the most interesting service in the world. Then there will be no difficulty in holding the young people. There is no difficulty in getting young people interested in multitudes of other things. You can readily interest most young people, boys especially, in a ball game. This reminds me of the story of the three boys who were talking together one time about where they would rather have a third eye, if it were possible to have another. One of the boys said he would rather have it in the back of the head so he could see when anybody slipped up behind him. The second said he would rather have it in the top of his head so he could see the birds flying above him all the time. But the third boy seemed disgusted with the answers of his comrades and said, Of course I would rather have a third eye in the end of my finger so I could stick it through a knothole in the fence and see the ball game. Why does the boy like the ball game? Because it's interesting. There is something doing. There is action. When we recognize that Christian Endeavor is for service for our young people and when we come to make that service interesting, vital, definite, we shall have accomplished much toward the solution of our young people's problems.

III. Christian Endeavor renders still another invaluable service in that it is the field of exploration for the church. It enables the young person first of all to discover himself. Through the varied activities of a properly conducted society he is able to find out that for which he is best fitted. Whether for speaking or singing or leading. There amidst surroundings conducive to development he is able to try out his talents. Is there a more important service to be rendered than that? When a young man or woman has discovered himself or herself, one of the greatest victories of life has been won. They can forge ahead then not with indecision but with confidence that they are in the field where God would have them labor. The world today is full of misfits because they never had the opportunity which Christian Endeavor affords, of finding themselves.

Then not only is the Christian Endeavor a place of discovery for the individual, but is also the exploration field for the church. It is the place where the church can look for its future leaders and having found them there it can set about the responsible task of moulding them into the vessels for the Lord's service. O, how many churches are failing at this point, failing to train future leaders, failing to fortify themselves for the morrow. Marion Lawrence once made this striking statement which is well for us to consider: "I believe the highest ambition a church can have is to be the means of leading young people into the Master's service. A church that does not send as many young men into the ministry as the number of pastors it uses up is a parasite on its denomination." Is he not right in such a statement? And if he is right, how many parasites we have even in our own brotherhood! What is the reason for it? Very probably we are failing to make use of the opportunities of exploring which Christian Endeavor affords. We are not on the lookout for recruits for his service. We are not praying for God to lead our young people in the way of Christian service. We are not encouraging them. And in our failure we are reaping vacant pulpits, a dearth of capable Christian leaders, the lack of vitality and inspiration that always follows in the wake of seeing young people dedicate their lives to Jesus Christ. The business of discovering young people for Christian service is imperative to the success of any church or denomination. On one occasion Sir Humphrey Davy, the noted scientist, was asked what his greatest discovery was. It was thought he would produce a chart with some star or constellation of the heavens upon it. But not so. He said, "My greatest discovery was Michael Faraday." He was one of his pupils. So the greatest discovery a church can make is the discovery of consecrated young people for the Master's service. Make your Christian Endeavor society a field for such endeavor. You will find no better. Young people will respond. They await a challenge to a noble task.

So I leave with you these thoughts that Christian Endeavor is first a school of training for our young people. It is more than that. It is their place of present service in the church. Then finally, it is the great field of exploration where young people find themselves and the church finds its leaders.

America Wins Foreign Friendship Through Red Cross Service in Disasters Abroad

By T. N. Soderblum

International good will is a priceless possession.

The American people, through their Red Cross, are laying a firm foundation for lasting friendship towards themselves and their nation through a continuing record of service in foreign catastrophes in many parts of the world.

In more than 15 disasters abroad in the past year, America, through the Red Cross, rendered service to the sufferers which resulted in warmest expressions of gratitude and friendship to our country.

Severe floods in various parts of the world early in the past year occasioned a great deal of such activity. A flood in the state of Nayarit, Mexico, killed approximately 1,000 people, thus earning the characterization of one of the most destructive catastrophes to visit the American continent in many years.

A serious problem was thus presented to the Mexican authorities, but as is the case in many foreign lands, groups of Americans living there constituted an outpost of the American Red Cross, and greatly facilitated its relief measures. Invariably these little American colonies know and are proud of their Red Cross and display creditable ability in the sudden emergencies which call for outside assistance. In this case a fund of $10,000 sent by the American Red Cross was administered by an American committee of residents of the region around Mazatlan, Mexico, and in conjunction with the Mexican officials, the funds and supplies were administered with results that brought forth official expressions of gratitude on behalf of the people.

Early in the past summer another flood visited Mexico inundating the poorer sections of Leon, the Mexican town affected, and rendered 7,000 to 8,000 people homeless. Following a report to the American State Department in Washington, the Red Cross once more transmitted through the department relief funds, and for the second time earned for the United States an expression of thanks from the Mexican Red Cross.

Later a Mexican Red Cross flag, faded and tattered from long service, including a long battle record with the armies during Mexico's civil disturbance of recent years, was presented to the American Junior Red Cross as a token of American aid in Mexican relief.

Again, in Belgium this time, winter rains caused rivers to overflow their banks, and large sections of that heroic little country became flooded. The Belgians, through their own Red Cross Society, acted quickly, but found the situation needed more than their resources could meet. Once more the American Red Cross, in the same spirit with which they had met Belgium's suffering in war, responded.

Late last summer, in remembrance of this service, the Belgian Red Cross presented to the American society a silver medal, inscribed with the story of American devotion. This medal is now in the Red Cross museum.

A terrible train wreck in Costa Rica, one of the five Central American republics, gave the American Red Cross a new opportunity for service, and this organization sent to the Costa Rican Red Cross a fund to assist them in caring for the injured, and provide for the families of the dead.

The recent conference of all the Red Cross organizations of North and South American countries which was held in Washington, D. C., is a recognition of the growing importance of the Red Cross ideal in the world, in which the American Red Cross has been a leading spirit.

While it was thus serving abroad in the past year, the American Red Cross did not neglect its own people, as was proven in more than 55 disasters of all kinds which struck all sections of our country. The New Jersey munitions explosion last summer was one such event, and there were many flood and mine disasters whose victims were ministered to by the Red Cross.

The opportunity to join the Red Cross, and be a part of its great service to the world is extended in the Annual Roll Call, November 11th to 25th, this year.

The Home Base

By J. S. C. Spickerman

We have often heard of the importance of the home base as a source of missionaries and funds for the foreign field. I do not think that side of the subject has been overstated; but there is another way in which the home base is important to the foreign work. The influence of missionaries is often hindered by the evil influences of the nations from which they are sent. The heathen are not all unlettered savages. Many of them are men of intelligence, who read the newspapers, and know what is going on in the world. They read of the many murders and other crimes committed in this country, our divorces, lynchings, etc. They know about our shameless movies, which heathen Japan finds it necessary to censor severely. Mohammedans and some heathen abhor alcoholic drinks; but "Christian" nations send liquor into their countries, and in some places compel them to allow it to be sold. They read of the organized resistance to the prohibition law in this country. They know of the tremendous military equipment of the nations that profess to worship the Prince of Peace. Bishop Brenton F. Badley, of Bombay, says, "In India today, thoughtful men and women are giving attention to Christ's teachings as never before. But they are not merely studying his principles—they are examining Christianity as developed and practised by the so-called Christian nations. Here is the point at which the church meets her problem. India is attracted to Christ, but is repelled by much in Western life and attitudes. She demands that if we be Christians that we do not merely talk about the beauty of Christ's teaching as to the "Fatherhood of God" but act on the inevitable and equally binding principle of the "brotherhood of man." To this she feels, Christian nations and America in particular—subscribe only in theory. Further, she cannot—and why should we expect her to?—reconcile our use of naval, military and industrial force in our international relations. While she reads the Beatitudes, the Sermon on the Mount and the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, how can she understand a world war among nations that are "Christian?"

Even those who can not read often observe unseemly conduct on the part of travelers from "Christian" countries. They say, "If that is Christianity, why should we give up our religion and accept it?" Thus the lack of Christianity here hinders the work of those who are giving their lives to win non-Christian people to Christ. The more truly Christian America becomes, the better hearing our missionaries will receive abroad.

But it may be asked whether the Tunker type of Christianity is necessary to that end. The larger denominations are better equipped for both home and foreign work. Would not the same amount of money and effort expended through them, or through undenominational channels, go farther toward making America and the world Christian, than when scattered through a lot of little organizations? We must admit that they are doing a great work for Christ, here and abroad. We should not, and will not, do a thing to hinder them. But we are not doing our whole duty if we fail to make disciples, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever Jesus commanded.

In the matter of war, the popular churches have failed to teach and observe his commands. While there are individuals in all the evangelical churches who accept his teachings in this matter, the general sentiment in those churches has come far short of Gospel ideals. Preachers who want to be popular uphold militarism, and even encourage hatred and revenge. Some of them revile, as cowards and traitors, those who will not fight. New Testament passages, such as 1 Timothy 1:18 and 6:12, 2 Timothy 2:3, and James 4:7, which obviously refer to spiritual warfare, are applied to war between nations. The churches that are committed to Christ's teachings on war must carry on and make our influence felt.

Worldliness—putting the wealth and pleasures of this world before Christian character and the kingdom of God—is the greatest hindrance to the work of the church. No church can claim to be free from this evil, but it seems to me to be far more prevalent in churches where the members become such without conversion. I do not deny that there are many really converted persons in those churches; but the large number whose religion is all form and party spirit, are a stumbling-block to the work of the church, at home and abroad. The New Testament church was composed of those who voluntarily accepted Christ.

But some of the larger denominations teach the doctrine of regenerate church membership. Why, then, are our peculiar teachings needed? The same reasons that justify our separate existence demand that we proclaim our doctrines to the world. If those churches are teaching and observing all that Jesus commanded, we might as well disband and join them, but are they? Do not the ordinances, as we practice them, represent vital doctrines that are more or less neglected?

Reinhold Niebuhr, in a recent article in "The Christian Century," says, "It is significant, too, that the very part of the country in which the churches insist most strongly upon "regenerate membership," and recruit such a mem-

A Caution to Newspaper Readers

It is highly important that Christian people get the proper perspective of the whole world in which they live. In order to do so it is necessary that we learn to think whole. Now the fact of the matter is that most folks get their idea of the world from the daily newspapers which they read. That is about all the way they have of knowing what is going on.

But we must remember that the newspapers do not see things whole nor report things whole. They are what their names indicates, news papers. News is all they look for and all that they are accustomed to print. And news is not the whole, normal running world at all, nor even the usual; but always the unusual. Every reader of a newspaper should bear this in mind continually in forming his estimates of the world in which he lives. Over against that side of which we read in the dailies, we must put that great expanse of life which never gets into the papers because it is too general and too common to be news. Dishonesty is news, because it is the unusual and the unexpected. Honesty is not news, because it is the usual and the common, and we all expect people to be honest. If a man runs away with another man's wife, that is news, because it is the occasional and unusual thing. But for a man to live at home quietly and peaceably, deeply in love with his own wife and children, supporting them and clinging unto them only, is not news; for there are hundreds of thousands of such cases in every city and country the world over. If a young man or a young woman become guilty of some iniquitous deed, or of some preposterously silly and salacious escapade, that is news and is spread on the first page of all of our papers to incite other young sillies to do the same; but for young men and young women to keep themselves pure and sober and work hard year in and year out in office or factory or schoolroom or on the farm, as literally millions of them are all the time doing, that is not news, and hence is rarely or never mentioned in our daily press.

Now the significance of all of this must form a background for all of our newspaper reading and for our comprehension of the world as it really is. If we are to have any rational philosophy of life, if we are to judge the world and Christian effort in the world today, we must learn to think of life whole. And in order to do this we must ever remember that the newspapers report only a very little part of it—and that usually the worst part.—Editorial in "Herald of Gospel Liberty."

bership by persistent revivals, is most grievously corrupted by the sin of race hatred." But surely this can not be charged against either branch of the Tunker fraternity. It is our duty and privilege to demonstrate the whole Gospel to America, and through America to the world.

Maryville, Missouri.

WHAT IS FAITH?

What is faith? If I were to say that it is the absolute condition of all life, of all action, of all thought which goes beyond the limitations of our own minds, I should use no exaggeration. Faith is in every age, under all circumstances, that by which man lays hold on the realities which underlie the changeful appearances of things, and gives substance to hope; that by which he enters into actual communion with the powers of the unseen world and brings their manifestation to a sovereign test. It is the harmony of reason and feeling and purpose. It is, to say all briefly, thought illuminated by emotion and concentrated by will. Faith, as applied to our present life, is a principle of knowledge, a principle of power, a principle of action. It may be quickened and intensified; it may be dulled and neglected. As it is used, so it will be fruitful; and we are severally responsible for the use which we make of it.—B. F. Wescott, in "The Historic Faith."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Sovereignty in Prayer

By E. Y. Mullins

Address given at Birmingham Convention. Verbatim Report by International Journal of Religious Education

I read two or three verses from the fifteenth chapter of the Gospel according to John, the marvelous words of the Master to the disciples. (John 15:5-7.)

Some one has well said that chapters fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen in the Gospel of John are the Holy of Holies of the Bible. Perhaps more than anywhere else in these chapters Jesus uncovers the inner secrets and thoughts of his own great passionate, loving heart. The Holy of Holies, because he takes the disciples by the hand and leads them into the very presence of God the Father. "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

My subject is "Sovereignty in Prayer." Spiritual sovereignty through prayer, if you prefer that statement—and I wish to take this verse and look at it piecemeal, beginning with the end and going back.

The first thought which I get from it is this, that spiritual privilege is here expressed in terms of sovereignty.

"What ye will shall be done," says Jesus. That is true by itself. I am justified in saying to Christians on the basis of the authority of Jesus, "What ye will shall be done." In this passage, Jesus is trying to confer upon the disciples a sense of their own high prerogative. He is trying to put crowns on their brows, make spiritual kings out of them. "What ye will shall be done."

Of course man's sovereignty is always subject to God, no matter what path we travel in life, the pathway of suffering, of sorrow, of victory, of defeat, or the pathway of broken purposes. It matters not what be the experience, every life comes at last to the end of it at the foot of the throne of God. He is Sovereign of all. Nevertheless, he has drawn a circle around us, and within that we are sovereign. He will not invade it. We may will things and wish things and purpose things, and under the economy of his grace we may achieve things. "What ye will shall be done."

Jesus wants us to will. Sometimes people think that faith is a passive thing, that prayer is a mere receptive mood. I take these words today and say to you that Jesus wants to convert prayer into the most aggressive thing there is in the spiritual world, and to show us that faith is the most virile and vital thing that can ever take hold of a man or woman. Do you realize the fact that we can set great goals and purposes and great objectives and great ends, and achieve things that would not have been achieved otherwise? "What ye will shall be done."

Take a dozen texts in this chapter and you will find the same thing. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." "If ye ask anything in my name, he will do it." "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to the Father," and so on and so on, to the end of these chapters. At every turn he speaks the word that shows he wants the disciples to grasp the thought that spiritually they may be sovereign. The spiritual privilege stated in terms of sovereignty—"What ye will shall be done."

And the second thought I get here is that sovereignty, spiritual sovereignty, is interpreted in terms of prayer. "Ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Jesus doesn't say that you can go out in your strength and will and achieve things. He doesn't say that you have any inherent power or that you are a source of energy, that you can build without divine help, but your sovereignty is by way of God's throne. If you assert it in that form and appeal to God, in his sovereignty he will make you spiritually a sovereign in the world.

There are many ways in which man's place in the world is lessened. There are two or three views taken of what man is, and sometimes Christians are drawn into the influence of them. One is that man in his spiritual nature is a sort of emanation from matter, sort of a bubble on the lake, or like the sound that is emitted by a tuning fork, and when the vibrations cease the sound ceases. That is materialism. Another view, very much akin to it, makes man a part of the great all, so that when he dies it is like breaking a bottle of water in the ocean. That is pantheism. That isn't the Bible view, and the Christian view. Man is a person, made in God's image, redeemed by Christ, and given freedom and personality and power to do things that shall abide forever. He is made in the image of God, and he himself shall abide forever. He is a free, divinely endowed, and divinely gifted being.

I take it if I were to ask this congregation today what is the greatest weakness in your spiritual life that ninety-five per cent of your answers would be "in the realm of prayer." I fancy that ninety-five per cent of the Christians of the world today, if they were asked the question in what department of your spiritual life are you conscious of the greatest weakness, would make that answer. I take it to be so because we do not fully understand what our spiritual privileges are in prayer. We have never adequately grasped the great and marvelous ideals of God for his people. Why is it? I believe I will suggest two or three reasons for it. One is that very prevalent thing, we hear so much about it—men imagine that the reign of law prevents it, that because science has explored nature and shown us the reign of law, there is no room any more for prayer. But we forget that personality is not subject to law, or at least is not wiped out by law. Will changes the course of nature. When your house is burning down and the fireman turns on a hose, he changes the law of nature. The law of nature is that the fire should burn your house down, and it doesn't. The fireman opposed his will and your house was saved. That is going on all about us every day, the will of man changes the course of nature, and he has been doing it from the beginning of time.

An old Christian, sitting in a store, was arguing with a skeptic about the matter of the miracles, and the skeptic who was whittling away said that the reign of law prevented miracles. The old fellow argued that personality was higher than law, and a man could do things because he was a person.

The skeptic said, "I can demonstrate. You hold in your hand the best proof in the world that law reigns. If you let go of the knife you are holding, no power can suspend the law of gravitation. It will fall down."

The old Christian said, "Now watch this jackknife," and he flipped it up and it stuck in the ceiling. He said, "I let go of it and it did not fall down."

Said the skeptic, "Oh, but you did something to it."

"Yes," said the Christian, "that is what God does."

The whole philosophy of the supernatural and miraculous is in that, the will of man and the will of God. That is what diverts and changes the ongoing of nature, and God can come into his world whenever he chooses.

There is another thing that hinders some people from prayer—that is their understanding of the unchangeableness of God, the immutability of God. That is formidable enough in sound, and there are people who say that the unchangeableness of God makes it absurd for us to pray to him. How can we change him? How can man, the finite, have any influence over God, the infinite? My answer is that the unchangeableness of God, the immutability of God is the very foundation of my hope when I pray. All I need to do when I pray is to remember his character as unchangeable, and his character as unchangeable is Father Everlasting. Father—and it is an ability of fatherhood to be able to answer the child when the child cries, and God would abdicate his place as Father if he could not answer prayer. Yes, he is immutable, unchangeable, eternal; he is a loving, gracious, stooping, helping, prayer-answering Father. There is no ground for doubting prayer on that basis. It is the very foundation of our hope of prayer. He never ceases to be Father, not one instant from the foundation of the world on; He remains unchangeable, everlasting Father.

Those are some of the general reasons why Christians are weak in prayer. Now I want to name two or three practical ones. You will pardon me for being blunt. One reason why prayer has so little power in the lives of Christians is that they are spiritually lazy. One of my old professors used to say, "We are all as lazy as our circumstances will permit." All of us are lazy.

There are three kinds of laziness, physical, mental, and spiritual. Physical laziness hates work. The mentally lazy man hates to think. It gives him a pain, and I have seen them among students. Oh, how hard it is for them to think! And I have seen them among church members. The spiritually lazy man hates to pray. Do you know, prayer is the hardest work in the world when it is the real thing. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." There are a half dozen words in that text that imply energy and power, and one of the old prophets says, "Oh that men would stretch themselves to lay hold upon God!" Oh that men would steel themselves up to grasp God! Spiritual laziness will prevent prayer from having much effect.

Another cause for the weakness of prayer in the lives of Christians is spiritual insincerity. Many a man is not honest with himself and God. He prays, and suddenly remembers that his life is not right, and he flees over to some other theme. He doesn't have it out with God and his own soul. He doesn't deal with himself in any searching way. He prays that God will give him a forgiving spirit. Then he remembers that someone that did him wrong. Old bitterness comes back, and instead of having it out with God, he goes off and prays that God will do something else. Perhaps he prays that God will make him generous, then he remembers that his neighbor has more of this world's goods, and the old spirit gets into his heart, and instead of having it out he flees to some other place, and prays that God will make him generous with his money, and then he remembers the appeal of the mission secretary or some other great cause, and he knows his bank account, and instead of having it out with God, and crucifying the flesh, he goes off and prays for something else. It is not hard to understand why prayer fails in the life of a Christian, when we recognize how many insincerities we practise in prayer.

Sometimes we fail in prayer, too, because we want God to do trivial things for us that we could do for ourselves. Nothing is too trivial to bring to God's notice, but he doesn't stoop to do for us what we can do for ourselves.

A little girl on a ship dropped her doll overboard. She asked the captain to stop the ship to recover the doll. The captain said, "I am afraid I can't do it. Where did you lose it?"

She showed him, and there it was, right on a projection, and he got it for her, and she thought he was a wonderful captain.

A little boy was playing with a ball, and lost it in the sea, and asked to have the ship stopped. Of course the captain said he couldn't do it. The little boy said, "The captain hasn't any heart or sympathy for boys." The ball remained in the ocean.

The next day a man fell overboard, and out there in the storm and amid the breakers he was crying for help, and instantly the captain gave the command and the ship came to a stop, and they went out and rescued the man and brought him back. And when they reached the harbor the captain went to a store and bought a ball for the boy, a better one than he had at first, and there were three prayers answered, but only one required the stopping of the ship.

God doesn't reverse the wheels of nature to answer our trivial prayers, but he will help us to answer in ways that we do not know, and God will answer all our prayers, but he will not reverse nature to do the thing that doesn't need to be done in such a way.

My second point is that spiritual sovereignty is interpreted in terms of prayer. The third is that prayer is explained in this text in terms of fellowship. "What ye will shall be done." Spiritual privilege in terms of sovereignty. "Ask what ye will,—prayer the means of sovereignty. "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask what ye will." Fellowship is the key to prayer and sovereignty. What is fellowship? It is mutual understanding. It is the relation between friend and friend, between brother and sister, between brother and brother, between father and son. It is the relation between workers in the Kingdom over common matters of interest, a common goal, a common motive, a common body, a common peace, all in the Gospel of Christ.

Henry—went to spend Christmas with his old mother. He had become famous and had a world-wide reputation, but after he had been home and spent Christmas at home he wrote to a friend about it and said it was the supreme experience of his life, because it was the restoration of his boyhood fellowship with his old mother. He said, "We just agreed that we would carry out Christmas as we did when I was a boy. Mother cooked my favorite dishes, and in every way we acted as we did when I was a boy." At night his old mother put her hand on his brow and sang a lullaby that she used to sing to him. He was telling about it afterwards and said it was the sweetest experience he ever had, because it was the coming back to the fellowship of childhood with a mother dearer to him than life.

Christian fellowship is like that. The early stages of our life in Christ are gathered up to the maturer life, and as we grow older and stronger our fellowship deepens and broadens and heightens and becomes more intense, and by and by our fellowship with Christ, our abiding in him and he in us, becomes so real and so beautiful that all the difficulties that we had about prayer in the earlier stages vanish away like snowflakes.

When that fellowship becomes deep and intense enough, we become convinced that our desires are but the expressing of God's will for the world. When that fellowship becomes intense enough and deep enough, we lose the pauper spirit. We no longer go to him, to beg him for favors. We become conscious of the sense of sonship, the sense of heirship, and proprietorship. We own it all. It is ours. "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's," and now prayer is not so much petition, though that comes in—it is not so much prayer for material things; but prayer for a real fellowship. We go to him with questions, "What wilt thou have me to do? How can I embody thy grace to mankind, express thy will to the world?"

I want to tell you, my friends, when that happens, the Kingdom comes right there on the spot. The Kingdom comes in the secret place of prayer.

John Knox prayed, "Oh, God, give me Scotland or I die." His heart was breaking for Scotland, and when he reached that stage, then God gave him Scotland, and he stamped his impress upon Scotland that abides until this day. When I was there and went to his old study where he used to study and pray with God, my soul was lifted up by the thought that here there was a great soul that had become a spiritual sovereign because he learned the lesson of this verse of Scripture—"If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Joshua, Israel's New Leader

Scripture Lesson—Num. 27:18-20; Josh. 1:1-9.

Devotional Reading—Prov. 2:1-8.

Golden Text—Be strong and of good courage; ... for Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.—Josh. 1:9.

LESSON LIGHTS

God the True Leader

The important thing for the church to grasp is that God is the true leader of his people, and that, whoever the human instrument may be through whom he may exercise his leadership, it is the al-wise God who makes appeal for and has a claim on our loyalty and obedience.

Lead on, O King, Eternal!
We follow, not with fears;
For gladness breaks like morning
Where'er thy face appears;
Thy cross is lifted o'er us;
We journey in its light,
The crown awaits the conquest;
Lead on, O God of might.
—Ernest W. Shurtleff.

The Character of Joshua

1. Matheson calls his life prosaic, commonplace, that of an assistant to Moses. This was very probably true of the earlier portions of his life, up to the time of this lesson. But now he comes to the reward of his faithfulness as one who obeys orders. By obeying he had learned to command. By faithfulness in little things he is able to do great things. This is the only ladder that may be climbed to the best.

2. Joshua was great because he was under Divine guidance, taught by Divine wisdom, and, therefore, humble and strong.

3. He was a man of great courage, both physical and moral, as he had shown in the battle with Amalek, and in spying out the land and in almost alone withstanding the clamors of the people.

4. He was a man of faith, deeply and intensely religious.

5. He came to have fine qualities as a general—keen observation, power to control, wise leadership, celerity of movement, skilful strategy, boldness of attack.—Alice D. Adams.

Need of Courage

Courage—not only physical but moral courage—is as greatly needed today as in the time of the conquest of Canaan by the unskilled tribes of Israel. We must stand by what is right at all costs; we have be-setting sins to conquer; we must resist the tides of fashionable wrong; God's work is laid on us to carry out, and his truth to be upheld among the nations.

Courage is not gained by mere resolves, but is founded on the assurance that we are on the side of God and of right; on the consequent assurance of victory; on consciousness of strength and fitness for the work; on the experience of the past. Such courage doubles the power of every effort, or every weapon; inspires the body and the spirit with strength. Courage is not ignorance of danger, or the ignoring of it if one knows it. It is not reckless dashing into danger. It is not blind obedience to orders of one's leader, and often not even those acts for which one obtains in war decorations for bravery. Where such do mean true courage they are doubly worth all the honor that can be given them.—Ibid.

Patriotism Important

No life can be fully complete in strength and usefulness if it is not patriotic. This does not at all mean a blind standing up for one's country in whatever circumstances it finds itself, though to a certain extent that may be necessary. It is not true patriotism which says merely "My country, right or wrong." Add to that statement—say "My Country, right or wrong; if right to keep her right; if wrong to make her right"; and we have true patriotism. But many patriots of this calibre have been denounced by those of the other sort. Patriotism is closely allied to heroism. It is far more difficult in peace than in the time son or nation is his religion. Every new day, every new work, should be begun with religious feelings and with religious acts. The whole of life should be lived not so much for self as for God's cause. This transforms and transfigures daily living.—Illustrated Quarterly.

God's Promises to his People

The Bible is a book of rich promises. Hardly a page but glitters with the glorious words of hope and comfort and encouragement. The Bible is the Checkbook of the Bank of Faith. A book was once made up solely of the promises of the Bible, and a most impressive volume it is. Such a book should be the heart of every Christian, on whose pages these promises should be written imperishably. The promises are endlessly varied. They cover every conceivable need and circumstance of life. But they are all summed up in the verses of our lesson, as they are summed up in many another wonderful chapter. God likes to repeat them, so that his people may never forget them. As a rich man loves to survey his wealth, so let us con the promises of God; for they are our gold, and with them we are multi-millionaires.—Greenhough.

Serve to Your Limit

"Feed my sheep," Jesus said to Peter three times in the famous interview by the shore of Galilee following the resurrection and preceding the ascension. All readers of this famous twenty-first chapter of John are impressed by the note of personal yearning in the heart of both Jesus and his great disciple. With peculiar tenderness Jesus repeated the question thrice, "Lovest thou me?"

Various explanations have been given for this threefold question and answer. The emphasis has been laid during the years on healing over the threefold denial of Peter before the crucifixion. Undoubtedly this entered into the inner sense, but might not Christ have had a still deeper appeal?

Jesus had done his utmost for the disciples in the way of teaching, setting before them an example and redeeming them upon the cross of Calvary. He had often been more or less disappointed with the response which these disciples had made, but now thought that following the experiences in Jerusalem Peter certainly would go forward as a leader of the new Christian hosts; but instead of making use of the long training and prayerful influences which Peter had been permitted to secure, he now turned back to his old calling of catching fish. Jesus was in effect saying to him: "Is this the end of all my travail and sorrow, that you should return to this business of fishing? When you entered the ranks of my disciples I told you that you should become a fisherman of men. It is a far greater opportunity to work with men than with fish. Peter, if you love me—if you do—go out and strengthen, feed, and support the weak ones in the Christian fold."

What would we think of a young man who had been trained for musical leadership at great expense and then should turn to some manual labor? Such a case is in of war, and more costly to the patriot. To do right when others do wrong, to withstand the tide of false opinion, to stand alone for principle, to turn from all gains though Satan spread out before one as before Jesus in his temptation, "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," to do right at any cost—here is the universal field of heroism, open to every boy and girl, man or woman, every day.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Joshua and the Law

Joshua was required to do three things with the Law; (1) Talk about it and teach it; (2) Study it; meditate on it day and night; (3) Obey it. The purpose of the study was to learn his duty. It was to be his rule of life, his chart on the voyage to success, a guideboard on his way, a book of instructions.

So for us today religion and the Bible lie at the foundation of our national hopes and of our individual character. As Carlyle says, the most important thing in any per-

Can Christian Education Re-establish the Radiance of Christian Life among Young People of Today?

We had two distinct and different groups of young people in St. Paul's church at Kansas City. The first group met weekly on Sunday evenings and went through the motions of a Christian Endeavor Society. Some of them also assembled on Sunday mornings in what was called the Sunday school. On both these occasions there were operative some good intentions, but nothing was done that could be dignified with the term, Religious Education. The principal thing, however, in connection with it all, was the monthly dance given under the chaperonage of the adult adviser of the group—given as sop to hold the bunch together. The semblance of religious meetings came more and more to be a form to be gone through with in order to gain admittance to the monthly dance. No church loyalty was developed, no devotion to an ideal, no joy in Christian service. And it took but little time for the whole group to disappear, and we have scarcely heard from them since.

In the meantime we had begun with a younger group the real business of religious education. This was done under the supervision of a trained leader of Christian ideals and exemplary Christian character. Trained leadership and teachers were provided in the Sunday school. Christian Endeavor and other young people's meetings, conducted under splendid Christian leadership, helped to form a continuous process of religious education. Social functions were regularly provided, always under supervision, which were of a high Christian type. There were no dances. Christian service was suggested and engaged in by the young people from the beginning, and the joy of doing it increased daily. Reliability, faithfulness love of the ideal, church loyalty, and an increasing joy in it all, were the fruitage of this kind of religious education. Recently the City C. E. Union organized out of all the Christian Endeavor Societies of the city a class in personal evangelism. Eighteen young people assembled to compose the class and five of the eighteen were from our church—another product of our religious education.

To our mind we proved the case that Religious Education can re-establish the radiance of the Christian life among the young people of today. If you undertake to prove it in your church, remember, that it takes religious education—not playing at the job.—H. L. V. S. in Reformed Church Messenger.

Sunday for Pleasure

When the most prominent church people of a community turn Sunday evening into an occasion of pure pleasure seeking, what chance is there to induce the general public to respect the sacredness of the day? A recent announcement was made through a city paper that at a country club on Sunday evening a symphony musicale would be given, and the plans provided "that nothing be left undone for the pleasure of the guests and that the occasion be befittingly brilliant as an opening function of the very early autumn." A list of the "assisting committee" was then given, in which were the names of several of the best-known church members in the city, some of whom were famed beyond the borders of the state. Incidents of this kind are not confined to that city. The daily press in its society columns discloses similar practices throughout the country. Evidently the Sabbath is not being kept apart for worship, meditation, prayer, nor even for rest. The shining lights in the high social circles by participating in social functions on Sunday are not giving the glint of righteousness. They are not letting their light so shine that others may see their good works and glorify their Father which is in heaven. Their influence pulls away from the quiet path and the holy altar. Their children may be taught at the Sunday school, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy"; but if they learn on arriving home from the church that their parents are off perchance on a pleasure trip, maybe the father golfing, the mother preparing for the symphony musicale at the club, the memorized commandment can be to the children no more than a sham of words.

In numerous ways church people are contributing to the destruction of Sabbath observance. Amongst popular evils this one ranks high. One of the subtle features of the practice of refined Sabbath breaking is that it brings no disgrace upon the offend-

Guarding Our Tongues. Psalm 141:3; James 3:2-5

Little Constance Cary was feeling very unhappy. She was taking a long trip on the train but most little girls have a nice time when they ride on the train. The trouble was this, Constance had just said good-bye to all her little playmates, and she was not going to see them again for a long time. You see Constance was moving to a new town to live.

When Constance's mother found that her little girl was feeling unhappy she said, "What is the matter with my little girl? Don't you like riding on the train?"

"I like riding on the train," said Constance, "but I don't like leaving all of my playmates."

"There will be other children for you to play with in our new town," the mother told her little girl, "and if you will be friendly and nice to all the other children you will soon have as many playmates as ever."

Now a very unfortunate thing happened.

On the very same day that Constance started to school some other new children started. These other new children had a very wicked father and the children of the school knew about it. What do you think the school children did? They thought that Constance was a sister to these other children so they avoided playing with them and with Constance. Now that was a terrible thing for these children to do and it hurt Constance worse than it did the others, for the other children could play with each other but Constance had no one at all to play with. As Constance passed some children she heard them saying, "Her father is a wicked man and our mother doesn't want us to play with her."

Constance went home and told her mother about it. Her mother wishing to help her little girl went to see her teacher and told her that Constance was unhappy and that she hoped the teacher would try to help her.

Next day when the children went out to play the teacher called to Constance and said,

"You stay in with me this recess and we will see if we can find something interesting to play together."

So from day to day the teacher played with the little girl, hoping that the other children would see that she liked little Constance and that then the children would play with the little girl, too. Instead of that happening however something else did. A few days later as Constance came to school the children called out:

"There goes the teacher's pet. Constance is the teacher's pet."

Now the children knew that this was not true and that the teacher liked all of them and wanted to help all of them but they liked to tease. Constance was so little and timid that this hurt her very much.

A few days later Constance did not come to school. The children wondered where she was until the teacher got up and said, "Children, Constance Cary is very sick. She got sick very suddenly yesterday evening. Her mother says that all through the night, last night, Constance kept saying, 'The children don't like me, mother. I don't want to get well, for there is no one to play with me in this town. They tell stories about me and they don't like me.'"

All the boys and girls felt very bad when the teacher got through talking. Finally one little girl said, "I think Constance is a nice little girl."

Then someone said, "Let's go right now and tell Constance that we like her and want her to get well so that we can play with her and let's not ever tell stories about anyone, again."

A Letter from Dr. Gribble

Sunnyside, Washington, Oct 5, 1926.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Everything on our field in Africa continues to be "as bright as the promises of God."

Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy's little son arrived on July 4, and bears the name of Lester Washington.

Mr. Sheldon and Miss Cope were to have been married about the last of July and the new station at Bossangou was receiving preparatory steps toward their occupation.

Work was progressing at Yaloke and Bassai, in spite of opposition, especially at the latter place. Opposition is Satan's compliment to our work.

As to the plans of missionaries on furlough, Miss Deeter is bravely continuing her preparation for the field. Marguerite and I are planning to reach France via England early in November. We have given up the Panama route, as Marguerite must pay full fare on that line, and as we have discovered its slowness, requiring 40 days from Seattle to Europe.

We are at present planning therefore to cross the continent via Long Beach, New Orleans, Washington, Harrisburg and New York.

We are planning to take third class tourist passage to England as this has been highly recommended and is much cheaper than either first or second. We will, we hope, continue to be able to recommend it after having experienced it! Early November is not the most ideal time for crossing, but again we ask an interest in your prayers and are thankful that it is only five days instead of forty.

Brother and Sister Weed are caring for a little boy of three in need of a home. We are thankful for this as it means and will mean so much of comfort in the home during Marguerite's absence.

We ask your prayers for her in France, as well as for myself, that we may make that progress in French which will be to the glory of God and for the furtherance of the gospel, especially in the last unevangelized frontiers of the world.

Pray also that the way may be opened for the speedy going forth of Brother Floyd Taber, that he may not be delayed in the prosecution of his medical studies in France. Continue in prayer for Brother Miles Taber and Brother Hardman who are taking their pre-medical work at Ashland.

Addresses for the near future are as follows:

Long Beach, California, 1330 E. Third St., Care L. S. Bauman, Oct. 20-25.

New Cumberland, Pa., Oct. 25, Nov. 1.

After that address—

From this point mail will be forwarded to us until we are able to give you our definite address at Montpellier in Southern France.

After a lapse of several months, we feel we must not delay longer in calling upon the Evangelist family, and say that we still live and work in this section of the Lord's vineyard. To say that we have been busy may seem to be using only a bit of customary verbiage, but truly the past summer has been one of few idle hours. And yet, in line with the adage, "Keep busy to keep happy," a joy has been realized, even when the muscles and brain were fatigued.

Joy has come to many of the community here because of the realization of certain hopes of several years' standing. Likewise, we, also, have been made to rejoice because of this same hope entertained from almost the beginning of our labors.

Often have we brought to your attention the imperative need of school work in connection with our other important activities. The Heavenly Father has seen fit to grant us this beginning, and now the fourth month of school work is being entered, the term beginning July 12.

Last spring the Lord led us very definitely to take the path which we have tried to pursue, and on May 1 actual steps were taken towards the erection of a small dormitory. Funds were very meager, but by close buying and some donation of discounts and labor, and the writer doing practically all the carpenter work, a building entirely sufficient for a beginning stands almost completely furnished as far as present needs are concerned. No indebtedness was incurred. Of course, since it was impossible to build two dormitories, it was necessary to limit boarding pupils to one sex only. It was not difficult to decide which—girls—for they are the downtrodden, of course. Boys who live near enough to return home of nights are admitted to the school as students. The start is small and modest, but attendance, interest and influence are taking on a healthy growth, all of which is far from discouraging.

Yes, there are grave problems and real disappointments, but we can truly say the brightest stars have arisen in the horizon of the possibilities of this field since this school has been in progress.

May we not give some definite data as to the need that is being met through this embryo project.

You understand that this is a privately-controlled, tuition school. There is a county free school near by, but do not arrive at the conclusion that efforts are being duplicated, for this is not the case (putting it very mildly).

One of third-grader's fathers is an ex-teacher of the county. He made the statement that he simply did not know what he would do with the son if this private school were not available. He would not send him to the local free school. And a brighter boy is difficult to find occupying any school seat in the land.

A seven-year-old girl, a real marvel in brilliancy, ready for the third grade in some branches (although never before in school), comes with her mother each Monday morning by train, remains in our care until Friday evening when mother comes for her. This girl's father is also a former county teacher, and a county school is only a short distance from their home; but the extra trouble and expense is no consideration.

Another girl of 11. Father, a former school teacher, although deceased. Comes to us from a distance of twenty-five or thirty miles, through the influence of a local friend of the school. This girl has never had a solid year's work before. She gives promise of splendid possibilities.

Still another little black-eyed child of 7. Father and mother not living together, but both interested and helping support the child in school. Father, again, an ex-school teacher.

Then here is a brother and sister, whose mother, a widow, washes and earns a living in the hardest sort of way; but determined the tuition shall be forthcoming regularly for the children's educational advantage. And Minnie! A pitiful, fatherless waif of 10, comes with scarcely any regular school experience. She comes with a frail body, much undernourished, her large, sad, blue eyes so prominent in her drawn face; but due to the big-heartedness of one of our faithful local members Minnie now has a home with sufficient food and clothing. We are making no charge for her tuition, but here is a splendid opportunity for some of our northern Brethren to take up the small expense of this child's tuition.

Thus enumeration and narration might continue somewhat further, but can we not at this point answer the question, "Is the work worth while?" Are the marvelous opportunities wrapped up in these little children worth our time and talents and resources? Can the church afford to carry forward a project of this nature? Rather, had we not better ask, Can we afford to let these opportunities of soul saving slip betwixt our fingers through lack of vision?

And so, indeed, amidst trials, disappointments and would-be discouragements we can truly say these little mites of humanity, without any previous opportunity under the auspices of Christian education, brighten the days as we are made to realize that each little body temples a soul—a soul to be lost in eternal woe or saved to make up his jewels.

It might be of interest to know that we have chosen Paul's first European convert's name as the basis for a school title of the little Krypton institution, "Lydian Girls' Boarding School." You will remember that little service so dominantly feminine down by the riverside near Philippi. Likewise, by the side of the North Fork of the Kentucky River, is another group, predominantly "young women," learning of that same Jesus which Paul adored and preached. May we hold up this Savior, in some measure at least, with the fervor and in the purity manifested by the great Apostle!

Winter is now swiftly approaching again and we desire to call attention to the acceptability of used clothing from any of our northern churches who may desire to aid this work in such manner. Please send to the writer at Krypton, Kentucky (Perry County). But above all, Brethren, pray for us that we might be given strength and grace to accomplish that to which he has called us according to his most excellent purpose.

THE PROTESTANT POPULATION

The following statistics on the Protestant population of the world, taken from "The New Outlook," may be of interest to many of our readers:

Statistics presented to the Stockholm Conference on Christian life and work give the total Protestant population of the earth as 195,100,000. The Protestant population of the British Empire is reckoned at 46,000,000, divided as follows: Anglican, 28,600,000; Free churches, 800,000; Church of Scotland, 2,700,000; United Free Church of Scotland, 1,500,000; Irish Presbyterians, 800,000; Canadian Presbyterians, 1,400,000; Canadian Methodists, 1,100,000; Canadian Baptists, 400,000; Canadian Lutherans, 200, 000; Church of Australia, 1,600,000; Church of South Africa, 600,000. In continental Europe the Protestant population is said to be: Germany, 40,300,000; Switzerland, 2,200,000; Holland, 3,600,000; France, 1,400,000; Denmark, 3,200,000; -Norway, 2,300,000; Sweden, 5,700,000; Finland, 3,300,000; Esthonia, 1,000,000; Latvia, 1,500,000; Russia, 1,100,000; Lithuania, 200,000; Poland, 1,500,000; Czechoslovakia, 2,100,000; Austria, 300,000; Hungary, 3,600,000; Roumania, 1,300,000. The same figures give the Protestant population of the United States as 74,500,000.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA NOTES

The meeting conducted by Rev. B. F. Owen at Salem in the forepart of July resulted in ten coming forward, five of whom were reconsecrations. Four have been baptized and received into the church. The work at Salem is going well with the largest Sunday school this summer in the history of the school.

Our vacation this year was to start the nineteenth of July and the people very kindly helped us in every way to get off with a good start. We visited in and near Washington, D. C. for two days and then set forth for Philadelphia. On arriving there we spent two days visiting points of interest such as the grave of Alexander Mack, and took in part of the Sesquicentennial. This was somewhat disappointing, but when one was close it was worth seeing. We made our headquarters with Brother R. Paul Miller and family, even had we not visited the Sesquicentennial the trip would have been worth while just to spend some time with the busy and congenial pastor of the Philadelphia first church. From here we visited points of interest along the Atlantic up into Maine, passing through the thirteen original colonies. Our return was across the much heralded Mohawk Trail, which was not beyond the Midland trail from Kanawha Falls to Lookout, West Virginia. The trip was made across New York to Niagara Falls. This was our first visit to this wonder of nature but feel that it is somewhat over advertised, unless we anticipated too much. From here we came on down to Ashland where the Publication House and the College were visited. From here we came down to Glenford where we had been invited to address a large homecoming on the eighth of August. The address which was one that has been frequently given opposing the monkey origin of man was well received. We returned to Oak Hill having traversed fifteen states and districts and driven three thousand miles, arriving here August 12.

Instead of the ones who had contemplated going to Winona in considerable numbers we had only a delegation of five from here.

September 6 Rev. A. L. Lynn of Pittsburgh, started a meeting at Oak Hill. This meeting closed September 26 and is now numbered with the meetings of the past. The total results of this meeting which could be tabulated were seven coming forward during the meeting and two since the meeting closed. Eight have been baptized. There has been a continual ingathering here since we came on the field but even yet there are still many whom we hope to reach.

This was the first opportunity to work in a meeting with Lynn. We were in College together and have been acquainted for years. He is a congenial work-fellow and is willing to do all he possibly can to make a meeting a success. He was well received in the church and among outsiders and not one single criticism came to the ears of the writer concerning him during the campaign. We feel that this is remarkable when we consider the fact that we are living in a very critical age. The last day of the meeting the Sunday school hit the highest mark of its history when the records stated that there were 207 present for Sunday school. The work is going well in this field but do not think for a moment that Satan has left this part of the world to spend more time elsewhere. He is working overtime here and the progress made here is the result of vigorous efforts.

As the newly elected member of the Kentucky Committee, we expect to spend some time at the Mission Station at Lost Creek this month. We desire an interest of the brotherhood in the work of the Kingdom we are making an effort to do in this part of the Lord's Vineyard.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

A FALSE CLAIM

Recently there has been an attempt to put the Roman Catholics of Colonial days into the class of promoters of religious liberty, along with Roger Williams and William Penn. Both Governor Smith and Secretary of Labor Davis, in public speech, have proclaimed the Roman Catholics of Maryland, the first to give complete religious toleration in America. They are placed by this statement in a class more advanced than either the Puritans, the Cavaliers, the Quakers or the Baptists. Now everywhere Roman Catholics are claiming to be the originators of the idea of American toleration.

What are the historical facts, that any one of these men can ascertain in half an hour's research in almost any public library?

The original charter to George Calvert was given by Charles I, a Protestant king. Calvert died before he completed his plans, and the charter was renewed by Charles II, another Protestant, to his son Cecil Calvert.

The encyclopedia of United States history says of this Lord Baltimore, "In religion and politics, he was very flexible, being indifferent to either and he did little for the religious and intellectual cultivation of the colonists." His charter required him to give full toleration to all Christians except Unitarians. In this he simply obeyed the law of a Protestant king and of a Protestant country.

In his first colony he sent out his brother Leonard as Governor. He was accompanied by another Brother, George Calvert and two Protestant Councillors, Jeremy Hawley and Thomas Cornwallis. In the party there were about 20 gentlemen, mostly Roman Catholics, two priests and about 300 laborers and farmers most of them Protestants, who to make themselves secure against future prejudice, took the oath of allegiance to the crown before sailing. There never was a day when this colony did not have a majority of Protestant citizens.

This religious toleration then, was not a Roman Catholic product, but was a policy forced upon a very indifferent Roman Catholic proprietor, by a Protestant king and a Protestant majority of his colony.

Thus, this claim of Roman Catholics to have been the promoters of religious liberty, falls to the ground, when the slightest touch of historical fact is brought to bear upon it. It is so with every claim they set up, as the originator of anything worth while, in our American life.—The Christian Statesman.

TRAIN FOR LARGER THINGS

Every Endeavorer misses much if he is not an active worker in his Christian Endeavor union.

The union work is the Endeavorer's training for the management of large and important affairs. In it he discovers how to move men in the mass. In it he becomes familiar with the raising of considerable sums of money; he learns how to organize and conduct committees for big enterprises; he becomes self-possessed in the presence of large assemblies.

A Christian Endeavorer trained in union work will not be nonplussed if confronted with the great interests of his denomination, but will handle them like a veteran.

And even if the Endeavorer never is called upon to conduct some large affair for his denomination, he will be stronger and more confident all his life because of this training he has had in the big things of the Christian Endeavor union. If you want to make the most of yourself for the kingdom of God, do not neglect union work.

Incidentally, this is one of the reasons why it is so unwise for a local church to withdraw its young people from Christian Endeavor and organize them in some little local form, which isolates them from the great body of Christian young people.—A. R. W.

THE "NEXT ROOM"

A dear friend who went into the "next room" some years ago—a man intensely involved in the activities of this world, practical to the last degree, but as spiritual in his experiences as he was practical in his secular engagements—said not long before his death: "I am very curious to know how it is going to be there." Heaven interested him.

An unthinkable heaven practically renders void the doctrine of immortality. It does not prevent our being immortal, of course, but robs the doctrine of all vitalizing influence over earthly life and experience. A reality—no matter how real it is—a reality wrapped about with so dense an obscurity that we cannot at all think our way into it is not an open door, but a wall of adamant against which the soul can only fling itself helplessly.

Our life, even though it be a century long, is a stuffy prison-house. A mere colorless conception of great times to come is an agony, not a hope. We want something belonging to it that we can think; easy tracks out upon which our thoughts can run, undismayed and unwearied. We want to feel the rush of the winds blowing in upon us fresh and lustily from off the heights of the years eternal.

That helps to make great living, with the eighty-year wall blown down and the century line washed out, and the little day we are living in and the small place we habit in, saturated with a bit of the fullness and vastness that reaches all the way from the eternity that is past to the ages that stretch forth to the interminable hereafter. —Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D.

SENATOR PEPPER SPEAKS ON STEWARDSHIP

This is written with the profound conviction that these three things are true:

First, that our way of raising money for the church has been eminently unsatisfactory.

Second, that there is a perfectly definite and available remedy for the evil.

Third, that if the remedy is applied, the campaigns which many so much dislike may become things of the past.

The fundamental trouble with our attempts to enlist men, women, and money for the service of the church is that our system falls short of bringing home to each individual his personal share of the entire responsibility; and only partially confronts him with a concrete demand for the discharge of a definite obligation. The loss to the individual, therefore, is quite as great as to the church. The church fails to secure adequate support, the individual is left without a definite standard of Christian obligation.

The remedy must be found by providing an exact measure of individual responsibility, and by effecting such an organization as will secure its acceptance not by a few individuals, but by all.

Horace Bushnell probably had such a consummation in mind when he said: "One more revival, only one more is needed, the revival of Christian stewardship, the consecration of the money power to God. When that revival comes, the Kingdom of God will come in a day." Or as Mr. Gladstone went so far as to say: "I believe that the diffusion of the principle and practice of systematic beneficence will prove the moral specific of our age."

To gauge the possibility of success in such a venture of faith, it is necessary to picture the state of mind in which the individual churchman would have to be in order that this prososal to end campaigns might actually become effective. If the picture represents something obviously and hopelessly unattainable it is a mere waste of time to pursue the subject. If, on the other hand, the picture reveals a normal human being, managing his affairs in such a way that business principles and Christian stewardship are seen to coincide, maybe it is really worth while to urge church people to make the picture a reality.

As you study any man who has adopted this principle, you will see that he has taken a long step toward peace of mind. Indeed, the assertion may be hazarded that no single habit conduces more to happy living than the special account habit.

Heretofore, many appeals which have come have been a cause of annoyance because he was asked to give away what he thought was some of his own money. Now that he has set aside in a special account God's money, it is no longer his own, but he has become God's steward with the duty of determining how much of the fund shall be devoted to various kinds of charitable endeavor. When an appeal is made to him which he knows to be a worthy cause, it is not a question of whether or not his household expenses will be large or small this month; the only question he has to decide is this: "Is there a balance in the stewardship account?" Nobody who gives the plan a fair trial will ever abandon it.

The thing must begin with each individual sometime, somewhere. Why not now, and with you?—Hon. George Wharton Pepper.

"More Than They All"

"TWO mites"—a simple little farthing,—
It was so small!

And yet—she might e'en then have halved it,

It was her all!
One mite for God, and one she needed
Of wealth so small?

No; trusting to the God of widows
She gave her all!

And so, in sight of him who "saw" it,
It was not small;

For, he who watched HOW it was given, said,

"MORE than they all."

—L. M. Warner.

LABOR SUPPORTS PROHIBITION

Ethelbert Stewart, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor, definitely puts to rest the wet's statement that American labor desires a modification of the prohibition act.

A letter to Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National President of the W. C. T. U., from Mr. Stewart indicates clearly that American workmen were losing their taste for liquor even before prohibition and that the labor leader with brewery affiliations who attempts to deliver American labor to the wets will be unsuccessful.

Mr. Stewart's letter to Mrs. Boole is based on researches and reports covering a wide range of time and industries. It shows that in the great steel, iron, and glass industries and other substantial activities fifty-three per cent of the men drank in 1889; in 1901 at least half the families of workmen used beer or liquor in some form, but by 1918 less than thirty per cent of the families of workmen used liquor in any form. Mr. Stewart attributes the decrease of drinking to education among the workmen, a statement at variance with the politician's appeal to give back to the workingman the saloon for which he is crying.

Milk in enormous quantities began to be used in place of beer by the workmen in the overheated steel and iron mills and glass works before prohibition, the substitution of milk in place of beer.

AN ENCOURAGING SHOWING IN JAPAN

The head of the Religious Bureau of the Department of Education of Japan, Mr. J. Shimomura, was quoted some weeks ago as having given the following statistics:

"According to the statistics of Japan there are forty-eight million Buddhists, seventeen million Shintoists, but only two hundred and ten thousand Christians. Thus we see the relative numerical strength of these three religions. Buddhism represents about seventy-five per cent of the population. But we cannot say that these are real believers in the same sense in which the Christians believe Christianity. Investigation has been made into the religious beliefs of students in 177 colleges. The religious bodies were represented by the following numbers: Buddhist 6,292, Christian 4,924, Shintoist 180, others 579. If we judge by the number of organizations, we find that the students of the higher educational institutions may be said to show their religious inclinations as follows: Buddhists 45½ percent, Christians 51 percent, Shintoists 9 percent, others 2½ percent. The strength as shown by membership is as follows: Buddhists 52½ percent, Christians 41 percent, Shintoists 1½ percent, others nearly 5 percent.

In pointing out the encouraging significance of such facts, The Presbyterian Banner says: "The students of the universities and colleges represent the intelligent classes of the future and from this survey of their faith we may conclude that the above proportions represent the relative strength of these religions among the thoughtful classes of Japan. According to this survey Christianity, shows superior influence and strength"—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

mind. His parents spent enormous sums upon his musical education. His teachers gave of their time and thought for his development. The young man himself was anxious to engage in musical leadership, but shortly after his graduation, for some unaccountable reason he turned back to a former occupation. His parents and his teachers might say to him: "If you love us, make some use of your music."

One of the leading speakers at a certain denominational conference gave forth an earnest and needed appeal for young men to enter the professions and other callings with the same motive of service as is expected of the minister and missionary workers. Perhaps the church has placed its life work too much in the spiritual department and made it appear more sacred than other callings. We believe earnestly that every vocation should be entered with the guidance of the Spirit of God, and should be pursued in the spirit of service, but we also believe that a man who is called of God to do special Christian work throughout his life dares not turn aside to something else. These other callings are a service to society, and the individuals in them can labor with a high motive. Each man and each woman must in the fear of God determine where they can serve to the limit.—Adopted from Western Advocate.

GRACE AT MEALS—FOR ADULTS

(We believe many of our readers, especially heads of families, will be glad for this collection of prayers.—Editor.)

Lord of heaven and earth and Father of us all, hear us as we offer thanks for the gift of bread. Amen.

Thy mercies are new in the morning and at the noon tide never failing. We render thee our thanks for all, O Lord. Amen.

Abide with us now, O Lord, for the day is far spent. Be thou our Guest as the evening shadows fall. Amen.

For flocks and herds and fruits and grain,
For milk and honey, too;
We thank the God of suns and stars,
And one small drow of dew. Amen.

The gifts from thy hand constantly bless us, our Father. May the Giver himself be more welcome to our souls than any gifts. Amen.

Thy blessing has been upon thy people, O Lord. We offer thee our thanks for all thy benefits. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

To thee, who fillest the hungry with good things and satisfiest the desire of every living thing, we return our thanks, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Lord, give us strength to deny ourselves the sumptuous fare of earth lest the wants of our brethren go unsupplied. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Quicken in us, O Lord, the sense of gratitude, that its graciousness may overflow into many cups of water given in thy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father, we make our meat offerings and drink offerings with contrite and thankful hearts. May joyous service seal them unto thee. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

In the morning will we offer our prayer unto thee, O Lord, and be quickly mindful that thou hast dealt bountifully with us. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

We laid us down and slept. We awaked, for Jehovah sustained us. May thy sustaining grace be sufficient for the hours of the day before us. Through our Lord we pray. Amen.

Our Father, be thou "nearer to us than breathing" through the hours of this day we shall live by the strength which thou dost give us. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The lines are fallen unto us in pleasant places. Our Father, may thy children whose bread comes bitterly, be on our hearts and minds. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O thou who committest to our trust daily bread for growth and strength, guide us by thy loving hand to the performance of thy holy will all our days. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father, our heritage has been a goodly one; our daily bread fails not. Remember in mercy those whose lot is heavy, and save us from forgetting that thy kingdom on earth must come through us, Thy children. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O gracious Father, we thank thee for the tree which bringeth forth fruit in season; for ripening grain; for meat that strengthens the heart of man. May we not be unmindful of the love which planned all things well for thy children. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

GRACE AT MEALS—FOR CHILDREN

God is kind to us each day;

God smiles down on us each night;

Now we thank him for our food

And for the stars that shine so bright.

Amen.

All around the world so fair

Children clasp their hands in prayer,

Thanking God for daily food,

Asking him to make them good.

Amen.

All the little children praise thee

For thy care and tender love;

For our food and for our houses,

For the sun that shines above. Amen.

Bless us, Jesus, in our home,

Bless all those across the sea.

Please send needed food and drink

Every day for them and me.

Amen.

Father of all little children,

I would bring my thanks to thee.

When thou blestest little children,

Place thy hands, dear Lord, on me.

Amen.

ers. Rather are they made popular among the leading people. Yet by some kind of persuasion, rebuke, or appeal the offending church members must be induced to mend their ways. This question is too vital to be neglected. Laymen must participate in the effort to correct the evil. Smiles or sneers in the few when the minister pleads for the reformation of his congregation in this particular should never occur. Pew and pulpit must pray and work together to save the Sabbath, and now is the crisis on so distinctly that no time can be lost.—Christian Advocate.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Jack Frost's Bed

First come the mattress, frozen ground,

On that, two sheets of ice,

Then blankets of the whitest snow

To make it cold and nice.

When North Wind rushes to put

A snowdrift 'neath his head,

Then twist sheets Jack snuggles down

Contentedly in bed.

The Adventures of Peter Piper

Essa went to the window for about the tenth time that evening. All she could see was the cold rain beating in gusts down the pane, and her own anxious little face reflected against the dreary darkness.

"Oh, dear, I do wish Peter Piper would come home soon," she sighed.

Billy looked up from the lessons he had been trying to do at the big living-room table: "Gee whilliker! I wish he would, too. It's such an awful rotten night. You don't suppose he's still up—"

"Dear me, no!" Essa answered so quickly that Billy didn't even finish his sentence. "Only," and she looked very much worried indeed, "only he just might be—and—I'm scared if he's up there on a nasty night like this he'd—die!" she hardly managed to keep the sob out of her voice as she finished.

"Aw, don't worry, Essa," Billy comforted bravely. "He's down long ago, I bet, and anyway, you know about a cat having nine lives."

Mother had been busy all evening at her little writing-desk in the alcove, but now she appeared with a cheery little half-yawn and announced: "Nine o'clock. Bedtime for a pair of young persons known as Essa and Billy. Come, clear away your books! Why, what's the matter, kiddies? You look like a funeral!"

"It's Peter Piper, mother," said Essa. "He hasn't come home, and we're afraid he's up a telegraph pole over on James Street, and it's so rainy and windy out that we're scared if he is, he'll be dead by morning."

"Good gracious! and, if he is, how did he come to get up there, pray?"

"Well, when you sent me down to the store, after I came home from school, he followed me up the street, like he does, you know, and when I got that far, Billy came tearing along with Tom and that new bulldog of Tom's, and Peter just started up the nearest telegraph post like a shot. I called and called, but he wouldn't come down as long as the dog was there, so I had to go on. I 'spected he'd get down all right, 'cause he wasn't up very far, and he's always climbing, you know, and then, when it started to rain, I just hurried home and didn't even go around that way to look if he was still up. I didn't really start thinking about him until after supper, and he wasn't home."

Mother pursued up her lips and thought very seriously. "If we'd thought of it earlier, you might have run over just to ease your minds, but it's too late and stormy for you kiddies to go now, and daddy won't be home from his meeting until eleven, so I'm afraid there's nothing to do but go to bed and forget about it until morning."

Billy went to sleep much sooner than Essa, but all night he dreamed of roaring lions and yawning precipices and cold waves rolling over him and making him gasp and shiver. He awakened very early, and, slipping on his bathrobe, crept downstairs. No Peter appeared with a bound and a "purr-r-meon," to brush delightedly against his legs. He went back and dressed hurriedly, and then slipped out as quietly as a mouse.

The rain had stopped, but it was damp, and the wind was chilly and raw. He began to run to keep himself warm. As he turned the corner on to James Street, his heart almost stopped beating, for he thought he heard a faint, pitiful "meowing." Sure enough, there was poor Peter, dragged and wailing, at the very top of the fifty-foot pole. Billy called, and Peter cried more loudly in response, but he was plainly too terrified to even attempt getting down. Billy tried to climb up after him, but the bottom spike was too high for him to reach, and Peter was right up above the crosspieces, so he could not have gotten hold of him if he had been able to get up. There was nothing to do but run back home for help.

He burst in like a small hurricane, and shouted: "Mummy! Daddy! Peter's away up at the very top of a telegraph pole, and he's half dead with the cold and wet. Come 'n help get him down!"

Mother was at her door in a second with a kimono around her shoulders, and Essa was out in the hall with her hair wild and her eyes wide.

"Come and tell us what to do, daddy," mother called when she had gotten the story straight. "Poor Peter Piper has been up at the top of a telegraph pole all night, and the kiddies are half crazy over it. How are we going to get him down?"

"I don't know, I'm sure—unless you call out the fire department, and get the hook-and-ladder fellows up after him," father replied sleepily.

"Nonsense," said mother with a little laugh. "But that gives me an idea—I know what I will do. I'll call up the nearest police station, and see what they suggest for a pussy in distress."

The officer at the station was most obliging. "We'll fix it up for you, madam," he promised readily. "We'll have one of the telephone linemen climb up and bring him down."

Billy rushed out again to be on the spot, and it really wasn't very long before the man came along, grumbling good-naturedly about cats in general and this cat in particular. However, he was sorry for Peter when he saw how exhausted he was, and brought him down very gently.—Dora Smith Conover, in Christian Guardian.

WHAT A WIFE'S PRAYERS DID

Adverse criticism of those who object to the surrender of the vital doctrines of Christianity would make it appear that such objections are opposed to the spirit of Christianity. As a sample, one writer went to her room, and kneeling before God prayed for her husband, and asked that he might lose his money, for she thought that was the only way in which he could be cured of the gambling fever.

When he got on to the course he found his friends crowding the bookmakers to put their money on the horses. They seemed to be backing every horse in the field. Instead of joining them as usual, he stood back and watched them, and almost involuntarily said to himself, "What a pack of fools," and then added after a moment's thought, "and I'm one of them." God was answering the wife's praying on the spot, and doing better than she prayed, for he there and then lost all interest in the horses, and wandered off the course without making a bet, a thoroughly wretched man.

He was a mystery to himself. Why couldn't he sleep at night? He laid the blame upon the wife and would get up and drink and smoke and rampage about the house swearing, and then return to his bed ashamed of himself and yet more angry because of that which had come into his house to mar his pleasure.

The Christian wife had some new friends, who loved the Savior and believed in prayer. She invited them to her house one afternoon in order to make definite and earnest prayer to God that he would at once work to save his soul. The prayer was to continue from 3 to 4. He was posting his cashbook in his office in the city, completely ignorant of what was going on at home. When he had finished—it was 3:55—he threw the book away from him, and exclaimed, "My God, I've reached the limit. I'm done; something's got to happen;" when suddenly in that quiet office a voice, that seemed to him perfectly audible, said, "Would you prefer to serve Satan than God?" As, that was the point; he was fighting against God, wrestling hard against God's determination to bless him. He was flinging God's mercy in his face, thinking that he was stronger than God, that was the cause of all his misery. Filled with awe as a result of the voice that he had heard, he buried his head in his hands and said, "God forbid that I should pretend to be stronger than he."

That evening at tea he was very quiet, but presently he asked his wife, "Does God speak to men today as he used to do?" "Sometimes," she replied. "Then, he said 'He spoke to me at 4 o'clock today,' and broke down utterly. He had reached his limit in a different way from what he thought. He was done in the fight he had been waging, and something did happen, the greatest and best thing of all. His wife, converted only six weeks herself, told him of her Savior, how upon the Cross of Salvation he had died for sinners such as he was, and that his precious Blood could wash him clean of every stain of sin in God's sight. It was a simple sermon that she preached to him, and from the heart; very different from the polished, passionless, and powerless sermons that are preached from many pulpits in the land today, but it was effectual. He saw the way of blessing, bowed his knees before God, and there and then confessed himself to be a sinner indeed, and put his whole confidence in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation.

I heard him, in the very room in his house that had been built for Jazz dancing, telling the story to nearly fifty people. With a face radiant with joy he told them of Christ as a living Savior, whose blood satisfied him. A happy man is that erstwhile gambler, and a happy family is his, for his whole house has believed the Gospel, as did the house of the jailor at Philippi.

I pass on the story for the sake of some who may be seeking in vain for satisfaction in the excitement of a life of leisure. The end of these things is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." And God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Rom. 6: 23; 5:8).—The British Evangelist.

"O CAPTAIN! MY CAPTAIN!"

By W. Y. Fullerton, London

When Joshua went out alone, the night of his vision, the people of God were between two ages as we are, at the terminal point of one and the germinal point of the other. And Joshua himself was about to attempt a new task, like many of ourselves. That night he learned three things which are the whole secret of Christian living.

First, that there was One in the warfare on whom he had not reckoned. Suddenly the heavenly visitant appeared. He was neither traveler nor shepherd. The remarkable thing was that he was there with a sword. The Lord always comes to us as we need him. To Abraham as a wayfarer, to Jacob as a wrestler, to Joshua as a warrior. The old Welsh woman was right when she heard, to her disappointment, that her Lord was not born in Wales, but she brightened and replied, "Well, he always speaks to me in Welsh," which is quite likely.

Second, Joshua learned that everything depended on that One. A worthy and courageous leader, he challenged this Stranger; but, had he known, he would have bowed before him earlier. When Livingstone gave the story of his travels to the Senate at Cambridge, I am told that he ended by asking why he undertook such a task, and then unaffectedly added that it was because his Master had said, "Lo I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." That is a testimony that might be multiplied. Herbert Stead tells us that at Oxford one evening, near Magdalen Bridge, the Lord came to him. "He was there beside me. No reminiscence; no phantom; but himself. He made me to know him as the Present Companion, the Living Leader, the Overmastering Lover."

Third, Joshua learned that there was only one place he could occupy. Joshua had gone out as commandant, but came back as a subaltern. Captain Joshua became Lieutenant Joshua. The royal Captain had come to him, and all the responsibility for the campaign now rested on him. Joshua henceforth stood at attention. The secret of peace is to receive Jesus as Captain. That done, we can not be responsible for our life, we are only responsible for obedience. We may be sure that Joshua, having met the Captain once, went out and met him again and again. Each evening would bring another interview; and the only way for us to live triumphantly is to meet the Captain day by day.—The Baptist Times and Freeman.

The BRETHERN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHERN -

Regeneration By The Holy Spirit

THIS great truth is one that needs to be emphasized in every generation. The inveterate error of most theologians is to put God in the background, and thrust between him and the souls that he has made a vast array of intermediate and secondary appliances—creeds, rituals, sacrificing priests, and infallible churches. Against this tendency I make bold to assert that God is native to the human spirit, in the sense that he has direct access to it. "In him," as was declared by St. Paul on Mars Hill, "we live and move and have our being." There is no height nor depth of our natures, no unexplored chambers of our intelligence, no secret nook nor corner of our conscience, into which he cannot enter, bringing with him all the purifying gales of the heavenly world. The greatest English singer of this century, philosopher and theologian as well as singer, has set this same truth to perfect music:

Speak to him, thou; for he hears and Spirit with Spirit can meet;
Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

Evangelism: An Intensive Campaign in Every Church

Evangelism is the inescapable duty of every church. That is not proclaiming a new truth, but reiterating an old, one perfectly familiar and generally recognized. It is a truth however that is so hard to get on the consciences of church members that we can never cease to repeat and re-emphasize it. While it would be difficult to find a church that would not agree to the responsibility that rests upon it for seeking to win men to Jesus Christ, there are not a few whose indifference indicates that they do not believe it very strongly; they do not take their responsibility very seriously and make no reasonable effort to discharge their duty. Perhaps we are warranted in making the accusation broader so as to include the larger number of our churches, and if we were to be very frank and candid, we might make it more personal and say there are few of us who show a proper zeal and put forth any really worthy effort along this line. We are ready to give mental assent to the proposition, but not so willing to give heart and hand-and-feet response to it. We know that evangelism is the duty of the church but our hearts are not very generally gripped with the compassion and urgency of it. This we fear is the far more prevalent attitude of our churches than we have been wont to realize or to acknowledge, and is possibly one of the reasons for the comparative slump in church activity at the present time.

When we assert that there ought to be an intensive campaign of evangelism in every church this year, we can imagine an assent from practically every reader. But what we wish to emphasize is the intensive phase of it. And that does not mean merely a series of meetings during which evangelistic sermons are preached and an invitation is extended to souls to accept Christ as their Savior. It does mean that, but more. That might not be an intensive campaign, at least it often is not intensive enough to get results. And because such campaigns very often fail to get the desired results, there are those who are blaming the preaching campaign and are proposing to do away with the preaching phase of evangelism. We are not convinced that this plan is destined to prove satisfactory. It seems rather a reversion to the other extreme and extremes are never reasonable nor abiding. But the tendency does emphasize an outstanding weakness of the ordinary type of evangelism, that of dependence upon professional experts to do the whole task. Trained evangelists and imported personal workers undoubtedly have their place, but the church cannot discharge its duty by proxy. It cannot sit back and watch on while others—its paid servants—do the work. The effect of such a policy is bad, both for the church and for the community. The tendency is to place the dollar mark and statistics too high as signs of success. That has blackened the eye of professional evangelism more than anything else. It should not cause us to do away with services of the professional evangelist, who is an evangelist in the true sense of the term, but the straining efforts of some to count noses and dollars has had the effect of lessening confidence in all itinerating evangelists. Moreover the results of such professional efforts are often so transitory that six months after nothing remains but an unsatisfactory memory and a padded church roll. What else can be expected where the church depends wholly or even primarily on the sensational, tear-producing, professional evangelist and his intricate and smoothly working machinery? The church needs powerful, Gospel-preaching evangelists, but when the church's evangelistic efforts are confined to the preacher and he is praised or blamed according to the number of names he is able to add to the church roster, he is strongly tempted to resort to all sorts of tactics to get numbers, without regard to the permanency and wholesomeness of his campaign. And the fault is not wholly with the evangelist; the church that saddles the whole responsibility on the preacher is equally, if not more largely, to blame.

A church talks about its field being unpromising, the people being largely claimed by other and more distantly situated church groups, and the unconverted of the community being hardened and unresponsive to Gospel appeals. And many a church finds itself in just such a situation. Every advertising scheme or sensational method of the evangelist fails to attract the men and women who are unsaved. With the wariness of a sly old fox they shun every device of the preacher as a trap set to catch them. Men of long experience in such work are telling us that the ordinary revival is seldom effective, that it requires the biggest possible program and the most unusual features to attract attention and to accomplish results. But we are convinced that the most unusual thing that can be devised in the way of modern and effective evangelism is to get the whole church to go after the community in a personal, persistent, tactful, prayerful way, and that would amount to the biggest possible program that a local church could launch. It would be unusual because the average church member is seldom stirred to actual effort at soul winning, and it would be the biggest because the power and effectiveness of no group of evangelistic experts could equal that of the concentrated and concerted effort of the whole church motivated by a love of souls and empowered by the Spirit of God. That is what these hard fields are waiting for, and that is why the conversion of souls is slowing up in many communities. Let the rank and file of the church membership be greatly burdened with a sense of responsibility for the salvation of men and women, burdened to the extent that they will sacrifice time, personal convenience and the pleasure of their many social, fellowship and recreational organizations for a season and will endure embarrassment and rebuff if necessary for Christ's sake, then the indifference of sinners will be changed to keenest interest, hardness of heart will be melted to warmest receptiveness and the spirit of antipathy for religion and aloofness toward the church will be transformed into that of deepest devotion and closest allegiance. The onward march of the Kingdom of God awaits the spread throughout the entire membership of the church of the mighty, moving, going passion of evangelism.

We need preaching evangelism, but we need much more. We need to make an evangelist of every member and to enlist the whole body of the church into a mighty effort in behalf of the unevangelized. And if it is impossible to get the unconverted to come to hear the preaching of the Word, if the evangelist must preach night after night to none but saved persons, it would seem better to dismiss the congregation, or that part of it that can be induced to do personal work, and send them out two and two preaching the Gospel from house to house and so, stir up the community until men and women become concerned about their eternal welfare and flee to the house of God where they may be instructed in the way of life. Visitation evangelism certainly must be given a place in the evangelistic programs of our churches if we are to reach the people who need to be reached. If they will not come to the church we must go to them and with prayer and love for their souls awaken them to a sense of their need and lead them to the preaching of the Word. When the church approaches the hitherto indifferent community in such dead earnestness it will be stirred with interest in a way that will seem marvelous and many who have been looked upon as hardened beyond redemption will be turned to the Lord and the church will save its own soul and become a factor infinitely more vital in the lives of men because of the power that will thereby be conferred upon it. Let us make our campaigns really intensive by carrying the Gospel to every unsaved soul in our various communities. If they will not heed the polite invitations to the services of God's house, send forth men into the highways and byways and "compel" them to come in. It is God's word; let us do it.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother G. E. Drushal reports that the Sunday school and church attendance still hold up splendidly at Lost Creek, Kentucky. The Sunday school has been reorganized with Brother Early at its head. The J. W. Wheeler estate given to the Home Mission Board for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a children's home in Kentucky is not yet available for use, and will not be until after March 30th.

Every one who is interested in having as complete an Annual as can be made should heed the request of the General Conference Secretary, Brother O. C. Starn, especially is it incumbent upon district conference secretaries and persons who delivered addresses at General Conference to see that the copy called for is in the secretary's hands immediately. See his announcement.

Brother E. M. Riddle informs us that the church at Bryan, Ohio, of which he is pastor, will begin a revival meeting on November 1, with Brother C. C. Grisso of Warsaw, Indiana, as evangelist. The Ashland, Ohio, church will begin a similar campaign November 7th with the pastor, Dr. Charles A. Bame as evangelist. Intercessors are invited to pray for these meetings and others that may be in progress.

Two of the good brethren who attended the Indiana conference write their impressions and it is evident that a very successful conference was had. Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor of the entertaining church finds the good accruing abundantly paying for the effort to entertain the conference, and Brother B. H. Flora was greatly stirred by it as evidenced by the fact that he calls it "a modern Pentecost."

Dr. J. C. Beal, pastor of the church at Sunnyside, Washington, reports his work pressing forward, the present situation good and the prospects bright. Rally Day was a successful occasion, and was climaxed by the presence of Dr. Gribble, whose message was very appealing. This church entertained their district conference and rejoiced to have with them Brother C. H. Ashman and two returned missionaries from South America, Brother and Sister Clarence Sickel.

Our attention has been called by Brother H. H. Tay to the fact that some of the pictures published in connection with his widely appreciated series of articles on the Holy Land and credited to Brother Tay were really the photographs of Brother Homer A. Kent, his traveling companion. We are unable now to make it clear to our readers which belonged to whom, but we wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to both these good brethren for the excellent views of Palestine which they have freely supplied from time to time.

The Brethren at Washington, D. C. have progressed in their new building project to the point of laying the corner stone, which they did on October 10th, the pastor, Brother Homer A. Kent, officiating on the occasion. A crowd of three hundred was present to rejoice in and to witness the event. The brotherhood rejoices with the Washington church in this mark of God's favor and in the wise leadership of Brother Kent. The people seem very enthusiastic over the prospect and the various departments are showing good form.

Professor J. A. Garber gives the Christian Endeavorers a report of the proceedings at General Conference, where an encouraging interest was shown in the young people's work. Among the new officers we note the name of Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor at Bryan, Ohio, elected Associate President, and his many friends will acknowledge that he is well fitted to be Brother Garber's right-hand man. We suggest that the secretary of each Endeavor society clips the list of officers and department heads and files it where it will be readily accessible, and that the various local workers be encouraged to use these national leaders.

Brother Arthur Snider, pastor at Mathias, West Virginia, reports eleven accessions as a result of the meeting conducted by Dr. C. A. Bame last August. It was the result of eight days' effort, the last week being filled with rain. At the opening of the campaign Brother Bame preached the sermon at the re-dedication of their church, which had been enlarged and modernized. These good people now have a very efficient plant, and they also have a goodly number of people to make use of it. We congratulate them on this progress, and would be pleased to present to the brotherhood a picture of their new church at a later date if they will provide us with one.

At Pittsburgh, November 10, 11, 12, there will be held an International Goodwill Congress in connection with the eleventh annual meeting of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches. The central themes of this congress will be "The Moral Issues of Disarmament" and "America's Responsibility and Method for International Cooperation." "World conditions give occasion for increased hope of permanent peace. But there remains an ominous uncertainty occasioned by discord and misunderstanding among many of the nations and races. The Pittsburgh convention is to be in a large measure one of appraisal of actual conditions. It will plan a nation-wide campaign for extending American ideals toward international cooperation and permanent peace." This is its own statement of occasion and purpose.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports another good gift, this time from the good Brethren of Philadelphia. The First church of that city pledged $4,445.00 notwithstanding the strong pull that has been made on them during the last year or two for finances for local campaigns. Under the aggressive leadership of their pastor, Brother R. P. Miller, they wiped out the debt on their church and raised a large sum for the improvement of their church building. It speaks well for their loyalty that they did not fail to do a splendid thing for the college in the face of their local obligations. As Brother Bell suggests, this congregation has shown its loyalty by the giving of its students as well as money. The Third church did well, considering its circumstances, having made a gift of $567.00. This faithful and promising group which was served for a number of years by Brother J. E. Braker, has called to its leadership Dr. M. A. Witter, whose ability and consecration gives good assurance of the future of the church. The total gift reported this week is $5,012.00 and turns the dial around to $75,644.63.

The Ohio Council of Churches has launched its second annual Prince of Peace Declamation Contest, which will open on Armistice Sunday, November 7, and offers an opportunity for our churches to enlist their young people of high school age in a highly worthwhile educational activity. It impressed us as a most wise venture a year ago when the first contest was launched, and it proved its worth even to the skeptical, and ought to be entered into by all of our Ohio churches. It would be a splendid thing if some of our churches in other districts would launch such a contest in an individual way and with their own small prizes offered, simply for the educational benefits to be derived thereby. It is to be hoped that other states may get a similar educational program going. In the first contest in Ohio more than 2500 boys and girls engaged, representing 569 churches. Nothing has done so much in Ohio to bring in clear relief the issues involved in world peace. And the sentiment generated in behalf of peace, which will accumulate with each successful contest, will ultimately be brought with powerful influence to bear upon our national ideals and policy. In addition to the interest which churches should have in such a campaign of education as a result of conviction, there is being offered in Ohio as an added incentive $1,000 in cash prizes, also college scholarships and gold, silver and bronze medals. Pastors interested should write to the Ohio Council of Churches, 415 Outlook Building, Columbus, Ohio, for further information.

Why the United States Should Share Her Material and Spiritual Resources With Africa

By W. E. Ronk

The subject before us for consideration today, is one of very great importance. Our attitude toward this subject, and the kind of response which we make to the appeal will have far reaching consequences. There may be other themes on which we would rather dwell, and which at first thought may seem to be of more value for us. We like to think of our own spiritual growth and of the growth of our congregation, and it is well that we should; but the writer of Proverbs has well said, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty (Prov. 11:24). It is extremely hard for us, living and enjoying the multiplied blessings of our civilization to appreciate the conditions of peoples in other parts of the world. As we behold the unbounded material and spiritual resources of our beloved country, and the extreme poverty of Africa,—materially and spiritually; may we be made to realize that our own greatest good shall come in the obeying of the words of our Lord and Master when he said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." (Mark 16:15). May we therefore, look more closely at the conditions as they are today.

It is doubtful, if ever in the history of the world, there has been a people, so great in numbers, the mass of whom have enjoyed such great material and spiritual blessings as the people of the United States. Most certainly, such conditions cannot be duplicated elsewhere today. The wealth of the United States in 1922 was estimated at 320,000,000,000 dollars or an amount equal to the combined wealth of the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Poland, Canada, the Argentine Republic, and India. The per capita wealth of the United States in 1922 was 2918 dollars, while the per capita wealth of the above mentioned nations is 409 dollars. This however is only part of the story. I have picked among this number of nations the most favored outside of the United States. If the comparison were made with India, China and Africa the comparison would be still more favorable to us. We might go a step further in our comparison. While we have a great number of very wealthy men in this country, the wealth is not, as might be supposed, in the hands of only a few. The comparison which actually tells the story, is the comparison of the living conditions of the masses. That the standard of living of the majority of our people is superior to that of any other people, will be seldom disputed. The contrast with non-Christian lands is so great as to hardly need comment. Our homes, our living wages, our means of travel and communication are the best in the world. But we are so accustomed to our manner of living, that we sometimes grow restless and grumble about our lot, forgetting that there are millions of people who live in poverty unspeakable,—with insufficient clothing and who never know what it is to have plenty to eat.

But what of our Spiritual resources? Who can estimate them? They are so great that I hesitate to even make the attempt. I feel only like exclaiming with David of old, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea I have a goodly heritage" (Ps. 16:6). It is impossible for us to estimate the advantages coming to us because of our inheritance. Our forefathers were not only Christians, but they were of that godly line, which was willing to sacrifice their all for their faith. They endured the most intense persecutions in Europe, and then left all earthly possessions to found a new home in America, where they might worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. During the most formative period of our national life, the majority of the peoples who came here, came for religious freedom, and they became the foundation of a new nation with new ideals and ambitions. Among these ideals, was that of the open Book. This has been a blessing, which has been denied to many peoples of the world. The open Book with an open heart to read it is sufficient to lead one to the source of the greatest spiritual blessings,—to know God in whom is all power. We have a people willing to learn of God and Christ our Savior. In 1800 there was one out of every fourteen who professed to be a Christian; in 1924 there was one out of every two and a quarter. We have the open Book. Copies are so cheap that all who desire may have one; from our pulpits all over the land in every village and hamlet sermons are being preached at least weekly, and in homes, in stores, and in shops all over this land men are listening daily to sermons and prayers over the radio. We have the Great God and our Savior revealed to us in all his power. Therefore, we have spiritual resources unbounded, and yet unused, waiting for the hour of our need. Thus we have seen that from the abundance of our riches both material and spiritual, we are well able to give to those who are so much in need in other parts of the world. May God grant to us a vision of our untouched and unused resources.

Let us now turn our thoughts away from ourselves to that great needy continent—Africa. We can hardly gain an adequate conception of the size or need of Africa. It is next to the largest continent; is four times the size of continental United States, and is as large as the United States, China, India, Europe proper, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Porto Rico and the Philippines combined; it comprises one-fourth of the land surface of the world. The distance from the Cape of Good Hope, in the south, to Cairo in the North, is six thousand miles, and at one place is forty-five hundred miles in width. Africa is extremely rich in natural resources, which as yet are scarcely touched, in spite of the enormous European exploitation. There are vast forests of mahogany, teakwood, ebony and cedar; waterfalls with the possibilities of unlimited power; the richest diamond fields in the world; great deposits of gold and coal and other resources as yet hardly known. This is a land of bright sunshine, of beautiful mountains and of fertile and beautiful river valleys, a land of gigantic forests, of beautiful waterfalls, and, all things considered, nature here seems at her best, so much so that travelers have wondered why it should be called the dark continent. It is the dark continent not only because of her dark skinned people; but because of the darkness of sin and sorrow, which has settled upon the people. This has well been called, "the dark, sobbing continent."

The population of Africa is composed almost entirely of dark peoples. This is the home of the negro, but he has not been permitted to live alone through the centuries. The result is that through the mingling of negro blood with that of other races, the population is more brown than black. The total population is near 140,000,000 people and of this number, it has been estimated that perhaps 40,000,000 of them have been but slightly tinged with the blood of other peoples. The North African races are especially a mixed people. Some probably have no negro blood in their veins, although some have enough to class them as negro. By far the most apparent element in many of the northern races is the Arabian. When in the seventh century Arabia went forth to the conquest of the world for Mohammed, north Africa presented an inviting field. They spread over north Africa and began that assimilation with the native populations, which for twelve centuries until now has continued in an ever strengthening bond of kinship.

No figures concerning the wealth of Africa seem available, and if we had them, they would doubtless be of very little value for the purpose in hand. The tangible wealth is largely along the coast and in the hands of a comparatively small number of people, most of whom are Europeans; while it would be impossible to estimate the wealth of much of the inland territory and peoples. The land is so large and conditions so varied, that one must consider well before making general statements as to conditions. However, it is safe to say, that the mass of the people live in poverty, and poverty such as we have no conception of. But the material poverty is not to be compared with the spiritual poverty of the people.

The spiritual darkness of Africa may be partially apprehended from references to some of the problems, which are involved in to uplift of the African. The problem presented by the greatest number of the people is Paganism, called "the lowest rung in the religious ladder," it is a religion of darkness. The African conceives himself as beset on every side by great numbers of evil spirits, all attempting consciously and constantly to frustrate his endeavors, and all seeking his injury and death. To his mind, his deceased relatives seek for his company in "Deadland" and for some time after death lurk about his old haunts seeking by snares of disease and violence to entrap him. Thus his life is one of constant dread and fear, and he seeks by the use of charms of every sort to ward off the danger. Most of the great problems of the African are either a part of the religion or the outgrowth of it. "Paganism produces debasing conceptions of gods, men and religion. The grossest vices and immoralities are enjoyed equally by gods and men, and are in conformity with pagan religion. Unwholesome and immoral customs are thus deeply implanted in the African social system."

To the pagan African there are not only gods and spirits of departed relatives, but animate and inanimate objects are indwelt by conscious spirits—plants, trees, rivers, lakes, mountains, birds, reptiles, wind, thunder, lightning, the atmosphere and all space. To these spirits are offered many kinds of sacrifices and those of varying degree. The offering may consist of a straw, a stone, a shell, laid on a log which has fallen across the path; or a little meal or a few drops of water. Sometimes charms are used to ward off the evil spirits or to purchase their good will. To be effective the charm must be of a material which is pleasing to the one to whom offered. "A vile concoction of carrion, portions of the human body—particularly eyeballs, for which graves are rifled—are among the most valued ingredients. The teeth of a lion or leopard are highly prized." Sometimes a wearer outlives the value of the charm and it must be taken to the fetish-doctor for repairs. This shrewd fellow usually finds out that the charm is all right, but that it does not like its owner, consequently a new and more expensive one is sold. As the sacrifice to the spirits depend upon the occasion, sometimes nothing will appease except human sacrifices. The burial alive of the wives of a dead chief is usually the first installment of this sacrifice, and after they have been completely buried alive, one or more slaves may be sacrificed on the grave. Sometimes it becomes necessary to send messages to the dead, this is done by reciting the message to the victim until they are certain he has it, then his head is cut off before he can forget.

Cannibalism is practised over a very great territory in Africa, where not prohibited by European powers. Not all pagans are cannibals, but cannibalism is the fruit of paganism. It is believed to have originated as a religious feast. It is at least connected with the belief that everything possesses spirit. Warriors sometimes mutilate the bodies of their victims and eat portions of the body, hoping to make the spirit of the victim their own. In some sections continual raids have been made upon the neighboring tribes to restock the human fattening pens.

One of the great curses of the land is witchcraft, and it is an outgrowth of the religion. By far the largest proportion of the Africans die violent deaths, in fact so much so that the native never thinks of death as natural, or accidental, or due to unsanitary conditions, it is the work of evil spirits. Someone in the community has connived with the evil spirit and bewitched the diseased. The witch-doctor is called for to find the witch. The witch-doctor goes through the process of smelling out and when he finds the guilty party, poison is given and if the victim recovers, he is freed as innocent. One person may accuse another of witchcraft and then both drink poison and usually both die. Or one village may accuse another village of witchcraft, then both villages must drink the poison. It has been estimated that 4,000,000 people are killed annually in the effort to discover witches.

A Song of the Journey

*I am going on my journey, glad with joy from dawn to dark,
With the spirit of the morning and the carol of the lark;
I am drinking at those fountains where the living waters flow;*

*I am hearing heaven's music as along my way I go.
And my heart is full of laughter, like the singing of a psalm;
My sky bends blue above me with its winds of evening balm;
And I know not any trouble, for I have the Tempest's King
To change my Winter's fury to the gladness of his Spring.*

*I have heard my Master calling, and his voice is music sweet;
And he bids me march right forward, nor dream of a retreat.*

*He says his Land of Beulah lies before me, out of sight,
Where reigns the deathless daylight, never shadowed by the night.*

*He bids me do my duty, though humble it may be,
And do what thing lies nearest in glad humility;
For Christ is one that serveth, and thinks no service mean
That helps the world's endeavors to help its heart be clean.*

So I walk highways and byways; and my hands are rough with toil

*As I try to make a garden out of hard, infertile soil,
But I see God's flowers a-growing where there grew no flowers before;*

And my heart is full of gladness, as I work God's work the more.

*Bless God! My lot is holy like a temple with its calm;
And I envy not an angel, with his harp-song and his palm,
For I am God's own helper; and he calls me by my name,
And says my work is holy as a sacrificial flame.*

*So I go along my journey, glad with joy from dawn to dark,
With the spirit of the morning and the carol of the lark,
For I drink at those bright fountains whence the living waters flow,*

*And I hear heaven's gladsome music as along my way I go.
And my heart is full of laughter, like the singing of a psalm;
My sky bends blue above me with its wind of evening balm;
And I know not any trouble, for I have the Tempest's King
To change my Winter's fury to the gladness of his Spring.*

Damage in Florida Not Exaggerated

By Worth M. Tippy, Federal Council of Churches

(We are glad to give publication to this article of Dr. Tippy and bespeak the cooperation of Brethren everywhere to the extent of their ability in the campaign of the Red Cross for a $5,000,000 Emergency Relief Fund.—Editor.)

Nobody who has seen the Florida storm area, and who speaks frankly, will minimize the disaster. The condition of the streets a week after the hurricane, when the streets had been cleared and temporary repairs made on thousands of buildings was indescribable and sickening.

I was sent to Florida by the Federal Council of Churches, to get the conditions at first hand, to find out what we could do, and to learn how the churches could better prepare for such emergencies. I spent six days in the area and was driven about by church officials and pastors. We were all over Miami, Miami Beach, Hialeah, Coral Gables, Hollywood, Dania, Ft. Lauderdale and other communities from Homestead thirty miles south of Miami to Lake Worth on the north. We endeavored to get to Lake Okeechobee but were turned back by high water. I went with pastors into scores of homes, saw the damage inside as well as out, visited relief stations and emergency hospitals, and conversed with officials and citizens everywhere.

The property damage is enormous. At Miami the docks were stripped and ocean-going ships wrecked at the piers. One hundred and ninety-four house boats, motor boats, yachts, launches, tugs, barges, lighters, dredges and derricks were wrecked, sunk, or swept high on land in the Miami River. The bay front from the Causeway to Coconut Grove was strewn with similar craft, often carried a quarter of a mile from the shore. Dr. Everett S. Smith, pastor of the First Christian church, and his family were guests on a yacht which put into the river before the storm for safety. The yacht was lifted up and driven a half mile from the river by the flood waters, and caught in a clump of trees. He told me that river craft and great barges went whirling and sweeping past them at from thirty to forty miles an hour, wrecking houses and harbor craft.

Coral Gables while seriously damaged is in comparatively good condition. Coconut Grove is a mass of broken, twisted trees, damaged houses and stranded bay craft. Hialeah, seven miles west of Miami, was half destroyed and few if any houses escaped serious damage. The tourist camps and shack towns, which were such a feature of boom Florida, were literally smashed. At Hollywood, Dania, and Progresso on the north side of Fort Lauderdale, nothing was left of these flimsy structures and the toll of life was heavy. Hollywood was fearfully hit. At Ft. Lauderdale, which jumped from a town of 2,000 to 25,000 during the boom, Dr. L. F. Goodwin, the First Presbyterian pastor, told me that one-half the houses were completely wrecked, and that of those standing one-half were not worth repairing; that he knew of only one undamaged building, the Masonic Temple.

I soon discovered in going with pastors into homes, that the damage inside was as costly as that outside. Most roofs were either torn off or partly so. The hurricane was also a deluge of rain. Windows in most houses were crashed in, and the rain driven horizontally through rooms by the tempest, filled them with whirling spray and soon covered floors with water. Books, draperies, pianos, clothing, rugs, were soaked for hours and veneered furniture and doors warped, cracked and discolored. This kind of damage was all but universal and does not figure in reports.

Nobody will ever know the total dead. It is somewhere between five hundred and a thousand, and probably more. The seriously injured numbered between four thousand and five thousand. I saw them: broken limbs, broken backs, fractured bones, lacerations and bruises. There were five hundred major fractures. Twelve hundred persons were in regular hospitals and one hundred twenty in emergency hospitals when I left on Friday. Many wounded were sent to friends in the north, and 2500 refugees passed through Jacksonville up to September 30, carried north without cost by the railroads. Red Cross headquarters in Miami estimated 20,000 in the entire storm area destroyed, at least 50,000 homeless, and 18,000 persons who will need long time assistance to normal conditions.

These facts tell the story. The tendency of real estate and hotel interests to minimize the damage is understandable but I think their psychology is wrong. Everybody who can will want to go to Miami this winter, and should go, for it is full of thrilling stories of adventure and heroism. The city will soon be restored to its old beauty, and there will be no danger. Hotels will be ready for guests when the season opens November first. Many of them were operating in good condition last week. Miami and the towns of the whole area are working prodigiously at reconstruction. An army of laborers has been imported to reinforce them. The sky is full of smoke and wreckage is fast disappearing. The people are cheerful and courageous—the greater reason to help them. Miami will finance its own commercial reconstruction and its better homes. It is a solid and powerful city. It went three times over its quota for the Japanese earthquake, and over the top in every Liberty Loan.

The great task of the Red Cross, now that the period of emergency relief is about over, is to bring the 18,000 broken-down homes of the less fortunate back normal to see the sick and injured restored to health by the best medical skill and care, to keep the children in school and the young people in college, and to restore the homes of those who lost all. This is an exacting and technical work which will take a year or two before it is completely finished.

$5,000,000 is none too large for the task. I cannot over-emphasize the need. It should be subscribed this week, so that the staff of case workers and special assistants, aided by local volunteers in the communities, may devote their whole energies to reconstruction. They are a splendid group of experienced, scientifically trained and sympathetic executives, accountants, nurses and case workers, who inspire confidence on sight.

HEBREWS 13:5

If we can only grasp these words by faith, we have an all-conquering weapon in our hands. What doubt and fear will not be slain by this two-edged sword? This may teach us the extreme value of searching the Scriptures, and, besides reading the Bible, to store our memories richly with the promises of God.—C. H. Spurgeon.

We are in this world as a ship at sea, liable to be tossed up and down, and in danger of being cast away. Our souls are the vessels. The comforts, expectations, graces and happiness of our souls are the precious cargo with which these vessels are loaded. Heaven is the harbor to which we sail. The temptations, persecutions and afflictions that we encounter are the winds and waves that threaten our shipwreck. We have need of an anchor to keep us sure and steady, or we are in continual danger. Gospel hope is our anchor; as in our day of battle it is our helmet, so in our stormy passage through this world, it is our anchor. It is sure and steadfast, or else it could not keep us so.—Matthew Henry.

The Mass Movement and the Revival

We are reading in many directions these days criticism of the revival that was in the beginning the heart of the Methodist life. Many men rather make light of the old revival as a purely emotional excitement. And yet modern science has a word that means the same thing practically as a revival of religion. They call it a "mass movement." It is used in all the propaganda of the world. Politics has used it from the beginning and is still using it. Campaign speakers will soon be let loose upon the whole country. And in the great war through which we have passed the mass movement was largely used and was most successful. The idea underlying it all is the psychological fact that people are more easily moved in a mass than they are as individuals. For good and for evil mass movements are very effective instruments in spreading truth or error. The revival of religion is nothing but a mass movement bringing people together and fixing their attention for days and weeks upon certain things that are vital to their salvation. "Picked fruit" has been used as a synonym for personal approach for a great many years, and we say that "picked fruit" is very much better than the fruit that is shaken down. That applies perfectly to apples but it does not always apply to men. We have met thousands of men who have been converted in a great mass movement who were just as fine Christians and showed forth the spirit of Christ as graciously as people who had been picked by personal evangelism. Indeed we have known more men who have been converted in a revival of religion, or a mass movement, if you please, than we have known those who have been saved by personal conversation. Very often even that kind of work is very superficial. The appeal that is generally made now is to join the church, but joining the church is not synonymous with conversion and never has been. A man may join the church for many motives that are not Christian, and we believe it can be proven through the years that the great mass of people who have been the backbone of the church of Jesus Christ have been born in revivals, and we know with perfect assurance that most of the preachers of the Gospel who have been flaming evangelists of truth and who have swept the world with the mighty appeal of Christ have come into the ministry through revivals of religion or mass movements.

One of the reasons why the revival of religion has been discounted is because of the way some evangelists have used it, but, while we have no desire to denounce professional evangelists as a class, a great many of them have seemed to us to be more concerned about the number of their converts and the amount of money they were to get out of it than the real genuine work of seeking the Holy Spirit's power to transform a sinner into a saint. Numbers make new engagements possible. The mathematics of some of the evangelists are a disgrace to the church. Through means that are very questionable the appeal is made by these evangelists first by the use of wit and then by the use of painful stories that make folks cry. We are not opposed to either one of these except as they are abused. But to appeal to the masses of people day after day with the great fundamental things of the Gospel of the Son of God until hearts are broken and lives are changed is going to keep on to the end of time unless men change—and they have never changed yet.

The need is sometimes tremendous that a whole community shall be lifted until their moral standards are high and lofty and Christ rules in their hearts. Picking a man here and there by getting him into the Kingdom does not accomplish that. The discouragement of the masses that are out of Christ makes it so extremely difficult for a man who has been brought into the Kingdom to continue, but when the sweeping power of God's spirit goes through a whole community it is easy to live the life because there is so much fellowship each one helping the other until Christ becomes the Master and Savior of a community. It is the mass movement, if you choose to call it so, but it is a revival of religion according to old Methodist nomenclature. We believe in the method of man going to man and preaching Jesus to him, but we dissent from the wholesale denunciation of revivals of religion as a means of propagating the Gospel and we are concerned greatly by this business of inviting people, who do not know Christ, to join the church and make it the only evidence of a changed heart that they repeat after the preacher a certain formula. By that method we fill the church with unconverted people and then the consensus of the church does not express the law and will of Christ.—Methodist Protestant.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

A Patched Garment

By Claud Studebaker

TEXT: No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment.—Matthew 9:16.

I. Christianity is a new life, a new garment. This text is taken from a contest where Christ is dealing with comparative religions. I think some of our modern devotees to the subject of comparative religions might profitably study this text in relation to that subject, and find out the Jesus way, if they are really so anxious to know the Jesus way, and live the Jesus way. The question has just been asked of Christ. Why do not thy disciples fast? The disciples of John and the Pharisees fast often. We think you should take the valuable things in these religions and incorporate in yours, is the thought that is plainly inferred. But the statement of Christ in this very simple and plain illustration is, "No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment." It will not improve the old garment but rather make it worse. Our Christ is not a teacher, he is the teacher; he is not one Savior among many, he is the Savior; he is not a leader among leaders, but is the Master of all masters; his sacrifice is not one of the many, it is the one and only sacrifice for sin; his birth is not just extraordinary, it is the one and only birth of the Son of God, to reveal the Father to the world, and to make reconciliation for all men. Not a new piece of cloth, if you please, to patch up the religions, but an entirely new garment; a new creature, a new life, not simply an improvement on the old one. It is an improvement, but that is not all, it is wholly new and requires a new birth. It gives and demands a new life, born by faith in the life-giving Christ. It results in a life, born of the Spirit and lived in the Spirit. "The law of the Spirit of life hath made me free from the law of sin and death." "The righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit."

Now the Spirit, of course, that gives this new life is not just a benign influence, rather vaguely referred to by some preachers, as though it were more or less a divine ether coming from somewhere and influencing folk in a more or less wholesome way, but not very definitely defined, or particularly necessary, as some suggest when they say that "men are incurably religious" anyhow, and if we keep plodding along and helping the other fellow as we go along then, all will be well. If that were true a new garment would not be needed; the old one might be patched up as the nature of the case required. That will not do. Our own righteousness is as filthy rags, no use to try to patch an old garment and present it to God as a new one. He can detect our hypocrisy, it is not worth one cent.

There is only one way to secure a new garment of righteousness and that is the way God has ordained. You must use his Designer, the third Person of the Trinity. Note that I said person. One who can tell you, you are a sinner, you are unfit for the presence of God, you are unclean and ragged and sinful and must have an entirely new outfit before you can stand in the presence of God. You must be born again, you must start with the very seat of life. No painting the pump here, the water must be made pure. You must have the old all blotted out, and start on an entirely new sheet. Your name must be enrolled on the Lamb's book of life, and you must be adopted into a new family. You must have a new father, a new inheritance, old things must pass away and all things must be new. No patching up your old life, your old clothes, you only make matters worse. Throw them away, get everything new, within and without. The word of God will give you the pattern, the Holy Spirit will interpret it for you, just wait on the Lord, pray in the Spirit, the new life is the gift of God, he will see that it is supplied in abundance. Seek the law of the Spirit of life.

This new life would make a new world, would solve all of the vexing problems of life, if all would avail themselves of the grace of God, and quit trying to show off their own old clothes. The Christian life is a new life, the true religion, the only hope of this sinful world. No compromise. "He that hath the Son hath life and he that hath not the Son shall not see life." "No man cometh to the Father but by me." "He that climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber." "No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment."

II. Not only is Christianity a new garment, a new life, instead of a patched up one, but it must be continuously worn by its possessor. God has provided means whereby this garment may be renewed day by day. Singular indeed, but this garment increases in grace and beauty as it grows in years, until it bursts full blown into the glory and majesty of the Lord who gave it. Each day our new garment should go forth fresh from the cleaner, not a stain, not a wrinkle, everything laundered perfectly. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanses us from all sin." "If we sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."

It cost a tremendous price to make it possible to keep our garments clean, even the blood of the only begotten Son of God. But God in his love, offered the sacrifice, the plan has just been completed, the instruction given, so that all men might know. And we are to be the witnesses and make known the marvelous story, of how a man may have a new life, clothed in righteousness, and provision to keep it new, here and hereafter. No wonder the angels of heaven rejoice when a sinner comes repenting, and puts on the garments of holiness and beauty, by faith in Jesus the Christ. But I wonder sometimes if the angel song is turned into weeping when they see the garment spotted with the flesh or laid aside to dwell among the fleshpots. O, the fickleness and grandeur of human life, capable of the highest heights of attainment, or the lowest depths of degradation. Alike the object of his blessing and glory, or the fierceness of his wrath. Not that God changes, but man, whom God has made responsible for his own life. He has given him the power of choice and held him accountable for it.

So then the human side is highly important in keeping our new garments new. Each new day should begin with a complete cleansing, every old grudge, every offence, every bit of envy, the entire category of sin must be all cleansed by the blood of the cross. Oh, the lives that are wrecked by carrying forward yesterday's troubles as an ugly patch on the life of today. It may even be that yesterday's success must not be patched onto today's life, and it may be the money made yesterday must be disposed of for some worthwhile purpose, in order that the life may be free with all of its pure affection to love God with all its soul, mind and strength and your neighbor as yourself. We are not to love the world and its charms. Could we but spend the time and money on our new garment of righteousness that we spend on the garments that adorn this physical body of ours! Could we but use this tongue of ours as much to tell the wondrous story of the cross as we do to tell our own message and our own joys and grievances! Would to God that every member of the church of Jesus Christ might have on that new garment, that abundant life, and not just put a little patch on the old life, and a very small one at that, and then think that he has been baptized, or has made a confession of dom, or that when he falls it will be sufficient to discover that he has ben baptized, or has made a confession of Christ some time in his life. O, the patches folks are wearing in a spiritual sense, who would be shocked silly if they had to go out on the street with a patch on their clothes! My, how I would like to see the church dress up for an evening party, every one with a new garment! Not so many patches, if you please. Not so much comparing yourself with some other worldly member or preacher, but a new life in Christ Jesus. Cut loose from the sins and offences of yesterday, get away from your sham and hypocrisy, you cannot deceive God with a patch on your old life. Come to the fountain, get under the blood, allow the Holy Spirit to make you a new creature. "No man putteth a new piece of cloth unto an old garment." Bury the old rags. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father by him. Do not compare the Christian religion with another. Christ is THE Savior of the world, THE Son of God. That is not narrow and selfish; that is truth and the truth shall make you free.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Jesus' Rebuke of Selfishness

By G. W. Ganor

OUR SCRIPTURE

And they came to Capernaum: and when he was in the house he asked them. What were ye reasoning on the way? But they held their peace: for they had disputed one with another on the way, who was the greatest. And he sat down, and called the twelve: and he saith unto them, If any man would be first, he shall be last of all, and servant of all. And he took a little child, and set him in the midst of them: and taking him in his arms, he said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of such little children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever receiveth me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me.

John said unto him, Teacher, we saw one casting out demons in thy name: and we forbade him, because he followed not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not; for there is no man who shall do a mighty work in my name, and be able quickly to speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is for us. For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink, because ye are Christ's, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward. And whosoever shall cause one of these little ones that believe on me to stumble, it were better for him if a great millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea. (Mark 9:33-42).

OUR MEDITATION

The child in the midst. The world says, "Be a man;" Christ said, "Be a child." David Smith said, "The error of the twelve lay not in their desire to be great in the kingdom of heaven, but in their ideal of greatness." The child in the midst is not only an object-lesson of Christian ideal, but sets the standard for humility, sincerity and trustfulness, and is a call to the church to save and train the child.

The folly of intolerance. It is said that an old shoemaker once lived in Berlin who was insufferably intolerant of every one who did not believe just as he did on religion. The clergyman of the parish determined to teach him a lesson. Sending for the shoemaker one morning, he said to him, "John, take my measure for a pair of boots." "With pleasure, your reverence," replied John; "please take off your shoes." The clergyman did so, and the shoemaker measured his foot from toe to heel, and over the instep, noting all in his note-book and then prepared to leave. But the pastor stopped him by saying, "John, my son also requires a pair of boots." "I will make them with pleasure, your reverence. Can I take the young gentleman's measure this morning?" "Oh, that is unnecessary," said the pastor; "the lad is fourteen, but you can make my boots and his from the same last." "Your reverence, that will never do," said the shoemaker with a smile of surprise. "I tell you, John, to make my boots and those for my son, on the same last." "No, your reverence, I can not do it." "It must be done—on the same last, remember. "But your reverence, it is not possible, if the boots are to fit," said the shoemaker, thinking that the pastor's wits must be leaving him. "Ah, then, master shoemaker," said the pastor, "every pair of boots must be made on their own last, if they are to fit, and yet you think that God is to form all Christians exactly according to your own last, of the same measure and growth in religion as yourself. That will not do, either." The shoemaker was rebuked and said, "I thank your reverence for this sermon, and I will try to remember it, and to judge my neighbors less harshly in the future."

The sin of selfishness. In the brute world the law of life seems to be the survival of the fittest. The weak die; the strong live. In the man world, a step in advance is taken when men say, "Live and let live." The Christ standard is reached when men say, "Live, and help others to live." The most fruitful source of man's misery and unhappiness lies in selfishness. Selfishness takes advantage of the sorrows of others to enrich itself. Placing vast quantities of provisions in cold storage and holding them until prices are forced to the very limit, is but one example of selfishness.

OUR PRAYER

Holy Father, we thank thee for the manifestation of thy Son Jesus and through him of the revelation of the Divine estimate of greatness and of things worth while. We acknowledge our narrowness of interest and vision, our intolerance of the opinions and conduct of others, our selfishness and self-seeking, and pray that thou wilt take away these evidences of worldliness from our hearts. Forgive wherein we have been unwilling to step out into that larger life of love, consideration and humility, or have spurned those whom thou hast accounted great and faithful. Make us to appreciate the little things, the meek things of the earth, the children of the kingdom, and take away our love of prominence, of vain show, of undue consideration of those whom the world calls great. Help us to idealize and to aspire to those things that abide and to emulate the spirit of love and forbearance and tender solicitude which characterized the life of our Lord. Hear us, we pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.—(G. S. B.)

The secret of what we want is, I fancy, just this: a sort of new perception of what Jesus Christ would do if he walked down the streets of London or Paris or Berlin. Let us rescue him from the artists, from the plaster saints, from the people who have never understood him. Let us bring him out into the turmoil, shame, bitterness, vice, sordidness, brutality, and heart burning passions of our great towns. And as we look at the shining glory of his stainless figure let us say: "Son of man, Son of God, what are you going to do about this?" And then before he can answer let us kneel down and say: "What do you want us to do about this?" If we should just happen to do that, we should become such mighty men that we could touch the issues of the new age with a living power.—Lynn Harold Hough, D. D.

The Picture of a Drunkard

The writer of our Scripture lesson in verses 29 and 30 gives in a series of questions a vivid picture of a drunkard. As time carries us farther and farther from the days of the open saloon this picture will become more and more unique and interesting. Even now there are communities where the drunkard has not been seen for so long that he has almost been forgotten. In many places however there is enough of illicit booze being drunk to keep memories fairly fresh concerning the characteristics of the drunkard. "Woe!" "Sorrow!" "Contentions." "Complainings." "Wounds without cause." "Redness of eyes." These are some of the descriptive of the men who "tarry long at the wine" and who "seek our mixed wine," or mixed booze. How very modern the suggestion sounds! They have been mixing drinks from time immemorial, of course, but of late so many amateurs have taken a hand in it that it has become unusually dangerous.

Abraham Lincoln had frequently been dragged through the columns of the wet supporters, and because of that, the following words from that outstanding American will be of special interest: "Whether or not the world would be vastly benefited by total and final abolition of all intoxicating drinks seems to me not an open question. Three-fourths of mankind confess the affirmative with their tongues, and I believe the rest acknowledge it in their hearts."

Prohibition a Success

There is considerable talk about Prohibition not being a success, but it comes in the main from the wet camp, which seeks to discourage and destroy the morale of the dry forces. Truly it is not the success it might and ought to be. But one important reason for this is the fact that the church people largely let down on their temperance instruction and agitation when the liquor traffic was outlawed. We must revive that intensive instruction and build up in the consciousness of the younger generation the idea of the harmfulness of strong drink on the one hand and the disgracefulness of law violation on the other. Yet notwithstanding this and other weaknesses that might be mentioned, prohibition has been a really wonderful success and the amount of drinking has been reduced to a mere fraction of what it was in the saloon days. Almost every one will acknowledge that prohibition at its worst is far better than the old legalized saloon system.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, in his answers to questions, said a short time ago, "The prohibition laws are accomplishing their purpose in proportion to the obedience which is rendered them. A large majority of industrialists and of the law-abiding citizens of the land derive great benefits from these laws. These benefits . . . have made such an impression in Great Britain that the chief organ of the Free Churches there forecasts prohibition as an impending economic necessity for that country. . . . If prohibition must be amended, let it be amended by its friends, not by foes, and after a fair trial, which it has not yet had. . . . If traffic were as anywhere underpoliced as prohibition what would be its condition?"

The Menace of Light Wines and Beer

"Beer and Wine" is the slogan of the anti-prohibition forces. Beer with two to three per cent and wine with six to eight per cent alcohol is, they tell us, harmless. It is true that neither one nor the other may cause extreme drunkenness, but both are intoxicating. The average beer drinker consumes more alcohol than the average whiskey drinker. Long before whiskey was discovered thousands of persons were made drunkards by wine alone. In Germany doctors and scientists affirm that beer is a national curse. There are thirty institutions in Germany for the treatment of drunkards. In England a large proportion of the drunkards are beer and stout addicts. It is a well-known fact that the use of beer and wine increases the craving for strong drinks and that the consumption of distilled liquors invariably follows in the wake of beer and wine. There are millions of Frenchmen living now in squalor and destitution caused by the excessive use of wine and mild liquors. The French are not a nation of moderate drinkers. In a five-year period preceding the World War France was, per capita, the largest user of alcoholic beverages in the world. More than two generations ago Massachusetts made the experiment and allowed the sale of beer alone. At the end of three years' trial the Governor, in his inaugural, described the beer shops as 'the greatest obstacle in the social and moral progress of the community.' Furthermore during that period the use of distilled liquors increased, and that is precisely the experience which other states and other nations have had."—Hon. Charles Sumner Bird.

"There is no more harmful belief held by people today than the notion that beer is an innocent drink. The vital statistics of Great Britain show that certain serious diseases, like gout, liver troubles, diabetes, are from three to five times more common among brewers and bar-tenders (who chiefly sell malt liquors) than among the people in general. One of the most eminent European authorities on insanity, Prof. Albert Mahaim, of the University of Liege, found that about one-half the persons admitted to a certain asylum as 'alcoholics' had used nothing but beer and similar drinks. So common is the injury done to the heart by beer-drinking, that this special trouble is known as the 'beer-drinker's heart,' and in Munich one out of every sixteen of the hospital patients dies from this disorder."—Joseph Henry Crooker.

Using Printers Ink

The following piece of advertising was used some months ago quite effectively on behalf of the Portis, Kansas, church and Sunday school. Brother Deeter is in the habit of making good use of printers' ink and for this we commend him. We reproduce the card message thinking it may be suggestive to others:

STOLEN or STRAYED: LOST or MISLAID

(Luke 12:10)

MISSING—Last Sunday, some families from Sunday school and church.

STOLEN—Several hours from the Lord's Day by a number of people who get up late, and miss the morning worship at God's House.

STRAYED—Half a score of lambs, believed to have gone in the direction of "No Sunday School."

MISLAID—A quantity of silver and copper coins on the counter of some public place,—the owner being in a state of excitement at the time.

WANTED—Several Young People. When last seen were walking in pairs up Sabbath Breakers' Lane, which leads to No Good.

LOST—A Lad carefully reared, not long from home, and for a time very promising. Supposed to have gone with one or two others to Prodigal Town, Husk Lane.

Any person assisting in the recovery of the above shall in no wise lose his reward.

The God of Mother's Bible

By Charles Wesley Lyman

*Ah, pause! ruthless breaker of Icons—
Defamer of Heaven's great plan!
Beware, lest in breaking the "image,"
You break not the Heart of a Man!
That you slay not the Hope of a Woman,
That made her an Angel of Light,
And blight her, and blast her, and leave her
A Venomous Serpent of Night!*

*Mother's God! The God of her Bible!
The Comforting Christ, so you find,
Is only a phantom vine, springing
From seed in a disordered mind?
Far back in the dim distant ages,
When man was a beast, so you say,
He planted a seed of desire,
And harvests the error today?*

*The long line of Prophets and Sages,
Aflame with the story of old,
Who counted it joy to be martyred,
As writ in this Volume of Gold;
All these, with their splendid achievements,
You tell us are meaningless, vain—
A mass of old fables and folklore,
Fanatical, false and inane?*

*Indeed, Mr. Breaker of Icons,
Your arguments, freezingly iced,
May placate some "itching-car" hearers,
As you stab the dear heart of the Christ.
Publicity's limelight will flood you,
Men's flattering lips give you praise;
But, when you and your words are forgotten,
God will e'er be The Ancient of Days!

Christian Endeavorers

At General Conference

Those with whom we talked at Winona from various parts of the brotherhood bore uniform testimony to the growing revival of interest and effort in behalf of Christian Endeavor. A corresponding concern was manifest in the General Conference. The sessions dealing with this part of the church's work were well attended and those attending were rewarded with instructional and inspirational messages from the several speakers. It is believed that the attendants returned home encouraged and determined to redouble their efforts with the young through the varied ministries of Christian Endeavor.

Officiary for 1926-27

On recommendation of the nominating committee the Conference elected the following officers.

President, Prof. J. A. Garber, Ashland, Ohio; Associate President, Rev. E. M. Riddle, Bryan, Ohio; Secretary, Miss Gladys Spice, Canton, Ohio.

Departmental Superintendents

Quiet Hour, Rev. Homer A. Kent, Washington, D. C.; Stewardship, Rev. O. D. Ulom, Aleppo, Pennsylvania; Missionary, Miss Grace Yoder, Ashland, Ohio; Citizenship, Rev. C. M. Mayes, Lanark, Illinois; Junior, Miss Doris Stout, Pleasant Hill, Ohio; Intermediate, Mr. W. O. Nish, Massillon, Ohio; Publicity, Mr. Louis P. Clapper, Louisville, Ohio; Service, Miss Trula Snyder, Morrill, Kansas.

It will be seen by comparison with last year's report that only three changes occur. Miss Snyder is a new officer who is reported to have been a good worker in her home society; she is now a student in Ashland College, from where she will carry on her Service department. Brother Ulom is another new officer. He is an alumnus of Ashland College, where as a student, as well as in the Aleppo church, he was a faithful Endeavorer. He is now a student in the Theological Seminary of Hartford, Connecticut, where he may be addressed.

Brother Riddle was promoted from the superintendency of Stewardship to the office of Associate President. He has been a successful pastor with young people in each of his pastorates. While at Louisville his leadership ability was recognized beyond his church and he served the Starke County Union as pastoral counsellor. For several years he has been Stewardship superintendent in the Ohio Union. His experiences on the State Board have prepared him for the leadership responsibilities which we expect him to assume. Our Endeavorers will do well to read with care his initial message on Christian Endeavor Fellowship and other messages that will follow.

Some Stress-Points

In the Fidelity campaign September and October are considered to be months of rallying the forces. Now we should proceed to get under definite tasks. November is rich with opportunity. The month focuses our attention upon national affairs—Christian Citizenship, World Peace, Home Missions. The last Sunday of October should be used to prepare the way for these endeavors. A MELTING POT is the topic for the day. It immediately precedes Election Day in many states. Citizens need to be advised and impressed as to their Christian responsibility when the issues are so confused. WORLD PEACE follows on November 7th.

Home Mission Study

To act wisely and helpfully we must know the facts which set forth the needs and opportunities. These may be found in the instructive home mission study texts.

Senior—"For a New America," 75c—paper 50c.

Radio Messages of Negro Progress Acts 10:34, 35

Hello boys and girls of our country:

I live near to many of you little boys and girls who will read this story. I am not going to tell you my name. Maybe some of you will recognize me by the things I have to tell you about myself.

I am a little black girl. Sometimes I have lived in the city, sometimes I have lived in the country and sometimes I have lived in some little town where my father found work to support his family. I have some troubles and I am going to tell them to you other boys and girls, hoping that you will be willing to help me with them. This is my trouble. Although I am black, and therefore look a little different from you children whom I am talking to, yet I think just like you do. I like to play just like you do and I like to have friends just like you do. I can not help it that my face is black. I try to be nice and act as other girls do and yet nearly always the children whom I meet are not kind to me. I am going to tell you some of the things that have happened to me.

When I was a little bit of a curly headed girl, my parents lived in a small town. There was just one other family of colored people in town so we naturally spent a good bit of time with them. They had a little girl whom I liked to play with. Then one day they moved away. Daddy said, "Well, little girlie, I am going to take you along with me down town today and we will see if we can find someone for you to play with since little Jennie is gone."

He left me in the yard of his employer where there was a little girl just my own age. She had the nicest things to play with and we were just starting to have the nicest time, when her mother called to her and said, "Come in the house now, Hazel, and tell the little girl to go around in the back yard and play. People might see her and wonder why she is out there."

I suppose that the lady did not think that I would understand what she was saying, but I understood enough of it to tell my daddy about it when he came. He did not say much. He just looked at me kind of sad like and said, "I am sorry, little girlie, you had to wait a long time for daddy, too, didn't you?"

Before long, we moved to the city. Daddy told mother one night when he thought that I was asleep, "Well, if they won't be friendly to us here where everyone knows us we will go to the city where nobody will know us. I don't want our little girl to be snubbed and looked down upon." Then we made our trip to the city. All seemed to go pretty well for a few days. Then one day, Mother and I were down town and went into the nicest restaurant to eat dinner. Just when we were about to sit down at a table, a waiter came up and said, "I am sorry, but you can't eat here."

Mother didn't understand and said, "Why, Mr. Waiter, you must have mistaken us for someone else. I have never eaten here before, and I will pay you for all that we eat."

The waiter just said again, "No, you cannot eat here," and I looked up at mother as we left and I am sure I saw tears in her eyes. We had to ride on a street car for a long way across the city to a place where other colored people lived before we could eat. Even when we got there mother didn't eat hardly anything and I did not feel like eating when she didn't.

Mother and daddy were so unhappy over that and some other things just like it that happened to us, so we left the city and now we are living way out in the country. We raise the things we eat. Mother and daddy play with me and we try to be happy together, but Oh, how I wish that some of you little boys and girls who live close to me would come and play with me. Underneath our black skins, we little children are just like you white children, won't you please be friendly with us?

The attendance at Sunday school and church still holds up fine being considerably above that of last year, and the highest that we have yet had at any time.

On the first Sunday in this month, the new officers for the Sunday school were selected, as follows: Superintendent, Brother Early; Assistant Superintendent, Zephie Landrum; Secretary, Dora Strong; Treasurer, Mrs. Drushal, and Pianist, Edna Bell. We look for a good year in the Sunday school work.

After careful deliberation, the management decided that school should be taught on Saturday, and the week's holiday on Monday. We believe that all are liking the change better than it was before.

Miss Stoffer and the writer attended last week an educational meeting at Whitesburg.

The J. W. Wheeler estate of Nickerson, Kansas, which was deeded to the Home Missionary Board for Riverside Institute, is still in the hands of the administrator for settlement, and will so remain until about the 30th of March, 1927. Below we give a statement, from Brother J. W. Beer of Nickerson, Kansas, which sets forth some reasons why this property was deeded as it has been:

"J. W. Wheeler was a nominal member of the M. E. church. Sarah Wheeler, his wife, was a charter member of the Brethren church in Nickerson, Kansas. They had four children, and they all died in a brief period of time. One died by fever, and the other three were taken from them in about ten days by diphtheria and membranous croup, two of them being buried the same day. The children and parents are buried in the Wild Mead Cemetery at Nickerson, Kansas.

It is probable that the sad bereavement of their own loved ones drew out their heart's affection toward the orphaned children of the Mountains, and to your mission toward which they contributed. Thus God's providences, often even through tears and heartaches, in his own mysterious ways works for human good and his own glory, leading us by paths that we had not planned or known.

May the blessed hope through faith in Christ, sustain us amid the trials of life to fall asleep in Jesus to await the resurrection call at his coming.

Islam's Greatest Failure

By Rev. Stephen Van R. Trowbridge, Maadi, Egypt

One of the most delicate and perfect tests of the value of a religion is its treatment of children. To what extent does it reveal God to their inexperienced and eager minds? How far does it transform and beautify and safeguard their characters by the mysterious interaction of God's Spirit and their wills? Does the religion produce in them a faith which drives out base thoughts and conquers the insidious temptations which throng and threaten childhood?

If you leave the modern quarter of Cairo and walk down through the narrow, crooked streets, you soon find yourself absorbed in watching groups of ragged, tanned urchins playing, begging, idling, gathering into tin cans quantities of filthy cigarette stubs, and attempting to get a glimpse of the Sunday school picture cards, if you happen to be carrying a few in your hand. If you know Arabic, you listen to what they are saying. Often you wish you had not heard. Sometimes you see one of the more daring youngsters attempting to pick pockets on the street cars. Your heart beats faster and you feel an unutterable sense of yearning and pathos, as step by step, you come to realize that their only knowledge of God is through the sin-stained life of Mohammed. Their only glimpse of paradise is from the fleshly passages of the Koran. Their only thought of truth has its ultimate source in Mohammed's own complex self-consciousness—a marvelous blend of prophetic illumination, political subtlety, and bold, selfish falsehood. All these children have is Mohammed!

Face to face with the problems of temptation and sin, the prophet of Mecca is a warning rather than an inspiration. His life is the tragedy of a splendid spiritual beginning and a lustful, selfish ending. The Koran is certainly not a book to sanctify and beautify and fill with joy the lives of the children. Far from it.

Mohammed never revealed the Fatherhood of God, but with tremendous energy and persistence, year after year, did everything in his power to repudiate and root out this thought from the minds of men.

Mohammed could not summon the children to see in him the life of the Father, because his heart and hand had countless times boldly sinned against the laws of God.

"The mystery of the Holy Incarnation, and the story of the precious death of the Son of God, are put before them only as heresies to be adjured and trampled on."

"The children of Moslem lands are the same as those of Christendom, as troublesome, as erratic, as affectionate, as delightful to do with as the most ardent boy-lover at home ever found them; bubbling with energy and mischief, keen to see and learn anything you have time to show them; only tainted already with evil in its deadliest forms, that will have them in its grip long before they are men.

"What is to be done for them, these our little brothers, for whom Christ died?" Are we doing our best for the Kingdom of Christ when we are letting boy-lives drift past us, with their precious chances, into tough Moslem manhood, unchallenged for him?

Dr. S. M. Zwemer has been gathering evidence from every corner and metropolis of Moslem lands. He says:

"Because of general immoral conditions, which beggar description, many of our correspondents speak of the terrible physical inheritance of Moslem childhood."

As you survey these countries and catch a glimpse of the vast multitudes of Christless children, what are your thoughts?—Missionary Review.

THE LAST DAYS OF DAN CRAWFORD

This devoted missionary, in a special sense the successor of David Livingstone, passed away from his earthly labors on the third of last June. His fatal illness was caused by the poisoning of his left hand. Saturday night before he accidentally injured that hand, and though it was carefully dressed by Mrs. Crawford it continued to grow more painful. Wednesday afternoon, June 2, he dictated his last communication:

"My left arm is poisoned and this poison is knifing my very heart; so we are in God's hands and all is well. It is harrowing and might have been avoided, only I was sleeping in my little cell in a deep sleep. This made me forget the iodine which is the panacea of my life. To say that it is harrowing is only to remind you that it is the harrow that produces the smiling lands of corn, and this explains that 'We glory-in-tribulation' verse—but do we? Good-bye, dear friends, we will meet at the appearing in excellent glory." During Thursday, June 3, he was in deep sleep all day, except when roused twice to take nourishment, and at about 6:30, without further sign or movement, "he was not, for God took him." All the details of the funeral were cared out by the elders of the church. The dead missionary's head was pillowed on a copy of his translation of the New Testament. Up the side of the Kundilungus went the great procession to the quiet cemetery amongst the African forest trees. And the soil of Central Africa received the body of Dan Crawford—a Greatheart, a Great Heart indeed.—Christian Union Herald.

AFRICA—EGYPTIAN PILGRIMAGE CHECKED

Difficulties between the Government of Egypt and King Hussein, then ruler of the Hedjaz, made it impossible for Egyptian Moslems to make the pilgrimage to Mecca in 1923 and 1924, and in 1925 the internal strife in the Hedjaz had the same effect. This year some 12,000 Egyptians were planning to make the pilgrimage when the Ministry of the Interior received a report from its representative in the Hedjaz, to the effect that the Wahabi Government, under Ibn Saoud, objects to the traditional ceremonies which the Egyptian Mahmal escort and pilgrims usually hold in the Hedjaz during the pilgrimage. The band which accompanies the Mahmal will not be allowed to accompany it to Mecca and must stop at Jeddah. The "Holy Carpet" will have to be sent from Jeddah to the Kaaba in packages and without ceremony; the Kiswa ceremony usually held on the occasion will be absolutely prohibited. The Wahabi Government objects also to the Egyptian military escort entering the Hedjaz with arms, and it is proposed to deprive the force of its arms on its arrival at Jeddah. These objections are due to the Wahabi teachings which preclude the holding of showy ceremonies in the sacred cities.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Philadelphia Goes Over With $5,000.00 for Endowment

It was a pleasure to work with these people who are deeply interested in the future of the Brethren church and they are to be congratulated for their response to the call of our College.

The First Church

This church has had some very heavy financial burdens in the last two years to which they have responded under the capable leadership of their pastor, Brother Paul Miller. They had just recently raised $8,000.00 to clear the church from debt and were in the midst of a local campaign in raising $4,500.00 for improving the church building. THERE ARE NO RICH PEOPLE in this congregation, but they do know how to give to the Lord's work. They do not have a large membership and are not only scattered over Philadelphia, but reach over into New Jersey.

I want to thank the pastor for the fine cooperation given, who not only gave me his full time out of a busy life, but did all he could to have his people help in the campaign.

Philadelphia has sent many of its young people to the College and has given many to the work of the Lord, among these are James Gribble, Edwin Boardman, Morton Sands, Perry Horlacher, Orville Jobson, Elizabeth Tyson, W. A. Steffler, and Joseph H. Foster and wife. These are all that I now recall and there may be others that I do not know, whom I am not omitting intentionally. Any church that can produce workers of the stamp of these named is worth recognition. Brother Adams, a young man from this church is now preaching at Hampton, New Jersey; others are in preparation in Ashland and at the Bible school.

It is the supreme duty of every church to seek out its talented young people and lay upon them the claims of Jesus Christ to their talents. HOW MANY HAVE YOU SENT FROM YOUR CHURCH TO PREACH CHRIST AND ADVANCE THE GOSPEL? The total gift to date of the First church is $4,445.00.

Third Church

This is a mission church which has struggled along for the past few years, looking forward to growth and making a strong congregation. Under the consecrated leadership of Brother J. E. Braker, who preached for them several years on Sunday and worked during the week, they steadily grew in numbers until the little mission building became too small for them. They erected a beautiful and commodious stone church upon which there is a considerable indebtedness. Some discouraging things took place, out of which they have come with stronger faith and determination. They recently called Brother Marcus Witter to be their pastor and we feel sure that it will be only a matter of time, before they became a strong, self-sustaining church, as they have a fine equipment, a good field and one of the best mission pastors in the brotherhood.

I consider that under the circumstances they did splendidly for the college in giving $567.00 to the Endowment Campaign.

The combined gift of Philadelphia is $5012.00, which gives another push to the hand on the DIAL. W. S. BELL.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Since the last report from this place we have enjoyed numerous blessings. One of the richest of these blessings came during the week of our District Conference. Since there are but two churches of our own denomination in all this great North-west one feels rather isolated and enjoys to the full the fellowship such as a conference affords. The Spokane church, despite the fact they have had no pastor for the past year, was well represented. We count ourselves fortunate in having been privileged to listen to those who took part on the program. Rev. Charles H. Ashman of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, a former pastor at Sunnyside, had the larger place on the program. He was at his best and brought messages true to the Book. His sermons were masterpieces and in spite of the busy season the crowds were large. Brother Ashman left Sunnyside with the bonds of friendship still strong and he is accompanied by the prayers and best wishes of his former parishioners. Then, too, we were most highly favored by having with us Brother and Sister Sickel, returned missionaries from South America. This was Mrs. Sickel's former home and her many friends of past years were glad to welcome her. Brother Sickel spoke twice, giving an account of the work in which they are engaged and stressing the needs and opportunities of the field. On Saturday evening he gave his stereopticon lecture which made us to see the real transformation that is being wrought. Mrs. Sickel was in charge of the Sunday afternoon meeting for women only. This meeting was largely attended and we feel sure much was done in arousing missionary enthusiasm.

October 3 was Rally-Home Coming Day. Not all our goals were reached, yet we had a really great day. The Sunday school was fine, the program excellent, and as a fitting climax to the day, we were privileged to have with us Dr. Gribble, returned missionary from Africa. The message was given in the afternoon and it gripped the hearts, moved people to tears, and we believe resulted in some placing their lives and possessions on the altar to be used by him as he directs. Mrs. Gribble holds a large place in the affections of the Sunnyside church people since this is the place where her own daughter has been making her home. In this way we really count Dr. Gribble as our own representative.

Our work, in general, is going forward. Crowds continue good, we are reaching new friends, the finances are in excellent shape, and while nothing startling is being done we feel the Lord is blessing and the coming months should show continued growth. Billy Sunday is to lead in a campaign in Yakima, the county seat, which begins in November. We expect to reap results from this meeting. Sunnyside is nearly forty miles from Yakima but that distance means but little in this day of automobiles. People are already planning to attend in quite large numbers. We are looking forward to a special campaign in our own church in the not far distant future when we hope to reap the harvest of the seed-sowing of the past year.

We rejoice in the advance being made by the church at large. I am especially pleased with the progress being made by our own college. May the Lord make possible a real victory in the Endowment Campaign and may he keep our college true in every particular.

Pray for our work in this great Northwest.
J. C. BEAL.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE INDIANA CONFERENCE

By the Pastor of the Warsaw Church

Inasmuch as Conference has asked us to write a few lines to our brotherhood with reference to our conference in its relations to the Warsaw church, I shall accept the invitation, and pass on a few things that have come to my attention.

First, I should say that it is a rare privilege that any church has of entertaining a state conference. It is impossible to put in print what it means to any church. Because it always leaves its impressions for good, and brings a lasting benefit. It has been my privilege to attend many conferences, but I do not recall one that was more largely attended, or where there was a better interest or a finer spirit prevailing throughout. While it means a great amount of work for any church, yet we believe they will be richly repaid for any sacrifice that may have been necessary for its entertainment. The state conference has always meant much to me. I recall my first conference at Eaton, twenty-two years ago, and again at Mexico twenty years past. These years have brought changes in our district. At that conference were Brethren Hopkins, Fox, Fisher, Hubbard, Summers, Menaugh and V. R. Miller. These have passed on to their reward. But younger men have taken their places, and Indiana can well be grateful for the splendid group of young men that have come to take their places.

From the various reports given it seems that the work is going well all along the line, and if we are faithful and carry out the plans of conference and of the Great Head of the church, the coming year will be a great year for our beloved church. Let us labor and pray that it shall be so.

So brethren we are saying again, we are thankful for your fellowship, for the encouraging words, and for everything your coming has meant to us.

Yours faithfully, until we meet again.

C. C. GRISSO, Pastor Conference Church.

MATHIAS, WEST VIRGINIA

We are still on the firing line, bombarding the enemy and this would be considered in order if it is as Bame said, "Where Dunkard moonshiners are active." But we console ourselves with the thought that ours is not the exception, but strictly in line with most other sections and cities.

Sin abounds and should God's people cease to fight, it would much more abound.

The outlook for the Brethren people at this place seems to be better. More interest is manifest, more loyalty, more activity and more consecration.

Our people recently enlarged the church building, giving us now a building 50x55, with Sunday school rooms, baptistry, heating, etc., as well as improving in appearance.

On the 8th day of May Dr. C. A. Bame, his wife and daughter came to us and at that time Brother Bame preached the rededicatory sermon, his wife and daughter assisting wonderfully in the music. At night the revival started. The first week the weather was extremely warm but the sermons were strong and powerful and very large crowds came and until one day more than a week eleven had already come forward and then came the rain. The pros-

A Change of Pastors

*You say that a change would be better;
I grant it—but here let me say
A few solemn words to each member,
In a sisterly, Christian way.*

Are you sure where the change is most needed,

*In the pulpit, or in the pew?
Is the pastor the one who needs changing,
Or, my friend, let me ask, is it you?*

Have you prayed for God's blessing upon him?

*Have you been to him helpers indeed?
Worked with him, stood by him, upheld
him,
And ministered oft to his need?*

Has your place in the prayer-meeting always

*Been filled, when you knew you could go?
And the Sunday school been brightened and flourished*

At your presence and work—is this so?

Have you given your means to your Master?

*Not merely a dollar or two,
But the twenties or fifties or hundreds
In proportion as given to you?*

*If these questions can not be replied to
In a truly affirmative way,
Then I beg you to change now, my brother,
My sister—and do not delay.*

*Ne'er hope that a pastor, though gifted
As Gabriel fresh from God's throne,
Or mighty as Paul, could accomplish
His labors among you alone.*

—Zion's Herald.

pects at this time could not have been better but the rain which continued for about one week, could not have been otherwise than to embarrass the interest started. Whilst we do not like to think of any desire to control weather conditions, yet we did hope for a cessation of rain for awhile at least, in order that we might have an abundant reaping.

We closed on Sunday night with an excellent communion, and on the following morning Brother Bame, his good wife and daughter started for their home with the good wishes of our people here. The night we closed the Church of the Brethren began a revival meeting and it occurred to us that they might be able to reap, having the advantage of the interest already started, but such was not the case.

The minister holding their meeting stayed several nights with the writer, and we talked church and church union from start to finish. He seemed very much discouraged with his meeting and for the outlook for his church here and visited our church and said that both congregations ought to be together, even saying that a few more Sunday school rooms in our building ought to be arranged for and then both use the building. He stated from his pulpit at the close of his meeting that the Church of the Brethren and Brethren here ought to unite.

Returning again to our recent revival held by our good Brother Bame, assisted by his excellent wife and daughter, we consider it a very successful one. First, it has been a means of strengthening the membership and bringing about a deeper loyalty, especially is this seen in many of our college boys and girls who are away a good part of the year, teaching and in school. Second, it has brought us stronger before the people especially from a doctrinal standpoint as Brother Bame did not fail to declare the Whole Gospel of God. Third, it elevated our church in the estimation of many of the Church of the Brethren and many of them now believe that we stand for principles advocated by the original Dunkard church.

We cannot sufficiently emphasize the work here of Brother Bame, his wife and daughter and our people hope to have them back again.

We believe we will have good news to report soon.
ARTHUR SNIDER.

DOINGS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Although we have appeared negligent in submitting a report for some time, we are still endeavoring to carry forward the work here. The Lord has graciously blessed us and we rejoice that we can do all things in his strength. He alone leads us from victory unto victory.

Our building project is receiving the concentrated attention of the entire congregation and we have occasion for rejoicing. Sunday, October 10, marked a very significant step in the history of the erection of the building. Three hundred Brethren and friends gathered at 12th and E Streets, S. E., to witness the laying of the cornerstone and participate in the service of praise and thanksgiving. A very impressive service occurred. After the singing of the Doxology and the invocation, the pastor gave a short inspirational address setting forth the purpose of the building program, in that Christ alone might have the preeminence and receive the glory due unto his Name. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it." Rev. S. P. Fogle, pastor of the Brethren church at Reliance, Virginia, was present and read the Scripture, using I Corinthians 3:1-18 and I Peter 2:1-9. Greetings and expressions of goodwill were brought from the Church of the Brethren, represented by Professor Hollinger. Rev. C. E. Hawthorne of the United Presbyterian church brought felicitation from his congregation, and also from the Washington Federation of Churches. H. Clay Dooley, Superintendent of the Sunday school, spoke for a brief while on the past history of the church, touching upon the vicissitudes of her experiences. The laying of the stone proper was performed by the pastor, assisted by the building committee, represented by Thomas Chappell, H. Clay Dooley and Paul Brumbaugh. Within the copper receptacle was placed a Bible, the church register, pamphlet of the building project, small silk American flag, copy of the Evangelist, portrait of the former pastor, the late Rev. William Lyon, and a copy of the current newspaper, The Evening Star.

We have been worshipping, ad interim, in very comfortable quarters and rejoice that the membership has been faithful in attendance. Quite a few are being reached in the new community who are apparently much interested.

Despite the handicaps which accompany the abnormal conditions under which every congregation must labor during building, we are encouraged to believe that every auxiliary of the church is doing the best possible. At present we are looking forward with eagerness to a possible visit from Dr. Gribble enroute to New York. We shall not only recognize our fortunate privilege but shall rejoice in the blessing she will be to our people.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

REV. HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.

WHEN WE LAID THE CORNER STONE

The following was written in connection with the laying of the corner stone of the new church at Washington, D. C., on October 10, 1926:

In an hour before the twilight,
While October sunbeams shone,
With many sweet and sacred memories
We did lay the corner stone.

Memories sweet, for here so often
The joys of worship we had known;
Sacred, for we missed some loved ones,
As we laid the corner stone.

'Mid our sorrows, joys and worship,
Dear this spot to us had grown!
May it be for his own glory
That we laid the corner stone.

A MODERN PENTECOST

I am asked to write my impressions of the Indiana Conference held at Warsaw, October 5 to 7 inclusive.

On arriving at the church on Tuesday evening I saw two of my special friends standing and heard one of them say, "Here comes Brother Flora. He keeps coming to conference." My answer was, "Yes, when I get there, I'll be waiting inside the golden gate for Wirick and Teeter."

Instead of the upper room at Jerusalem we had the beautiful auditorium of the Warsaw Brethren church. When supper time came (modern dinner) we all sat down together. It seemed we were in Pentecostal order. Note Acts 1:4. Being assembled together. Acts 1:15. The number together were about 120. Acts 2:1. With one accord in one place.

If the absentees had heard the singing of the opening exercises led by Brother Zumbaugh they would have been like the multitude of old that came together amazed and said, What meaneth this? Brother Rench would have stood up as he did and said, These brethren are full of the Holy Spirit and are ready to be used of the Master in his service.

These words spoken first by Brother Rench in his message to the conference. The Bible, the whole Bible, and NOTHING BUT THE BIBLE, seemed to me to be the keynote.

Some of us older Brethren can not see just how the Manual of procedure fits in with the latter clause, NOTHING BUT THE BIBLE.

Going back to Peter at that memorial Pentecost we hear him quote from this wonderful Word, "Your young men shall see visions, your old men shall dream dreams, your handmaidens shall prophesy."

Well, in this modern pentecost we had those young visionaries and the old dreamers, and the prophetesses, but for the life of me I could not tell when it was a vision, a dream or a prophecy. At any rate it matters little, for I am sure they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and spake as the Spirit gave them utterance.

If Brother Rench sounded the keynote, the speakers took their key and the harmony was perfect. It remained for Brother Stuckman to give us the parting solo with the refrain THE BIBLE, THE WHOLE BIBLE, AND NOTHING BUT THE BIBLE. Then the conference finale. So may it be, Amen and Amen.

HUMAN SACRIFICES IN TOBACCO FIRES

Will H. Brown

Almost daily the papers report loss of life in fires started by careless smokers. The total runs into hundreds annually, according to statistics gathered by insurance companies.

Frederick Beverly Pearson, aged 30, heir to $2,000,000 when 35 years of age, was burned to death in a Chicago hotel, his clothing catching fire from a cigarette he was smoking, when he fell asleep in a chair.

One of the most terrible deaths in recent times was that of Louis J. Ainsworth, of Cincinnati, Ohio, caused by falling from a window on the nineteenth floor of a Chicago hotel. The man in the next room heard him screaming: "I am burning up." His door could not be readily opened, because it was locked. Evidently mistaking the window for the door, he stepped out, clinging to the window until the flames from his room compelled him to let go, dropping 250 feet to his death. When the fire in his room was extinguished, the police found evidence that he had probably been smoking in bed, thus unintentionally setting the bedding on fire.

Mrs. D. Erickson, of Freeport, Illinois, forgot to empty her pipe when she put it in the pocket of her dress, thus setting her clothing on fire, resulting in death after terrible suffering.

A man at Bay City, California, lit his pipe by the side of his automobile while it was being refueled, causing an explosion, setting fire to the auto, burning to death his little son, two and a half years of age, and so badly burning his five-year-old daughter that she died the next day. The man himself was severely burned.

And thus the human sacrifices to the god of nicotine continue.

BEHIND THE FIVE AND TEN CENT COUNTER

The daughter of the late Mr. Woolworth was robbed in a New York hotel recently. The police do not like to give out details in such matters, but the newspapers said that her loss was somewhere between $750,000 and $1,000,000. One newspaper hinted that she would not be much disturbed by such a loss. Why should she be? Woolworth paid thirty-two per cent on its stock in 1924, and might have piled up a much larger profit but for the expense of opening and stocking ninety-six new stores. Mr.

Kresge's wife also figures in the news. She claims that her husband made a pre-nuptial agreement whereby she was to have, as a wedding present, several million dollars' worth of Kresge stock. She says that she didn't get it, and she wants it. Who can blame her? Kresge paid forty-one per cent on the common stock last year, and there have been stock dividends of 450 per cent since 1916. The Kresge stockholders received $24.45 for every $100 they had invested; McCrory's owners had to be content with a pitiful $.42 on shares which have no par value. These returns are taken from a report of the United States Women's bureau. The same report states that more than eighty per cent of the employees in the five and ten cent stores received last year less than twelve dollars a week. Think it over. —Christian Century.

LIFE

*Death comes and makes a man his prey,
A man whose powers are yet unspent,
Like one on gathering flowers intent,
Whose thoughts are turned another way.
Begin betimes to practice good,
Lest fate surprise thee unawares
Amid thy round of schemes and cares;
To-morrow's task today conclude.*

—Mahabharata.

A CORRECT DECISION

The Supreme Court of California, recently rendered an important decision concerning the status of the Bible in the education of that state. The case was one from Selma, Fresno County, where a certain man sought an injunction against the school board to restrain them in their plan to put a King James version of the Bible into the library of the public schools, on the ground that it was a sectarian book. The court said: "The contention that the King James translation of the Bible is a book of sectarian character, rests on the fact that there are differences between it, and among others the Douai version; that it is of Protestant authorship; that it is used in the Protestant churches; and that it is not approved by the Catholic church.

"According to such a test, the Bible in any known version or text is sectarian. In fact, until all agree upon the manuscript text that should be used, no English Bible not 'sectarian' can be produced.

"The statute, however, deals with publications of a sectarian character. It makes the character of the book, the test of whether it is sectarian, not its authorship or the extent of its approval by different sects or by all. That the authors of religious books belong to a certain sect or church, does not necessarily make their books of a sectarian character. Nor does the fact that the King James version is commonly used by Protestant churches, and not by Catholics makes its character sectarian. Its character is what it is, a widely accepted translation of the Bible. What we have said of the King James translation is equally applicable to the Douai version. Both are scholarly translations of the Bible and neither is a book of sectarian character within the meaning of the statute relating to school libraries. Both are eligible to a place on the shelves of our public school libraries, for reference purposes.

"Each version has claims. Regarded merely as literature, the King James version is a recognized classic. For centuries it has been most generally used in Protestant churches of England and America. The Douai version has merits of its own. It is the text approved by one of the world's greatest churches. We do not assume to decide the comparative merits of the two. We do however, hold that either or both may be purchased for and placed in a public school library, without violation of the law of this state."

This, we should call sound law and sound sense, as we read the constitutional and statutory provisions for keeping sectarian teaching out of the schools. A similar case involving the reading of the Bible without note or comment, should be taken through the courts of that state, to settle the question of Bible reading in the schools. This case will make a good precedent.—Christian Statesman.

Any one who has ever held one of these soft, velvety creatures in his hands, has watched the snub-nosed face eating pin-headed sized bits of scraped beef, listened to the comical clickful anger, will not pass by these cages without some effort to release these scorned, abused, and thoroughly misunderstood bits of Nature's handiwork.—The Methodist Protestant.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Mother's Helpers

When Mother's busy cleaning,
Sometimes she lets me run
The shiny vacuum sweeper,
And that means lots of fun.

My puppy starts a-barking,
And chases it with vim;
He thinks that awful monster
Is coming after him.

He's certain it will gobble
His stubby tail or ear,
But oh, he's brave and fearless,
And dares it to come near!

So puppy barks and capers,
The sweeper hums—I puff—
Till Mother says, My goodness,
It's plenty clean enough.

We've worked so hard to help her,
And now it would be fine
To go and play—since puppy
Has saved his life and mine.

POOR LITTLE SNUB NOSES

Marjorie Shanafelt

That exciting play, "The Bat", having been filmed is now showing in hundreds of cities and towns. Advertising is a great part of the movie game and the back pages of movie magazines are devoted to stunts warranted to focus attention upon the play of the week. Anyone can see then that houses showing "The Bat" would logically procure live bats and display them, that the public might shudder at an animal whose obnoxiousness most people believe is equalled by the snake alone. The habits of the creature being a blank page to most people, some theater attache puts a can of water in the cage, and some dry bread perhaps, and then blames the bats that they do not eat.

On making inquiry at a box office window in our town regarding the bats caged in front of the theater, I learned that they had been confined for more than a week, and that they were not hungry since they would not eat the bread and milk put in the cage for them. Four of these bats were mothers, two of them having given birth to babies while in the cage.

The boys who had been carrying the cage in and out during the week were very much interested on learning that a bat would not eat out of a dish but while in captivity must be fed by hand. That was all very well, but brave as young men of eighteen may be, not one of them was brave enough to feed one of those caged bats. The promised fate of these bats was to be smothered in order to get a good picture of them, "which was the proper thing," the pretty girl at the window asserted since they were "just full of vermin" and really no good anyway.

It being quite evident that nothing could be done by appeals to the theater, the chief of the Humane Society was consulted and through him we were able to secure a promise of the bat's release for Friday, although it was Saturday noon before they were delivered. By this time four were lying dead on the floor of the cage. Feeding them warm milk, on a small paint brush, and then scraped beef, resulted in three of the bats recovering enough to fly away within an hour. One hoary bat died while we were feeding it. Saturday evening another died, and the next morning a mother bat with a very tiny baby clinging to her, were found huddled up on the cage floor, having died during the night, as had one large hoary bat nearby.

Since a bat does not thrive on this type of feeding we were desirous of getting them out-of-doors as soon as possible that they might go winging their way toward a properly balanced meal, garnered from the variety of bugs circling about the street light. Five of the bats ate well, drank well, and would probably revive in the open so we put them on the branches of the various trees. They settled themselves as though they liked the movement of the branches in the breeze and we hoped they would be in good health by evening, but the next day's search found two of these dead. This meant that three, possibly, had survived. This made six live bats back in their own element. We still had four babies, so small their eyes were as yet unopened, whose mothers had perished.

For three days these were nursed on warm milk which they sucked in greedily from the paint brush, upon which they clung with a surprising strength. They never did understand why the brush had to be removed before the next swallow was a possibility. They liked warm hands and cuddled down, trying to find a fold of flesh which they could grasp with their tiny mouth. We swaddled them in a woolly cloth and directed the warmth from an electric bulb upon them. One of them died within twenty-four hours but the other three lived for several days. One acquired the tiniest of black eyes, and the hair on their backs began to show which were hoary bats and which was a little New York red bat. The second one succumbed and the last two it was necessary to chloroform, so pitifully difficult had life become for them.

And so, out of twenty-one bats, (acquired by offering mercenary small boys twenty-five cents a bat), innocent of any harmful act but enmeshed in the deadly snare of superstition and misinformation, only six were rescued. In reviewing the play the following Sunday, an enthusiastic and ignorant newspaper cub wrote, "Inside the box they drowsed the time away, comfortably hanging head downward as they slept."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WASHINGTON C. H., OHIO

The Fairview Brethren church will hold its semi-annual communion service on October 31 at 4:30 P. M. All of similar faith living within reach are urged to join us in this holy ordinance.

S. E. CHRISTIANSEN, Pastor.

ROANN, INDIANA

The Brethren Church at Roann, Indiana, will hold its Annual Homecoming on October 17. It will be an all-day meeting with special program of speaking and music.

This church will also hold its communion on October 19th. You are invited to attend these services.

J. E. WARREN,
Roann, Indiana.

TEN WEEKS WITH THE TITHE

Any church may now put on a Ten Weeks' course of tithing education, right in the midst of its other activities, and at a ridiculously small cost.

The Layman Company, which has distributed many millions of pamphlets on the tithe, now announces an attractive new series, at so low a price that distribution to an entire church through ten weeks costs only two cents and a half per family.

A complete set of samples and full particulars will be sent for twenty-five cents, stamps or coin. This amount will be credited on an order for the complete "Church Education Unit." Address

THE LAYMAN COMPANY,
730 Rush Street, Chicago, Ill.

NOTICE!

We want to get the material for the 1926 Annual to press as soon as possible. We cannot get it there any sooner than you send it in. Hence we are issuing this call for your assistance.

We ask for the following: that all who are responsible for reports from the different auxiliaries of the church will respond immediately, with reports neatly typewritten, ready to hand to the printer. That all State Secretaries will send as soon as possible their respective District Conference organization. Also that they send a complete and corrected Ministerial List with congregations and pastors. Give the name of every ordained minister in your Districts whether active or inactive. We will make an effort to check up carefully with the present list and thus make any corrections necessary. Have these reports neatly typewritten, ready to hand to printer. If you will do this the work can be made lighter for all concerned and will speed the publication of the Annual. If there are any sermons or addresses of National Conference not yet turned in will you not do so immediately? I crave your cooperation and help. Thanks in advance.

O. C. STARN, Secretary,

The Duty of the Ballot

The ballot box is the right and duty of every responsible citizen. It is the one means of protection and of expression open to the masses. Voting is the sign of citizenship and theoretically there is no law-abiding citizen "of full age" denied this expression of citizenship and practically no one should be hindered or thwarted in the exercise of that right. It is our great weapon of defense, our Magna Charta, the guarantee of our freedom and the continuance of our democracy.

In view of the universal right of suffrage and of the great importance of the exercise of that right, it is a shame that it is so widely neglected. Every citizen has not merely the privilege and right to vote, but the duty and responsibility as well. But more especially does that responsibility rest upon the Christian voter. The powers that be are ordained of God and the Christian is duty bound above all others to faithfully support those powers, to see that they are truly Christian, both in the lives of the agents of government and in the policies they pursue. He should seek to enable the King of kings to have his will and way worked out in the conduct of all civic affairs. If there is corruption in politics, violation of law, misrepresentation in government, infidelity in public offices, it is the Christian's duty to see to it that such wrongdoing shall cease. If he holds his peace and fails to mark his ballot, or if he marks it wrongly, he becomes a party to the crimes that disgrace his state or nation. Just as each member of a business partnership is responsible for the acts of his partner, so each voter is responsible for the acts of his public official and must do what he can to influence him aright. If there is winking at law-violation and the voter fails to protest, he becomes a nulifier of the law as truly as the delinquent enforcing official. If there is graft in public office and the citizen has knowledge of it and does not raise his voice against it, he not only condones the crime but becomes guilty of complicity in it. If a small but vociferous minority undertakes to undermine the foundations of government for the sake of greed and appetite and the Christian sits indifferently by and offers no interference, he can scarcely be called a true patriot and supporter of the government that is of God. If there are those who withdraw from participation in public affairs lest they get their spiritual garments soiled, and refuse to wield their God-given weapon—the ballot, while the agents of sin accomplish their evil purposes, they can scarcely escape with garments less polluted than those who perpetrate the iniquitous plans.

To vote effectively one must vote intelligently. And to have enough intelligence to vote effectively one must give time to the study of issues and men. A great deal of vicious or worthless legislation is enacted, many inefficient or corrupt officials are elected and a vast amount of lawlessness is tolerated because hosts of our good-intentioned men and women are ignorant of what is going on. Not infrequently men as well as women are heard to say, "I seldom read anything about politics. I don't know much about what the politicians are doing. I don't bother my brains about such things." Such statements by any one are to his discredit, and such indifference is his own condemnation. It is a confession that convicts of criminal negligence of duty. For it is every voter's duty to be informed on the affairs of state, to understand the issues on which he is to vote and to know the character of the men who are to represent him.

The Christian voter should not only be able to vote intelligently and right, but should be interested enough in the triumph of good men and issues to seek by every honorable means to influence others to vote right. It is not meddling with another man's business to be concerned about how he shall stand when moral issues come to vote. It is every Christian's business to seek to influence his neighbor to adopt the right view and to vote the right way at such times. All missionary work for the advancement of the cause of righteousness by turning men's votes and influence into right channels is fully justified and is to be commended. But when one has done all that, he has only done his duty.

Observing Armistice Day

Armistice Day ought to become a popular event in our church calendar. It should in any church for that matter, but in a peculiar way it should grip the imagination of Brethren people. It is a day that speaks of peace. All people want that and all churches are working for it, but the Brethren church has a special right to leadership in this line because the doctrine of non-resistance has been an ideal taught and practiced by Brethrenism throughout its history, and what a wonderful opportunity Armistice Day offers us for propagating this denominational tenet! This is a day when we ought to make much of this teaching, for it was never needed more than it is at present and there never was a greater receptiveness shown generally toward the doctrine than now.

It is an opportune time to teach the ideal of non-resistance, or the practice of the spirit of peace, because the world has largely lost faith in the effectiveness of war. Many things cooperate to make the nations of the world slow to give up their weapons of warfare, and yet they dread to think of a time when they must use them again, for they know full well that no combination of world powers can gain a victory in another world war. It would mean the destruction of civilization. Big Berthas, T. N. T., and Lewisite gas are too terribly destructive and they accomplish too little! The mind of the world is ready to grasp more fully than ever before that the spirit of goodwill, such as the angel promised at the birth of Jesus, is vastly more powerful as a weapon for peace than all the ingenious but deadly inventions of men. This is a time when the world is hungering for this great Gospel truth, and we do not well to hold our peace.

Dr. Augustus O. Thomas, state commissioner of education of Maine, recently declared: "We are at present crossing the divide between two great vitally different dispensations. In all history thus far nations have looked to military equipment as a means of preparedness against invasion, the theory being that the nation that could produce the greatest and most efficient equipment would be the securest, and might if it was so desired subjugate many smaller nations. This in the past forced the idea of the balance of power, triple alliances, the entente and other forms of national security. Today we have come to the conclusion that the greatest preparedness is in the hearts of mankind. Goodwill, friendship, and justice may be taught so that treaties may become mere scraps of paper and expensive military equipment which exhausts the nations may find a substitute in the courts of arbitration." And then he adds significantly, "To this end the world is centering its interest in the training of the rising generation." And there we have pointed out to us the strategic place of emphasis in our teaching of the principles of peace—namely, the rising generation.

Our children have all but lost our doctrine of peace; we have neglected to teach it to them. And the professional militarists of our country are seeking to inculcate into their minds the idea of the necessity of war for security and its importance for the development of "manly courage and national solidarity." Moreover they are encouraging the spirit of suspicion and mistrust in the hearts of our youth towards other nations, the spirit which leads inevitably to hatred and war. This is all wrong, and we must make the youth to understand that it is. We must teach our own young people and all others whose lives we may touch, and bring them to believe in the power of the Gospel of peace, that patriotism and manliness are developed more by the practice of the teachings of Jesus than those of the god of war, and that people of different nations and races are not to be considered as potential enemies but as friends and neighbors, for God hath made of one blood all men to dwell upon the face of the earth. When the people of the world come to look upon one another as friends, it will be hard for them to fight. To bring about this end, and to intensify hatred for war and to strengthen love for peace, let us observe Armistice Day.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Ivan Earl Ronk arrived at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Willis E. Ronk, at Clayton, Ohio, on October 1, 1926. Word is that mother and son are getting along splendidly. We extend congratulations to Brother and Sister Ronk in behalf of the Evangelist family. Brother Ronk is pastor of the churches at Clayton and West Alexandria.

Brother Orville D. Ullom writes of his work in the Green County circuit in Pennsylvania, which he has been faithfully serving during the summer vacations. Among the special evidences of a maintenance of a lively interest in the Lord's work were the programs of the young people, the beautifying of the church house and a revival effort in which Brother W. C. Benshoff was the preacher. Brother Ullom has returned to his school work at Hartford Seminary in Connecticut.

We hear more concerning the Indiana conference recently held at Warsaw, and reported officially by the secretary, Brother N. V. Leatherman. In addition Brethren C. D. Whitmer and M. E. Horner write their impressions in this issue. Others have written in previous issues. In view of the enthusiasm with which these correspondents write it is evident that Indiana had a very successful conference in every way.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, writes of some items of interest connected with that strong and aggressive church. Three very significant features of the report are the Rally Day with an attendance of 500 and an offering for district missions of over $500, a banner attendance at the communion service of 410 communicants, and the launching of a Week Day Bible School with classes meeting every Monday night for Intermediates, Young People, and Adults, the enrollment already having reached the 130 mark. These and other features of the report reveal a constructive program and intensive effort.

It is time to begin to plan and pray for the lifting of the National Home Mission offering. The Sunday preceding or following Thanksgiving is the time suggested. While we have not yet received any intimation from the officials of the General Home Board as to the amount of their askings, it is safe to say they are in need of the largest offering ever received for that purpose. The best first preparation for the making of a banner offering is earnest and genuine prayer. Then, where people are not already tithing, it might be well to encourage them to tithe for some specified period of time with the understanding that the Lord's money thus accruing shall be given to Home Missions. Besides the experience thus gained in following the Lord's plan for financing the Kingdom it may lead some to adopt it as a permanent policy. There is real satisfaction and blessing to be gained thereby.

As we were going to press Dean J. Allen Miller requested us to announce that the ministers of the Ohio conference had decided to continue their reading circle and that other ministers interested are invited to join the circle. The plan is for each minister to pay the price of one book, which he may select from a list of approved books. His selection will be sent to him immediately and after he has read it, it will be started on its journey around the circle, each one after reading it, sending it on to the next person on the list. Thus there will be as many books on the move as there are persons in the circle. These books, after read, will form the nucleus of a ministers' reading circle library. It is a good plan to encourage ministers to keep their minds fresh by the reading of the latest and most helpful books, and it also enables each one to have access to one new book or more a month for the price of one book a year. Any ministers interested should write at once to Dr. J. Allen Miller at Ashland, Ohio, as the books for the next conference year will soon be purchased and distributed.

The Business Manager has something to say on page 16 and every present subscriber should be interested in what he has to say, for the reason that it should be the ambition of every member of the Evangelist family to seek to extend the influence of our beloved paper. A boost for the Evangelist means a boost for every other interest of the brotherhood and for every local church. Any church that does not at present have the Evangelist coming into every home should take this opportunity of introducing it to those who have not yet become acquainted with its merits. Every reader ought to become an agent and secure at least one new subscriber and member of our family, and as an inducement you may sell them a fourteen months' subscription for the price of twelve months. We would like to suggest also that churches not on the Honor Roll should find this a fitting time to try for that position. The Evangelist going into three-fourths of the homes, or placed on the church budget (which means going into all the homes) entitles your people to a dollar and a half rate.

One encouraging feature of the Endowment Campaign among the churches being conducted by Dr. W. S. Bell is the willingness manifested on the part of all, even the smaller churches, to do their bit, and while these amounts do not send the dial around as far as the gifts from the big churches, and cannot be expected to, yet they bulk large in interest and make for a widespread heart appeal which will prove to be one of the main sources of strength to the college. The New Jersey churches, which include Sergeantsville, Calvary and Hampton, made a total gift of $582.76, which brings the total of the campaign as reported to $76,227.39, an amount which at this stage in the game indicates, as Brother Bell claims, that the churches are going way over the top. Recent developments in Ashland show that the local college constituency is determined to do its part in making Ashland College a standard school. Those directing the local campaign have been working for weeks, organizing the city and county, sending out publicity matter and getting ready for the actual canvass which began on Friday, October 22, and was expected to be completed the first of the week following. The goal set for the city and county was $190,000, and as we go to press the latest issue of the Ashland Times-Gazette announces $81,000 to have been reported by the soliciting teams.

In a communication from the Moody Bible Institute setting forth certain courses which they offer, we have the following observation:

The new era of religious education has greatly magnified the office of department superintendent. Unlike the general superintendent who best serves the Sunday school as a promoter, the department superintendent is required to be an educator as well as an administrator. The instruction of teachers and the grading of pupils presupposes a higher order of training than any other executive of the Sunday school. The rapid rise of the Daily Vacation Bible School, and the more recent recognition of the value of the Week Day Church School, has added new duties and a larger importance to the office.

It is certainly true that the time has come when the department superintendent must be a specialist, if the most satisfactory service is to be rendered, and the churches ought to be seeing to it that certain of their capable young people are being trained for such positions of responsibility. We know of no place better—in fact, none so good—for Brethren young people to secure this specialization work than at Ashland College where there is a department adapted for just that sort of work, and under the expert direction of Professor J. A. Garber, whose experience and training in this field gives him a right to a place as an authority.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Prohibition Not a Failure

By Dr. Nolan R. Best

(Copyright by Doran)

(This is a condensed statement of a booklet on Prohibition written at the request of officials of the Federal Council of Churches by Dr. Nolan R. Best, former editor of that widely-influential but recently discontinued, religious publication, "The Continent." It will be issued by Doran as a copyrighted publication. A brief foreword is as follows:

"Since this book has been written as an individual utterance and not as an official pronouncement, the author has had full freedom in the expression of personal opinions. The book, however, so effectively sets forth deep convictions held by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of Churches that it warmly commends it to The Evangelist constituency, and bespeaks for it a careful reading.")

National prohibition in America is not a failure, nor is it going to be.

It is not sufficient for its friends to say: "Prohibition is the law." They must say "Prohibition is a good law."

The supreme need today throughout the country is a re-invigoration of faith in the rightness and wisdom of the objects at which prohibition aims and in the soundness of the civic method involved in it.

Americans should be beyond the cookie stage. Many persons, as far as the use of alcoholic beverages is concerned, have wilfully reverted to the cookie stage of childhood, when they always wanted the cookies which mother had locked up in the cupboard.

We must strenuously insist upon the principle of "personal liberty" and we agree with opponents of prohibition in asserting that it is impossible to make men moral by law. Prohibition must be judged and justified by its social results.

Prohibition is not the enemy, but the friend of both social and personal liberty. It will prove to be really "Freedom's mountain height."

Right looking at the question of national prohibition is impossible until the notion is cleared away that this is legislation to "make men moral." The oft-repeated pronouncement that moral character cannot be created in men by the passing of statutes has never needed to be much insisted on, because every sensible person knows it perfectly well. Prohibitionists never thought of disputing a fact so self-evident.

And no prohibition measure was ever based on the purpose thus condemned.

The state cannot make a man want to do right, but it can make it easier and more comfortable for him to do right than to do wrong.

The saloon business earned its own destruction. American prohibition, first in two-thirds of the states and then in the nation as a whole, is a testimony to the intolerable arrogance and abysmal sordidness of the business that made and sold drink.

Prohibition laws have been shamefully violated since the liquor business was outlawed in the United States, but all that violation is a bagatelle compared with the defiance throughout the country of every form of law designed to regulate the sale of drink while the saloons were still licensed.

Liberty must not pay the price of cure. A triumph exceeded by none other in the long ascent of Anglo-Saxon popular government, beyond the Atlantic and on this American shore, has been the establishment of the criterion that government must govern private persons as little as public tranquility will permit.

Once the only rule of the road was "Keep to the right." Now a nearly endless code of recent legislation tells a man what licenses he must secure, what numbers and lights and warning devices he must provide, what speeds he must observe, what rights of way he must yield, what liabilities he must become responsible for when he drives away from his home premises.

The strict limit put on physicians prescribing alcohol is caused by men who debase their profession by selling liquor prescriptions without any color or medical reason. As soon as responsible medical organizations declare themselves ready to purge their profession and keep it pure by their own indictment of unworthy individuals, every restriction of law on a physician's employment of liquors for remedial purposes should be abolished.

Nobody, so far as known, seriously insists that in order to be a free American citizen needs either to possess or exercise a liberty to get drunk. If two glasses of whiskey will intoxicate the drinker, then it is acknowledged that the law may punish him for taking two drinks of whiskey without robbing him of any of the heritage of freedom for which his revolutionary forefathers fought and died. But how then could it be that his manly liberty is infringed if the law hinders him from taking one drink which would half intoxicate him?

Is it to be supposed that the Declaration of Independence guarantees a man the freedom to get half-drunk or even a third-drunk or a quarter-drunk and yet denies him the right of being completely drunk?

Some plead that drink leads to sociability. It would be turning the world topsy-turvy to rate mankind's capacity for drink a more essential social factor in civilization than mankind's capacity to think.

Prohibition is the logical outcome of the movement to regulate and license the saloon during the last hundred years. Nullification of state "dry" laws was caused by adjoining "wet" states.

Prohibition was a fair victory, legitimately achieved by force of public opinion. The claim is made that some senators and representatives live "wet" and vote "dry." If in some or even many cases the senators and representatives who gave their votes in such conditions for prohibition were themselves something less than teetotalers in their private habits, that accentuates all the more the power of the popular opinion which exacted from them votes at variance with their appetites.

What won't intoxicate won't satisfy those who demand modification. Demand for a "kick" means nothing at all except a thirst for something that will make a man moderately, mellowly, drunk. None but a few degraded fools really wish to drink themselves into insensibility. But for the first stages on the way to that end there still survives an abundant appetite.

The saloon system is probably as good a way of conducting the retail part of the traffic in a highly organized civilization as any other scheme that has yet been devised.

If intoxicating drink is in any proper sense a marketable commodity at all, there could be no better way to sell it than the saloon. But the saloon business never, never worked out according to this fair theory.

And the fact that the American saloon, hedged about with all palliatives, failed to make the drink traffic tolerable, means simply that by its own inherent and inevitable character that traffic is totally intolerable—wholly and hopelessly execrable.

It is pure absurdity to talk as if the lawless selling of liquor was something new in this country—something developed by the later-day effort to stop the drink trade altogether. Liquor has always been lawless, and the determination to license it revealed that tendency quite as distinctly, if not so spectacularly, as has the determination to suppress it.

Shame on those who are proud of their lawbreaking! The foundation principle underlying two forms of legislation—anti-drug laws and anti-liquor laws—is identical. Both are measures adopted by the state for the protection of the weaker members of society against deteriorating and finally ruinous habits which they have not the will power to resist.

Neither of these bans is logical unless the other is; neither is obnoxious to enlightened citizenship unless both are.

To be sure, liquor does not work so quick disaster on those who are addicted to the use of it and restrained indulgence seems more possible. But the sum total of the damage that intoxicants work in human lives throughout the country is far heavier than the toll of power, health and life taken by seemingly more fiendish drugs.

If "dope" is the worse temptation, drink is the farthest-reaching.

And the man is a contemptible cad who, because he believes he can drink liquor without harm to himself (how often he is mistaken!) insists on having his drink regardless of the law designed to defend his neighbor who can't drink without disaster.

Don't you believe prohibition won't succeed! Let believers in prohibition stand fast.

For every one who has ever been in favor of prohibition, therefore, the befitting counsel is that he should "hold fast the faith without wavering." It should be repeated: National prohibition in America is not a failure, nor is it going to be. It is simply not yet a complete success because there has not yet been time to force the battle in its behalf to final victory.

A revolution so radical as this which has already displaced the once omnipotent saloon from its whole line of nation-wide entrenchments cannot be finished over-night.

Were the thing done so hastily, then indeed it might not last. But as against the epochal advance of irresistible reform outbursts of specious clamor and sneaking conspiracy now and then need alarm no one. To watch, stand fast and press every advantage with fidelity to God and fellow man is for prohibition's champions the certain insurance of ultimate success."

Freedom's real "mountain height" is just ahead.

Young Americans of today will live to see a fairer America than their fathers ever knew.

In their politics they will enjoy a blessed immunity from the canker of a corrupt and corrupting trade which without the extenuation of a single social usefulness has for generations past thrived principally on the excesses to which it could tempt the appetites of those who did not know how to govern themselves.

In their public life they will be free from the carping selfishness of men whose bigotry and stubbornness refuse to subject private tastes to regulations conserving the common welfare of the masses.

In their social life they will be delivered from the humiliating folly of conceited "smart sets" who consider it an exploit to trade with outlawed freebooters for contraband goods.

By consequence in their legal life they will no longer have to contend with the corruption of public servants accomplished through the fabulous profits of bootleggers—the bootleggers' occupation gone.

Above all, in their home life they will be released forever from the heart-chilling fear with which parents have in other days watched their young folks at the verge of manhood and womanhood going out into the joyful fellowships of youth and the magic experiences of romantic love.

For the sons and daughters of clean American homes there has been but one real peril in the years past. They could be trusted to keep clean and live purely and honor their upbringing if only somewhere amid the temptations of their youth they were not beguiled with strong drink to bid farewell to their sober senses. That happening, no one could guess what else would happen in the tragedies that destroy virtue.

But into the not far future hour when America, not because of the law so much as because of a rising conscience and a clearing mind, extinguishes the fire of cupidity and passion that burned in the wineglass, the youth of America will go forth for life unmenaced and unafraid, and trusted moreover with a freedom such as youth till now has never known in civilization.

In "dry" America "mankind shall then be truly free."

Why the United States Should Share Her Material and Spiritual Resources With Africa

By W. E. Ronk

(Concluded from last week)

The standards of morality among these people are exceedingly low. To the African there is no connection between morals and religion. The gods take no account of lying, stealing or murder. There is not an awful crime or licentious vice which may not be committed in the very service of the gods. Priests are privileged to do anything their corrupt minds suggest when possessed by a god. The priestesses lead the most immoral lives. It is said that every fourth woman on the slave coast is a priestess, or wife of the gods. Delicacy permits only the most guarded references to the revolting brutality, and sickening licentiousness, which are the offspring of paganism. It is useless to speak of the evils of polygamy, and domestic slavery in this connection. Women are but chattels in the hands of men to be bought or sold at will. The degradation of womanhood is unspeakable.

North Africa with about 40,000,000 people is largely Mohammedan. Mohammedanism is a religion superior to paganism, in that it has the conception of one God, who is interested in his worshippers. Witchcraft, burial alive, cannibalism, and human sacrifice are eliminated, but the heart remains unchanged. It grants license and approval to the more subtle sins of greed and passion that prey upon human hearts—lying, stealing, intemperance, enslaving, the social vice and murder. When the native has once accepted Mohammedanism, it is exceedingly hard to reach him for Christ. Mohammedan traders and teachers are rapidly pushing down from the north to reach the 80,000,000 peoples who are pagan. It is the attempt to stem this tide that our missionaries and those of the Baptist Association are laboring in French Equatorial Africa. The people, most of whom have been untouched by the influences of the white man, are usually responsive to the claims of Christ. They are being received almost as fast as they can be taught the meaning of vital Christianity.

The temptation is to write at great length of the needs of these peoples, but I trust that enough has been written to convince us that this is in fact a land of the darkest sin and sorrow. Truly this is a land of need. A land ready for the harvest, and worthy of our greatest material and spiritual help.

We have seen that, the material and spiritual resources of America are unbounded; and that the need of Africa is so very, very great, therefore America should contribute of her resources to the need of Africa. This is a good investment for America. We have already seen that the low type of life in Africa is traced to the religion. American resources, in money and in life, in Africa will change the manner of living; stop the great human wastage of life through superstition and disease, and the non-productiveness of a people so laden in sins. From the financial viewpoint, all that we would spend in dollars and cents would be returned to us many times. This is to put the challenge on the lowest plane; yet it is a challenge which America should not let pass unheeded.

It is also a good investment in health. It has been noted for a long time that the great plague centers of the earth are the non-Christian lands. "The plagues of the sixth and fourteenth centuries, which cost Europe one-fourth of its entire population, arose in China. Between 1896 and 1907 India alone lost six millions of people from the plague, and in 1908 she lost a million more. Influenza probably appeared first more than thirty years ago in Central Asia." Our modern system of transportation and our trade with every nation has made our world very small. We are neighbors to the world. No part is isolated. A plague originating in Africa would bring disease and death to America. "If the Christian mercy did not dictate the solving of this problem of the world's health, economy and self interest would demand it." And for the very same reason, our interest in the stability of the world demands action. No people can live unto themselves.

But the greatest return from our investment would be the spiritual blessings coming from the joy of Christian service. When we remember that the Lord has made all people of one blood and that we are really brothers to the world, how our hearts go out in love to those of other lands. A life absorbed in self, whether it be of a church or a nation, is not a happy life. The happy life is the life that is spent in loving service. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth—" The pond that receives water unto itself and has no outlet only becomes stagnant; but the spring sends its waters, dashing and sparkling over the mountainside to join other rivulets, which in turn join others, until there is a mighty river. It is forever giving and yet forever gaining in beauty and majesty. So the life which holds all it receives to itself becomes self-centered, dwarfed and ugly; while he who gives of his life, receives more and more, becomes happy and contented in service.

The greatest reason why America should contribute of her material and spiritual resources to Africa, is because the head of the church,—Christ himself, said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." As a nation, we profess to be Christian, therefore we must heed the command. At least, we of the body of Christ, cannot disregard the command of our Savior and King. Whatever motives others may have for world service,—the Christian knows only one,—loving faithful service in obedience to our Lord's command "Go ye—"

But what a task presents itself! It is a seemingly impossible task. This only constitutes a mighty challenge,—yes a challenge to FAITH, for Jesus said, "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." Let us heed the command and under the banner of our King march forth to certain victory.

"I know of a land that is sunk in shame,
Of hearts that faint and tire—
And I know a Name,—a Name, a Name
Can set that land on fire.
Its sound is a brand, its letters flame—
I know of a name, a Name, a Name
That will set that land on fire."

"Go ye therefore and preach the Gospel to every creature. . . ."

The Layman's Organization of the Brethren Church

By W. O. Nish

(A Paper Read before the Ohio Conference, Fremont, October 21, 1920)

The Layman's organization of the Brethren Church is a National organization, that originated through the efforts of Calvin Leslie of Nappanee, N. G. Kimmell of Gratis, George Kem of Dayton and some other interested laymen. About four years ago these men culminated their ideas into the organizing of the movement. It has had a steady growth since that time. Men and women throughout the brotherhood who have attended National Conference, have taken an interest in it, especially since it has been given a place on the Conference program. It is right now at the cross roads of a great growth and with the proper interest in its activities by the laymen and ministers of the local churches it should prove to be a great influence for good in our church circles.

This organization has a most worthy objective. Realizing that there are many young men and women who are called into the ministry and Christian callings, that do not have sufficient funds to secure the adequate training, in Ashland College, to fit themselves for their mission; the Layman's organization has created a Student Loan Fund for ministerial students at Ashland College. Surely this meets a real need. Many times a young man or woman starts in the college year with a small sum of money they have been able to save from their summer's earnings. They expect to secure sufficient work in the hours after their class work to see them through on the balance of their expenses. At times this work is not available. Occasionally sickness or an operation makes it impossible for them to work. Naturally they become discouraged and it appears that they will have to drop out of college during the school year. This means that they will have to lose the work that they have done in that semester and that they must give up their vision of preparing for a Christian calling for a time at least and go back to an industrial or commercial life. After being in that atmosphere for a while, they are apt to lose their interest in their calling and never return to the college to prepare themselves for it. It is here that the Layman's Student Loan Fund comes to the front with a possible solution. This ministerial student can borrow from this fund, an amount to see him or her through the difficulty, upon being recommended for it by the Board of Directors of the Fund. The student then signs a note for this amount for a certain length of time agreeable to all, at a small rate of interest. Thus the individual has been saved to "carry on" in Christian work, (where workers are so badly needed) and the Fund is self perpetuating as soon as a sufficient amount has been raised as a working capital by the laymen of the brotherhood.

It was the thought of the founders of this organization that a working capital could be secured by interesting those of means to contribute to it and that each member that joined the layman's movement be asked to pay a fee of one dollar a year. Experience proved the objective of helping the ministerial students, with the money raised, they did not send in the one dollar yearly fee and the officers could not collect. Thus the clause in the Constitution relative to the one dollar fee for members was stricken out at the last National Conference meeting. Along with this, another plan was agreed upon. This plan is to have one Sunday a year set aside as Layman's Day, when the whole church service shall be conducted by laymen and an offering be lifted for the Student Aid Fund. Several churches have already observed the Layman's Day Service and have contributed liberally toward the Fund. It is hoped that the churches that have not taken part in this Layman's Day Service will find it possible to do so before next conference time. Individuals interested in helping this student aid fund and churches who lift an offering for it, are to send the funds to Mrs. Geo. Simpson, Oak Hill, West Virginia, Treasurer of the organization.

Other objectives of the movement are to unite the laymen for discussion and inspiration on church matters at the National Conference. If the district plan of organization of conferences, which J. A. Garber set forth at the last National Conference, is approved, surely the Layman's organization should follow with an organization in each of the districts. Current local church problems could have some light thrown on them through discussions at such meetings of the laymen. The other objective has been spoken of, namely, the promoting of a Layman's Day, one Sunday a year, in the local churches, with the laymen in full charge of the program.

There may be some question in your mind as to who can be members of this layman's movement. Since the Constitution has been changed, any member of the Brethren church can consider himself or herself a member as long as they are in accord with the objectives of the organization. Under the present arrangements the members come together for an hour each day of the National Conference week, for the transacting of business and discussion of church problems.

As I see it, great opportunities lie ahead of the Layman's movement, for the advancing of the interests of the Brethren church. Ministerial students can be helped through the Layman's Day offering and thus leaders in the church be assured in the future. The Layman's Day program can be broadened until it has a large place in the activities of the church. Problems of the church can be threshed out by the laymen in their sessions and thus the ministry need not feel that they stand alone in solving them. And to this end great opportunities lie ahead for the organizing of local and district Layman's organizations and the strengthening of the National Organization. Let us all work and pray that the Layman's movement may fulfill a real place in the advancement of our church. Massillon, Ohio.

Philippines Know American Red Cross

Col. Ernest P. Bicknell, in charge of the foreign and insular operations of the American Red Cross, in the course of a visit in the Philippines, stopped in one town which in its every aspect was distinctly Philippine, without a sign that the United States was anything but a name to its inhabitants.

The party hunted for an interpreter before interviewing the native mayor. Then to their surprise they found that the village was making plans to participate actively in the forthcoming Annual Roll Call of the American Red Cross, and far from being concerned with less important matters, when they were introduced to Col. Bicknell their principal anxiety seemed to be to impress him with the importance of getting their supplies out to them in time for the event.

Col. Bicknell was greatly impressed with this experience, he relates, to find in the far-off Philippines, in that isolated section of the most primitive character, that they not only knew of the Red Cross but were a part of it.

Many of the leaders in the island are staunch friends of the Red Cross. Owing to their great distance from Continental United States, the Philippines have their own Red Cross Chapter which bears somewhat more responsibility than the average Chapter nearer to National Headquarters.

This distant chapter, among its activities conducts disaster relief among the islands and maintains more than 60 Red Cross Public Health Nurses in the islands, carrying out in general the same program against disease, and in other ways assisting to promote health, as are the nurses serving in this branch of the Red Cross at home.

The work of the Philippine Chapter is representative of the Red Cross work in other insular and foreign fields. Among other insular fields of service of the Red Cross are the Virgin Islands and Porto Rico, while the whole world shares our foreign service. There is scarcely a spot anywhere that has not known at some time in the recent past the welcome symbol of the American Red Cross. In various parts of the American continent, in Bulgaria, the Far East, Greece, Persia, Turkey, all of them have felt the ministering service of American Red Cross extended to them in the name of our people.

In the United States, in the past year, the American Red Cross served its own people no less zealously because it lacked the glamour of the foreign field. In more than 55 disasters in this country the Red Cross worked effectively.

Other services of the organization were no less valuable if less spectacular, such as assistance to more than 8,000 disabled veterans and their families every month, training thousands of persons in water rescue and first aid in accident, disease prevention and many volunteer services. All these services need the support of the people, through membership in the Red Cross. Join during the Annual Roll Call—November 11th to 25th.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Functioning Church. By A. B. Cover

(Delivered at Mid-West District Conference in session at Carleton, Nebraska, October 12-14, 1926)

TEXT: "That he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Ephesians 5:27.

Paul in the passage which we purpose to use as our text sets forth characteristics of the church ideal. The attainment of the ideal state herein set forth must be secured by a functioning church. John very vividly paints for us the doom of the non-functioning church. "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would that thou wert cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." I fear that may apply to too many churches today.

Let us define ourselves as we attempt this vital discussion. The word Church comes from the Greek word;

"Ecclesia," meaning in its larger sense, a number of persons called together for any purpose, an assembly of any kind, civil or religious. From this word comes the word assembly. In the New Testament with but few instances it relates to religious assemblies; and the word here translated assembly is elsewhere translated "Church." There are several shades of meanings in its use, viz., the general usage has come to mean the Christian Church; it may also refer to a particular church as the church of Jerusalem, of Corinth or Antioch; also it is used in reference to the Gentile Christians! thus church applies to an assembly of Christians which meet anywhere—the Church Universal, or the whole body of Christian believers.

From this general meaning of the term "Church" let us add Paul's characteristics and we shall have a Church alive to her high calling in Christ Jesus. Paul has in mind the church which had attained an ideal. It was a "GLORIOUS" Church, "not having spot or wrinkle." It requires some ironing. It was a purchased church. "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." To attain this ideal the church must function. Its membership is composed of the "called out ones." They are to be separate; they are to be known from the world. The church is given a Divine task. May she accomplish it in God's way. It shall be my purpose to define the work of our denomination as related to this task.

As the Church is composed of the "called out," I shall first give attention to its membership. Is profession of faith in Jesus sufficient for salvation without church membership? Some profess to belong to the true spiritual church while not observing the means of grace with any. We have found one man who had severed his church relationship and posed as being a spiritual advisor in his community. He professed to love God, but when asked if he kept God's commandments, he was silent. He was unable to answer the question, because he was not keeping all of God's Word. It is said that when a London preacher proclaimed Christ he was jeered but hissed when he spoke of the church. There may be those who place the emphasis wrongly, making the means the end rather than a means to the end. But let us remember that the Church is of God "Upon this rock (Christian Faith) I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Matthew 16:18. When the first persecution of the church took place, Gamaliel said, "If this work—is of God ye shall not be able to overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God." History has proven the truthfulness of these words. Voltaire, the infidel said, "It took twelve men to found Christianity, but I will show you that one man can tear it down." How foolish was he and others who defied the power of God.

The Church is being prepared as a Bride for Christ. "Husbands love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it shall be holy and without blemish. Even so ought husbands also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his own wife loveth himself: for no man ever hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as Christ also the church; because we are members of his body. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and the two shall become one flesh. This mystery is great: but I speak in regard of Christ and of the church. Nevertheless do ye severally love each one his own wife even as himself; and let the wife see that she fear her husband." That fidelity, that faith, that love Christ demands of church members.

The Church shall be united with Christ in his Coming Kingdom. In Revelation nineteenth chapter and verses six to nine, we are given a glimpse of the Glorified Church in Triumph with her Glorified Lord, ever singing his praises and feasting at the marriage-supper of the Lamb. "Blessed are they that are bidden to the marriage supper of the Lamb." But the gospel writer urges the necessity of providing the wedding robe. The functioning church member is preparing that robe now here in this probationary life. I think of the indifferent, rebellious, godless, blind and naked ones who think of any and everything else when the wedding invitation is being heralded from pulpit, press and earnest souls, who will then try to pass the gates into the courts of eternal joy; to them will ring forever the words of doom, "depart, I never knew you." In the Book of Acts we meet the expression, "Added unto the Lord," which means added to the church. When we accept Christ, we accept the church for he is the "head over all things to the church, which is the body." (Eph. 1:22). Therefore, "in one spirit were we baptized into one body (1 Cor. 12:1); and again we read that, "as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." It seems that water baptism and church membership are essential to salvation. "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." We dare not trifle with the Word. It defines for us the significance of church membership.

What are the benefits of church membership? Are there any? Is the non-professor enjoying benefits that are on a par with that of the church? Let us be honest and serious and answer the question. It is true that the unregenerate reap the fruit of Christianity in a general sense. The church has made possible the State and all citizens enjoy the fruits thereof. God sends rain upon just and unjust alike, etc. But does the church provide special benefits for its members? God's laws are all for man's good. To obey is to live and be blessed; to disobey them is to perish. That must be conceded. But what are the benefits of church membership? Brother Yoder in his book, "God's Means of Grace," sums them up: The church provides spiritual food. In that beautiful allegory of the Good Shepherd, the sheep got out and in and find PASTURE. Where else may this PASTURE be secured? Folks go wild trying to find it elsewhere but they finally cry out in despair for the "water of life." In the service of the King, fruit is realized, "he that receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal." The fruit promised is love, joy, peace, etc. And this food of faith overcometh the world. The church affords protection from the fierce assailment of the arch enemy— "He layeth down his life for the sheep." That life, protects the redeemed one. The church offers spiritual fellowship. This is a rare privilege that is not found in any other institution. There may be fellowship of kindred minds and purposes but not SPIRITUAL fellowship. Here at the Lord's table we may sit down in heavenly places. The "called out" ones are to be without spot or blemish. Then the Church provides spiritual exercise. "Exercise thyself unto Godliness," wrote Paul to Timothy. Without exercise life weakens and eventually dies out. But church membership affords the opportunity of investment of the one and every talent. The Church beckons with a mighty challenge. The church gives spiritual guidance. Through this dark and dreary waste, we long for the ray of light that leads to the Father's house; the church has within her keeping the oracles of God. It is easy to rail at the church—any fool can do that—as Brother Yoder states, but it is not so easy to provide a substitute. Ingersoll and Henry Ward Beecher once attended a social gathering; when the latter in reply to the attempt of the former to argue said, "Mr. Ingersoll, I saw a horrible thing the other day. I was going down the street when I met a poor, decrepit man hobbling along with a crutch under each arm, a big, burly fellow came rushing along and knocked the crutches from under him and left him lying helpless, without so much as looking back." Mr. Ingersoll said, "The Brute! The Brute!" But Mr. Beecher said, "Thou art the man; Here is poor, weak humanity, struggling along as best it can with the crutch of the Bible under one arm and the Church under the other, and you strong son of a minister, would take them both away and give nothing upon which to lean in return."

(To be concluded next week)

"The tumult and the shouting dies;
The Captains and the Kings depart:
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget."

—Kipling's Recessional.

The world is apt to spot and blemish the soul, and it is hard to live in it, and have to do with it, and not be defiled; but this must be our constant endeavor. Herein consists pure and undefiled religion. John comprises all that is in the world, which we are not to love, under three heads: the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life; and to keep ourselves unspotted from all these is to keep ourselves unspotted from the world.—Matthew Henry.

Our Devotional

OUR SCRIPTURE

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another (John 13:34, 35).

OUR MEDITATION

Jesus again emphasizes, in these verses, the paramount importance of love. This is by no means his first exhortation to his disciples to love. Indeed he had commanded them to love their neighbors as themselves, love their enemies and now he says a new commandment is to love one another.

What matchless beauty we see in Jesus' own life because he practiced this virtue of love. It gives Christians an outstanding distinction that they should be proud to bear. This love put into practical use accomplishes untold good. Great philanthropic enterprises result from worthy ambitions and desires actuated by love for fellow men. Certainly we can see that "All men shall know by this that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another."

What would inspire man to go out and extend a friendly hand to his less fortunate brother if it were not love? Surely love is the source of all the kindness manifested in life.

Too often, perhaps, in our fervent desire for good and hatred of evil, we love the good man and hate his sinful brother. Here too, we must love ceaselessly. Hatred of sin is not only justifiable, but it is righteous, however, the sinner should be the recipient of our unfailing love rather than hatred. Jesus says, "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you."

It is very easy and natural to love our friends, but the real test of a Christian is to love our enemies and pray for those who despitefully use us.

Paul attaches a wonderful significance to this virtue for he says, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a clanging symbol."

Is it possible for man to be a Christian and not have love in his heart? No, it is not! He must love his friends; he must love his enemies; he must love his Christian brethren; but greatest of all he must love Jesus Christ his Savior.

Jesus loves every one from the smallest, innocent child to the righteous saints in his church, together with the hardened sinner who has turned his back on Jesus.

Finally we read that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." Certainly this is the ideal love.

Famous artists are recognized by their grandeur and beauty of paintings, celebrated poets are distinguished by their colorful phrases, graceful style and picturesque imagery and thus every expert in his field has his characterizing excellencies. But, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Could anything be more wonderful?

OUR PRAYER

Our Heavenly Father: We thank thee for thy Son, Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent into the world because of thy love for us. Help us to daily love one another and so be marked as his Disciples. Amen.

The Fall of Jericho

Scripture Lesson—Joshua 6:12-20.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 66:1-9.

Golden Text—This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. 1 John 1:5.

LESSON LIGHTS

Preparatory Events

"Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest" were the last words to Joshua in our lesson two weeks ago. Joshua at once assumed command of the great host. He directed his officers to go through the camp and announce to the people that in three days they should cross the Jordan, and food must be prepared for the march. He reminded the tribes of Reuben and Dan and the half tribe of Manasseh, who had been allotted the land east of the Jordan, that they had promised Moses they would go with the rest and aid in the conquest, and they promised obedience to all his commands.

Joshua sent spies over to Jericho to ascertain the strength of the city, for it was the first stronghold they would have to attack after crossing the river. The spies aroused the suspicion of the authorities of Jericho, but they were saved from death by Rahab, who hid them under the flax spread out to dry on the roof of her house. From Rahab they learned that the city was in terror of the Israelites. When night came the city gates were closed, but Rahab let them down from the city wall on which her house was built. They returned to Joshua with the report that "all the inhabitants of the land do melt away before us." The grasshoppers in their own sight were now the people of the land, not the spies.

It was spring, and the melting snows of the mountains had caused the Jordan river to overflow its banks, but the mighty host under the command of Joshua was able to cross over on dry land to the other side. Encampment was made at Gilgal, and memorial stones were erected to signalize the event. The rite of circumcision was performed, the passover feast was eaten for the first time since leaving Egypt, and Joshua was encouraged by a vision of a man with a drawn sword, "the prince of Jehovah's host" (Tarbell's).

The Siege

Joshua was a great leader because he knew how to obey. He followed the divinely given instructions for capturing the city and succeeded. It is always wise to obey God though we may not understand the reason for every detail. At this point Alice D. Adams comments, "Each time the people marched around Jericho they gained fresh confidence, seeing that the forces of the city did not dare to attack them. Each time they became familiar with their vast numbers, and gained a firmer sense of discipline. They were unconsciously preparing themselves to take advantage of the miracle when it came. The people of Jericho doubtless became accustomed to this march. Impressive at first, it was soon turned to ridicule. 'They don't dare to attack us!' they exclaimed frequently. 'Let's rush out at them! They would run away like frightened sheep. They are nothing but a set of boastful weaklings with their empty parades." The party that spoke thus must have grown more numerous every day.

Probably by the end of the seventh day the people themselves were growing weary of the march. They did not understand it. It all must have appeared pointless, resultless, and foolish. "Lead us against the city!" they doubtless implored Joshua. "You are making us ridiculous by these absurd circlings of the city. You are wearing us all out in advance. We'll soon be too tired to fight." In reality, had they but known, that is exactly what was intended. The victory must be put far beyond the host of the Israelites, and must be plainly God's victory and not man's, that they might learn to

The Loaf

*Ah! fain I would my life
God's loaf might be
Some starving wight or far-spent wife
To succor in extremity.*

*God's loaf to nourish true
Blood, brain, and limb,
A budding boy with dreams to sue
And build a royal man of him.*

*God's loaf for his own hands
To break content
If one soul eats and understands
And lauds him in the sacrament.*

*Good Maker of the loaves,
I thus aspire.
Teach me to bear as me behooves trust in God alone. They could not have performed the task seven times on the other days, day after day. The country was rough—they did not march on a macadamized boulevard. If Jericho was only a half mile across, it would be a mile and a half around it, and a sevenfold circuit would mean a march of ten and a half miles.
The flail, the millstone, and the fire.*

Jericho

"There were three different Jerichos, on three different sites—the Jericho of Joshua's time, the Jericho of Herod's time, and the comparatively modern Jericho of the Crusaders. The first was heathen, the second Jewish, and the third Christian. The village was formerly one of the most squalid in Palestine, but it has been somewhat improved." The explorers of these various villages has found a most interesting fact. Early explorers found walls made of mud bricks, and supposed that there were the walls of that Jericho whose walls fell down at the shouting of the people of God. But a later explorer found another Jericho, an egg-shaped plateau, 300 meters by 160, completely surrounded by a strong, well-built wall of stone and brick, now of course in ruins; and within this wall an equally strong citadel, with towers at the corners, within which were found extremely well-preserved streets of houses dating from early Canaanite times. The city was not weak, but strong. The capture was not easy, but made easy by the power of Jehovah.

Why the Walls Fell

"Why?" That is what the curious public is always asking when the people of God with unwavering faith and implicit obedience connect themselves up with Almighty Power. "Why did it happen that way? What is the cause of it all?" "Of course," says the Illustrated Quarterly, "the shouting and the blare of the trumpets had no power to overthrow the broad walls of the city; but it connected the people with the miracle in outward form to show that only as they were really connected with it by faith would the work be done for them. There may very likely have been some secondary means, like the wind of God used to make the Red Sea passable for the Exodus. These 'providential miracles' do not shut out the direct personal agency of God in doing the work or in timing it, but connect the God of nature with the God of Providence; and bring God's personal agency into closer contact with our daily experience.

"Some scientists think that the 'mediate' cause of the fall of the wall was some subterranean earthquake which shook down the walls of the part of the city where the men were standing, or undermined them so that they sank. This is easily possible in that region of earthquakes."

It was by faith that the walls of Jericho fell down (Heb. 11:30). The Israelites showed their faith by their obedience. "Do not forget that these men were the descendants of the greatest grumblers who ever lived. How much mischief would have been wrought had each man felt free to express his opinion of the strategy Joshua employed! One would have said that nothing more childish had been attempted in the history of the world; the way to reduce Jericho was by sapping and mining. Another would have suggested the planting of huge catapults on the neighboring hills, in order to batter down the gates. Another would have expressed it as his opinion that their only hope of victory lay in a protracted siege and a slow process of starvation." (Rev. James Hastings, D. D.)

An Application

Let it be known by the church's militant hosts that all Jericho walls are potentially down before those who are without question or quibble conscientiously obeying God.

"MORE BLESSED TO GIVE"

An unusual circumstance which demonstrates the truth of Christ's teaching, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," occurred in a Southern Presbyterian church. A certain negro woman of eighty years, a member of the church, had struggled all her life with poverty and yet been unusually generous in her offerings to the church. As she grew older, the struggle to make both ends meet increased. The session, therefore, decided to exempt her from all further financial obligations to the church and the minister went to tell her of their decision. She listened and then with tears streaming down her face she said, "Please don't take from me the greatest pleasure of my life." —Selected.

Christian Endeavor Fellowship

By E. M. Riddle Associate President, Brethren National C. E. Union

(Address at Christian Endeavor Session of the late General Conference, Winona Lake Indiana.)

After forty-five years of Christian Endeavor in our country and various parts of the world until now when it has reached every country, it would not seem necessary for me to define Christian Endeavor. However, for sake of clarity I shall refer to the word fellowship. As for our usage the word means a fellow-association, or companionship with persons in an association or company. Endeavorers have been united in a wonderful Christian fellowship for many years. Within the limit of this discussion, I want to emphasize two aspects of fellowship—denominational and interdenominational.

Various companies, lodges, corporations and clubs have their kinds of fellowship. Religious organizations have their fellowship. Christian Endeavor has its distinctive and vastly different form of fellowship. I believe it to be different, because it was originally born to serve young people, even though it has grown to serve all ages. Again, cannot it be truly said that Christian Endeavor has something not only to give but to impart? Notice the Apostle Paul in Romans 1, where his most noble wish is expressed to the Christians at Rome—"For I long to see you that I may impart some spiritual gift, to the end that ye may be established."

I believe Christian Endeavor fellowship, denominationally and interdenominationally to be a power, a binding tie which is not given but imparted by earnest Endeavorers. It is shared with others and all that it can achieve or become, should be shared. We are saved to share. Our salvation is perfected by sharing. We may give what we have but we share what we are. Lowell in his Sir Launfal says "Not what we give but what we share. For the gift without the giver is bare." Such an organization is a channel through which the impartation of ourself flows.

Denominationally, Christian Endeavor needs to feel obligation, and obligation to share information and inspiration to each other. Thus a spirit of fellowship will be generated. Paul, in the verse from Romans which I quoted above, was in the grip of the power of God. The same grip will place obligation upon us and if so this hour will mean more and so will the remainder of this conference. The aim of Paul's impartation of some spiritual gift, was that they might be established. That is a worthy aim, creating and maintaining a denominational fellowship, which will help all to become fully established in his way.

Young people in High School have a school spirit. It is shared to you as you enter into the activities of the school. You of Ashland have a college spirit, which you are proud of. We in Christian Endeavor have a spirit, a spiritual desire for association and fellowship of the highest type, which we hope will impart and receive some gift. Allow me to point out young people of our church, three things as I view it, which will promote fellowship among us. First, attendance at these conferences; secondly, our task, not a large one, that of supporting a teacher in Kentucky, and thirdly, the Endeavor page in the Evangelist. Just here we plan for our work for the coming year and we ought to catch a new vision by sharing our experiences and accomplishments. Your presence on these grounds ought to quicken our forces. If you have heard anywhere that C. E. fellowship is not what it once was—a challenge has at once confronted you. If you came here to be entertained or to be seen, you will question the worth-whileness of another such session, but if to impart fellowship, you will go out with a challenge.

Interdenominationally—Kipling has said, "East is east and west is west but never the twain shall meet," but it is not true in every sense, for every two years Endeavorers assemble from east to west, north to south, who labor elbow to elbow and walk arm in arm (many of them) to enjoy Christian Endeavor fellowship and plan for the interests of the kingdom. I have attended state conventions when from one thousand

Shirking or Doing Our Best Matt 25:14-30

Once upon a time there lived three little children and their father and mother. They lived a long way out in the country and their house was on the nicest hill with the prettiest little stream down at the foot of the hill where the children loved to play. The oldest one of these children was named Robert, and he was ten years old. The other two children were quite small. Julia was four and Emily was almost three.

Every day, during the long summer vacation, the two little girls would beg Robert to take them out to play. Sometimes they would have the loveliest time playing. Robert was old enough to seem very big to the wee little girls and he could make them quite happy. Sometimes, he would take them to the little stream and let them wade where it was very shallow. At other times he helped them make wells in the sand or build little houses with sand and rocks. But on other days, Robert would want to go and play out in the fields where the big men were working. It was too dangerous to take the small children out where the big animals were feeding or working and so Robert would either have to give up doing the thing he wanted to do or disappoint the little girls by not taking them. Robert really loved his little sisters, but sometimes it was very hard for him to give up the things he wanted to do just to play with them.

One day, Robert was out in the field with his daddy. He was having a great time, riding on one of the horses which his daddy was driving back and forth across the field as he worked. As he rode, Robert began to think, "It must be nearly time for me to go to play with Julia and Emily. I wish I did not have to go." So, the time slipped along and Robert kept thinking at the end of each row, "I'll take one more ride."

Finally daddy said, "You can ride the horse up to the barn now, Robert. It is time for us to go in."

Robert felt a little guilty when his daddy said that for he knew that the time for playing with the little girls was all gone and he had not been with them at all. He hurried to the house as soon as he could after reaching the barn. He felt like he ought to try to be nice to the little girls as soon as he could to make up for disappointing them.

When he reached the house his mother said, "Why, Robert, where are Julia and Emily? I thought you had them with you playing. I left them in the yard because they never have been able to open the gate. When I came back the gate was open and they were gone, so I supposed you had taken them to play."

Robert looked so scared that his mother knew that he had not been with them. She called to her husband that the babies were lost, and everyone started to hunt. Robert ran the fastest. He went first to the place where they usually played at the brook, but he could not see anything of the little sisters. Then he started on out across the hill. A lump rose in his throat as he ran and he was soon almost crying. All the time he was thinking, "Oh, if I had been trying to be kind and helpful instead of shirking."

He hated that word, shirker, for he had heard people talk very unkindly about people who had shirked instead of helping their country when it needed them. So it was that the word shirker came to his mind, and he felt more and more that that was just the name that applied to him.

As he ran on and on he kept looking about over the hills and in the hollows. He kept weaving a path back and forth from the creek up the hills, for he knew that the small children could not have gone far. Finally, he saw a spot of white under a tree at the top of a high hill. There he found the little girls, asleep. They had walked so far that they got tired and went to sleep. He picked up little Emily and hurried to his mother, with Julia walking as fast as her short legs would carry her.

As he reached his mother, Robert began to cry, for he had worried and hurried till he was all worn out. As soon as he could get enough breath he said, "Mother, I shall try to never be a shirker again. I want you to be able to count on me to be your helper and to adways do my best."

Robert realized that shirking never pays.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

REPORT OF THE CHURCHES AT ALEPPO, SUGAR GROVE AND QUIET DELL

The spirit of Jesus Christ is a leavening influence at work in his new community today endeavoring to permeate the heart of the world. This is the ultimate object of the Master's plan that men's hearts should be educated through the personal influence of his power and love so that the vices of human nature might be cured. It should be our highest ambition and it is man's greatest joy that he has some part in aiding the outgo over the world and the ingoing into human hearts of this marvelous quickening and awakening leaven which excites in men an enthusiasm and devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ thus placing them under an immense but joyous obligation. Such is the duty of the minister of Jesus Christ. In a certain small but significant and meaningful manner has the writer, who acted as pastor for the above churches in these rural communities, and those members in the community, and also those coming from other communities have contributed toward such worthy ends, endeavored to act. We find that our labors and fellowship together has been mutually helpful and centrally contributing to the upbuilding in each heart of a deeper and more abiding faith or confidence in Jesus Christ.

Now in the face of this aim and purpose we find that several factors have been working to make this possible. Here among these rugged but always interesting hills which possess possibilities of revelation of the Eternal for both their friends and strangers, nestle these three temples, dedicated to the Living God. The forests here are God's temples, and even these lofty hills testify to his majesty. It seems impossible that man should live among them and not see at least a spark of the eternal existence there. Yes, the atmosphere is conducive for such a type of meditation, but other more specific factors were witnessing unto the power the Master really possesses when he is once granted admittance. The Sunday school which is the only factor existing there the year around was nobly making its contribution, but in no perfect manner whatever. Show me one that is making such perfect progress. At Sugar Grove we have a young man acting as superintendent of the Sunday school. We the people of the community are proud of him, because of his loyalty and devotion to the ideals and institutions of Jesus Christ. May his purpose in life and its meaning be so deepened that he shall advance to far greater attainments in the Kingdom's work. All three have contributed and are at present contributing to the mission work of the Brethren church, and their splendid contribution during the summer to Dr. Bell for Ashland College endowment revealed their desire to see the advancement and establishment of that which is everlasting. So we say that through the efforts of the Sunday school are they commendably managing to keep alive that leavening spark. During the summer months home talent plays were staged by the young people of the community and the receipts therefrom were used for the benefit of the church. As a result of such the Aleppo church is being redecorated without and remodeled within. We rejoice that they desire and are thus determined to possess a more beautiful place where they can assemble for the purpose of meeting their God. The Wednesday evening prayer meeting was a factor considered invaluable for those who were in attendance. The last factor, but by no means the least was the community revival meeting held at the Aleppo church by Rev. W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the Berlin, Pennsylvania, congregation, the revival beginning on the 20th of July and continuing for ten days thereafter. We are highly indebted to Brother Benshoff for his kind consideration inasmuch as he gave to us his vacation in order to make possible our revival. The meeting began in and continued through the midst of that almost unbearable hot weather, but Brother Benshoff like a good soldier of the cross of Jesus Christ gave his every ounce of energy to the cause at hand. The attendance at first was rather small due to the unfavorable weather, but as the meeting continued interest and attendance increased. No visible results were evidenced, but we are nevertheless confident that all the time the leaven was quietly and unconsciously working, accomplishing its purpose in the hearts and minds of these dear people. On Monday evening following the revival quite a number of the Brethren from these communities gathered around the Lord's table to commemorate their Lord's death. "This do in remembrance of me," he was saying to them, and they obeyed. "Happy are ye if ye do them." Yes, the remnant present that evening departed to their homes with glad and happy hearts, because of the fellowship around the Lord's table, and because of their conscientious observance of that which they felt to be commanded by their Master. Brother Benshoff and his son Eugene, who came along on his vacation, departed from the community, leaving behind in the hearts of the people strong and deep ties of affection. Thus have they left a living monument to their memory in the hearts of friends. May the leaven continue to spread its influence and power through these various factors is our prayer.

The writer cannot help but express his personal indebtedness to the people among whom it has been his opportunity and privilege to labor, and as to the amount of his contribution in spreading the leaven of the Master the people shall say and above all the Lord shall judge. From association with characters which possess a sincerity and genuineness unexcelled I have realized a deepening of faith in the Master and his cause. And so it goes that the leaven is continuing to excite in men an enthusiasm and devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ and thus causing them to say with St. Paul, "I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified."

INDIANA CONFERENCE

The 39th Indiana District Conference of Brethren Churches was real, and those present realized its value in fellowship and constructive proposals made.

The concluding report of the membership committee was lay, 133, ministerial 27, making a total of 160 delegates. At the noon meal of the first full day about 300 were served. The attendance and interest held up fine at all sessions.

The devotional services, sermons and Bible lectures were up to par and a good spirit of fellowship and conference was maintained throughout all sessions.

The Ministerium and W. M. S. spent two periods of one and one-half hours each to great profit. Both periods of the Ministerium gave place to discussions of the subjects presented. This feature is much appreciated in Indiana. At an extra session of the Ministerium it was agreed to have our Spring meeting at Shipshewana Lake.

Among the principal actions of the Conference was a pledge of the support to the Board of Evangelists in the accomplishing of their tasks. Another was the election of a Young Peoples' Field Secretary whose duty it shall be to urge and stimulate the work with the young people of our churches. The District Board of Trustees was given full charge of Shipshewana Lake, with such suggestions and limitations as Conference may from time to time exact. The District Mission Board designated the first Sunday in June as District Mission Day, when an offering should be received for the work of the Board.

The following Conference officers were elected: Moderator, Rev. H. F. Stuckman; Vice Moderator, Rev. F. G. Coleman; Secretary-Treasurer, N. V. Leatherman.

It was determined the 1927 Conference should go to the Loree church.

Others have been instructed by Conference to write their impressions of this Conference and send them to the Evangelist for publication. You will learn more from them.

N. V. LEATHERMAN, Secretary.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

Being one of the number who were asked at State Conference to write a short article for The Evangelist about the doings at the late State Conference, I suppose we were expected to say all nice things about the doings there. Well, I am glad the spirit that prevailed was such that one need not stretch the truth or disturb one's conscience to say nice things about the conference. The spirit sure was fine, just the kind that should always be at any religious gathering. So far as we were able to see and know, all enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent. There were some business matters viewed differently (as most always) and by times almost made one breathless fearing the good spirit might be marred, but all meant it for good, and when each one understood the other all passed off nicely, and many remarked that it was the best conference yet. We had the pleasure of attending the second state conference of the Indiana district held at Elkhart, Indiana, when Brother W. C. Perry was Moderator and Brother L. W. Ditch, secretary. We have blessed memories of some of the early work of the church, having had the privilege of attending most of the conferences since that time and it seems Brethren understand each other better now, and this we have a right to expect. Each one should have the perfect right to express their views, if done in a Christian spirit, without marring another's feelings. This can be so if it be that we have the spirit of Christ. At the Ministerial sessions some very plain statements were made, but as to the truth perhaps we did not agree, but there was no arguing, and it might be well for all of us who heard them to ponder well the matter. I once heard a Christian say if we were permitted to take but one look into eternity, we would be more serious about the things we do and leave undone. We are all inclined to place too light emphasis on what the Word says, about some liberties we cherish, though forbidden. If they under the Law paid the penalty for one disobedience, how about us under grace? God have mercy on us for wanting to be so much like the world, and not satisfied to be a separate, chosen people, like him who died that we might live.

Getting back to some of the doings of the Conference, Shipshewana retreat received considerable attention. And why not, since it is a creature of the conference. And so long as it is used for the upbuilding and advancement of the Kingdom, well and good. We hope ere long the conference may convene on her own "Retreat." We pray and earnestly hope nothing will ever be done or tolerated that might displease our heavenly Father. If Shipshewana Retreat belongs to the Indiana Conference, would it not be possible and right for her to lay down a few Gospel rules and regulations as to what should and what should not be permitted on the grounds, especially on the Lord's Day? This might help some to decide, that now are undecided and are waiting to see the outcome, or as was expressed at conference, might help some one to a change of heart.

Brethren, if we prepare a place for worldly sport, and tolerate some things that are permitted at some resorts, then we fear God's disapproval. I would favor anything that merits God's approval—the Bible our guide.

M. E. HORNER.

MY IMPRESSIONS OF CONFERENCE

The annual session of the Indiana District Conference is now history. This conference was one to be long remembered. It was wonderful because of the spirit of fellowship and unity which prevailed throughout the whole conference.

The first session on Tuesday evening was marked by a sermon delivered by Dr. G. W. Rench in his characteristic way, which needs no explanation to Evangelist readers or members of the Brethren Fraternity at large.

Wednesday was given over to much business and several addresses which put the right ring in the day's work. Then to bring the day to a fitting close, Prof. J. R. Schutz delivered one of his masterful sermons on "Peace that Passeth all Understanding."

Thursday dawned on all of us, with the sun sending its beautiful rays down to mother earth to clear away the gloom of the previous day caused by rain and chilly atmosphere, and we could not help but think and feel that the Son of Righteousness was sending his rays of blessing and comfort on us.

The ministers held a splendid session in the morning, the whole hour was given over to addresses given by the following men:—Brother George Jones speaking on the theme, "How Should a Pastor Improve his Time?" Brother G. L. Maus took as his theme, "Pastors Exchanging Pastorates." Brother C. C. Grisso speaking on the theme, "How Should a Pastor Conduct Himself." These talks were right to the point and created a more friendly feeling among the ministers.

The afternoon was given over to Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. Brother Jones spoke on "Sunday School and the Young People." The writer took as his theme, "Sunday School Administration," and Brother Fry took as his theme, "Christian Endeavor and the Young People."

The Conference was brought to a fitting close on Thursday evening when Brother H. F. Stuckman gave us a wonderful message on Evangelism. The Evangelist readers will have an opportunity to read this message as it will be sent to Ashland for publication.

We could not close without expressing our hearty thanks to the Warsaw people and to Brother and Sister Grisso for their hospitality.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

New Jersey Churches

We have only two churches in this state. A few Brethren living near Hampton are conducting a Sunday school and having preaching services in a Baptist church, which they rent, but are not organized into a church yet.

Sergeantsville

This is a small town, located about twenty miles from Trenton. We have here a neat frame building, also a good parsonage which is occupied by the pastor, Brother Steffler and his wife, who serves this church and at Calvary, which is about ten miles distant.

The church at Sergeantsville has a small membership, but is doing a splendid work in the community. This is the home of Brother Robert Porte, the pastor at Louisville, Ohio. church. The total gift was $311.61.

Calvary

The Calvary church is located in the country where we have a small group of people. The church has been remodeled and is in a very good condition. The people have quite a responsibility in keeping up their own local work, as there are only a few of them. Brother Steffler preaches here every Sunday. The amount raised was $120.00.

Hampton

This is a fair sized town and gives promise of being a good field for our church. A few of the members located here and near the town have rented a Baptist church which was not being used. The church is well located and in fairly good condition. They have organized a Sunday school and Brother Adams of Philadelphia is preaching for them every Sunday. Some outside people are becoming interested and with a proper effort I believe we could build up a permanent work, but as yet they have no church organization. I received $151.15 for the college. A total for the New Jersey churches of $582.76.

Brother Steffler the pastor gave me a full week of his time and every help. He is doing good work, having served these people for the past five years and is held in high esteem.

W. S. BELL.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH Johnstown, Pennsylvania RALLY!

Immediately upon returning from National Conference, we began rallying the church for the fall. This is no small task in the city. We have yet to discover any plan that will successfully evade the "summer slump." September was set aside as "Rallying Month." A meeting of all the officials of all the auxiliaries of the church and the church officials was held for conference. The last Sunday in September was set aside as Rally Day in the Bible school and church. It went over big. Over 500 in Sunday school and over $500 for District Missions in the offering. This church gave almost $1,000 for District Missions this year. Melvin Stuckey was the preacher of this Rally Day, delivering three sermons, morning, afternoon, and evening. His messages were strong, fundamental, and most interesting. After this day, we felt that all were ready to plunge into the work of the church.

COMMUNION

The next goal set was Communion, on October 17. Everything was made to point in this direction. It was preceded by a week of "Doctrinal Preparation." Brother Dyoll Belote preached on Baptism. We, as pastor, preached on Feetwashing. Brother J. L. Gingrich preached on The Lord's Supper. Brother W. C. Benshoff preached on The Eucharist. Then, on Sunday morning, we gave the final preparatory message on "Looking in Three Directions, Backward, Inward, Forward." Now, these services were held so that no instruction would be needed at Communion. Instead of anyone talking during Feetwashing, the old hymns were played softly on the pipe organ. It was the best communion service we ever enjoyed. For the first time in the history of the church, we went beyond the 400 mark in attendance, 410 communing. Yet, with our conveniences we were finished within two hours. It was a blessed service in every way.

THE BIBLE

We are seeking in every way to exalt the Bible and inspire study of it. In accordance with this, we have organized a "Week Day Bible School", which meets on every Monday night for one hour. Three classes are being conducted. Intermediates, Young People and Adults. We are fortunate in securing Brother J. L. Gingrich to teach the Intermediates and Brother Dyoll Belote to teach the Young People. We teach the Adults. The Course of Study is, "The Fifty-eight Distinct Events and Teachings of the Gospel of Luke." The text book is the Bible. There is no charge of tuition. Already 130 have enrolled in the school. The school has just been organized and many more are enrolling this week. In addition to these Monday night classes, we begin this week to conduct a class for children from eight to twelve years of age. This class will meet each Saturday afternoon.

MISSIONS

Three mission study classes are being organized. The Sisterhood have sent a shipment of presents to Hattie Cope in Africa. The Volunteer Band is preparing a Christmas box for Africa now. On October 10, Brother Clarence Sickie gave his stereopticon lecture on South America to a large audience. It was much appreciated and a liberal offering given. Thus missions are receiving attention.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

A Junior Society has just been organized with an excellent initial enrollment. The Intermediates have increased their membership this fall by one-third. The Young People have increased their attendance from twenty-five to seventy-five. Their society is a beehive of activity these days.

MESSIAH

Our Volunteer Choir, augmented by other volunteer singers, are preparing the "Messiah." This Oratorio by Handel is counted one of the best. There will be 150 singers in the chorus. This promises to be the biggest musical event of the season here in Johnstown, a city of church music and musicians. REV. CHARLES H. ASHMAN, 532 Napoleon Street.

ILLIOKOTA DISTRICT OFFICERS FOR 1926 AND 1927

Moderator, Chas. W. Mayes, Lanark, Illinois; Vice-Moderator, W. E. Kemp, Des Moines, Iowa; Secretary-Treasurer-Statistician, Geo. E. RESOLUTIONS

(1) We, the delegates of the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, in conference assembled, thank God for his care and blessings during another conference year, and for permitting us to assemble again in annual conference under pleasant circumstances to transact the work of the Lord.

(2) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That this Conference reaffirms its allegiance to the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible.

(3) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That we indorse the program presented by the National Conference.

(4) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That this Conference recommends the consecration of wealth, time and energy of each member to God's service to the end that each member may look upon his daily activities as a part of God's service.

(5) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That the endowment campaign of Ashland College is hereby indorsed, and Brother W. S. Bell commended for his zealous work in connection with the campaign.

(6) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That we recommend closer cooperation with State and County Sunday School Associations.

(7) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota

District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That we indorse the program to extend the Brotherhood of our church, as recommended by our worthy Moderator.

(8) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That this Conference recommends an active endeavor to greater reverence for God in the church, and an active endeavor to secure religious expression from the young people.

(9) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That this Conference recommends open opposition to Sunday moving picture shows, baseball games, and other like public Sunday entertainments.

(10) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That this Conference hereby extends greetings and best wishes to the Mid-West Conference, and requests Brother Gearhart and Sister A. B. Cover to convey these greetings for us.

(11) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That this Conference hereby expresses its appreciation to the Ladies of the M. E. church, for serving meals at the First Brethren church during the Conference.

(12) BE IT RESOLVED by the Illiokota District of the Brethren church, assembled at Des Moines, Iowa: That we thank the First Brethren church of Des Moines for their fine spirit of hospitality.

CALLED

*Dead? Did you say,
That was thoughtless—
His warm hands may
Have grown cold, his lips speechless,
His eyelids have been touched with sleep
That a little rest may fit him
For a clearer vision of another day.*

*Dead? No! he departed
When life was at its flood,
With eager winds kissing hard
The sails, before the ebbe set in Brave and true,
He sailed out of our sight
Like the shadows before the night.*

*His passing was not at sundown
Amid the sinking shadows of the day
Fast falling on the ground,
But at high noon
In the glory and power and might.
God whispered to him so soon,
"Come, begin thy sudden flight
Before the light of the moon
Silvers all the land."
—George M. Geisel, in The Living Church.*

APPLYING THE ETHICS OF CHRIST

The Christian sentiment of America only a few years ago permitted some men to defend the liquor traffic by quotations from Scripture—surely the last resort of an evil cause. The Christian sentiment of America in this year of our Lord, 1926, is determined that the liquor traffic is a criminal outlaw and must remain such. A century ago the Christian employer of labor satisfied himself by an attitude of generous condescension and paternal care of his employees. But the Christian employer today is prompted by the ideals of Jesus to re-examine his attitude toward his employees and to substitute justice, fair play, and the spirit of brotherly cooperation for paternal generosity. The Christian conscience of the Middle Ages permitted kings and emperors to invent causes for war. For no better cause than to avenge a slight insult or satisfy some personal spite, armies of artisans and farmers who had no quarrel with each other were compelled to blow the souls out of one another. Today the Christian conscience of the world is prompting us with renewed and determined vigor to exhaust every means of eliminating war and to devise other and more reasonable methods of settling disputes.

All this indicates how certainly the inner light of a growing Christian conscience is forever reinterpreting and applying the principles of our Lord's teachings as we find them embodied in the gospels.

He is still the authoritative Master whose principles are eternal and whose indwelling presence illuminates and guides us in our constantly renewed efforts to apply these principles to changing conditions.—From "Christ Today," by Dr. Lucius H. Bugbee. The Abingdon Press.

THE FATAL TONGUE

It would be easy to wax facetious over the statement of Dr. Herman N. Bundeson, health commissioner of Chicago, that divorce and even criticism of one's mate are great life shorteners and that men and women who stay married and are not critical of one another live practically twice as long after marriage as those who divorce their mates. But, on reflection, the matter does not seem particularly funny.

"Even criticism" are the specially thought-provoking words in the commissioner's statement. The idea that nagging actually shortens the lives of both nagger and nagged gives one pause. That discontent, petulance and nervous irritation should set up an internal physical friction which would be subtly deteriorating to the body cells is entirely credible to those who realize the effect of mind on body, and so is the assumption that good nature, tolerance and placidity, not to mention self control, are conducive to longevity.

There can be little doubt that the number of divorces would be materially reduced and the amount of domestic felicity appreciably increased if these facts were taken to heart. We have long been told that we dig our graves with our teeth. To a certain extent this is practically unavoidable. But it is well within the power of all of us to avoid digging our graves with our tongues.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"He that lives in the shade does not see his own shadow; he that walks in sunshine does, and yet he is in fuller, clearer light."

to five thousand gathered, representing more than a score of denominations, also a world's convention where practically every evangelical denomination was represented and also many nations gathered to share in Christian Endeavor fellowship, and have felt the fellowship of such gatherings. Just recently in London in the World's seventh Christian Endeavor convention, Dr. Clark in his report revealed something of the magnanimous spirit of Christian Endeavor. Among other interesting things he said, "In the United States more than five thousand new societies have been formed within a year, and from almost every nation comes news of increase in numbers and activities. During the past twelve months groups of young people in all the world called Christian Endeavor societies, have met together for no less than four millions of meetings for prayer and praise. There have been more than six thousand union meetings for young people, representing a hundred different denominations, thus greatly promoting Christian Endeavor fellowship. During the five and forty years of this movement, at least eighteen millions of young men and women and boys and girls have made in substance this promise, involved in the Christian Endeavor pledge, "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will strive to do whatever he would have me do."

Wonderful indeed is it to think of that though just a few years ago a world war was raging, yet in this recent convention, in the name of Christ and the church, representatives of practically every nation and denomination were gathered in fellowship and to plan for things eternal in character. Christian Endeavor has been one of the first organizations to hold the hand of brotherhood across the sea. British Endeavorers have attended Christian Endeavor conventions in Germany and German Endeavorers have visited England. Surely such great Christian fellowship as this ought to make strife to be buried a little deeper and service to mankind in the name of Christ a little richer.

It might be profitably asked, in what have we fellowship as Endeavorers? I will answer as Scripture would answer, "Not in iniquity," but says Paul in Philippians 1, "Your fellowship is in the Gospel from the first day until now." To the Ephesians, he says, "Ye are no more strangers and foreigners but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." In the third epistle of John the writer says, "We ought to receive such that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth." These things Christian Endeavorers have sought to do, even to the uttermost parts of the world.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

WHAT OTHERS SAY OF US

J. W. Bare in Boyland

A donkey saw a zebra, laughed and flapped his tail;

"My land!" he said, "look there: a mule's escaped from jail!"

The zebra, grazing slowly, spied a tall giraffe;

"A rubberneck!" he cried. "That makes me want to laugh!"

The old giraffe a camel saw in a field of rye, Made fun of his old hump and laughed as though he'd die!

The camel saw an elephant, and I heard him say,

"I'd hate to have a nose so long and wobbly that way!"

The elephant then met a porcupine. "Alack! I'd hate to wear such thorns," said he, "upon my back!"

And so each animal made fun of those he saw,

And never realized he, too, might have a flaw!

I know a lad who overlooks what people say,

"They may look queer," he says, "but I may, too, some way!"

He pays no heed as long as he just knows he's right;

He looks his best, forgets, and works with all his might.

THE PONY ENGINE

Once upon a time a little freight car loaded with coal stood on the track in a coal yard.

The little freight car waited for an engine to pull it up the hill and over the hill and down the hill on the other side.

Over the hill in the valley people needed the coal on the little freight car to keep them warm.

By and by a great big engine came along, smoke stack puffing smoke and the bell ringing, "Ding! Ding! Ding!"

"Oh, stop! Please stop, big engine!" said the little freight car. "Pull me up the hill and over the hill and down the hill, to the people in the valley on the other side."

But the big engine said, "I can't, I'm too busy," and away it went—Choo! Choo! Choo! Choo!

The little freight car waited again a long time till a smaller engine came puffing by.

"Oh, stop! dear engine, please stop!" said the little freight car. But the engine puffed a big puff and said, "I can't, you're too heavy." Then away it went, too—Choo! Choo! Choo!

"Oh, dear!" said the little freight car, "what shall I do? The people in the valley on the other side will be so cold without any coal."

After a long time a little pony engine came along, puffing just as hard as a little engine could.

"Oh, stop, dear engine! Please stop and take me up the hill and over the hill and down the hill, to the people on the other side," said the patient little freight car.

The pony engine stopped right away and said: "You're very heavy and I'm not very big, but I think I can. I'll try. Hitch on!"

All the way up the hill the pony engine kept saying, "I think I can, I think I can, I think I can, I think I can!" quite fast at first.

Then the hill was steeper and the pony engine had to pull harder and go slower, but all the time it kept saying: "I-think-I-can! I-think-I-can! I-think-I-can! I-think-I-can!" till it reached the very top with a long puff—S-s-s-s-s!"

It was easy to go down the hill on the other side.

Away went the happy little pony engine, saying very fast: "I thought I could! I thought I could! I thought I could!"—A. J. Shaw, in Jack-in-the-Pulpit.

BEING SMART

The High Priest of the Smart Alecks of America, Inc., Mr. H. L. Mencken, has done his best to make it clear that all honest-to-goodness intelligentsia must demonstrate their superior cleverness by regarding the majority of their fellows as morons and therefore by being cynical and pessimistic. These egotists are noted for sneers, not cheers; they would have us believe that the ugly, sordid, selfish things alone are real, and the gladsome and beautiful things in human life are an illusion or a sop to sentimentalism. The devotee of the "happy ending" in drama and literature is called a traitor to art. The critic is often bullied into the belief that the drab, dull and lugubrious give evidence of artistic power, while lightness and good cheer in drama or romance are proofs of inferior mentality. Thus a considerable part of the public has been hoodwinked into despising what these smart fellows call "saccharine," "Pollyanna stuff," "bunk," "apple-sauce," "banana oil," and so on ad nauseum.

Moreover, to picture "life as it really is," we are told that only the worst passions of the human heart must be put on view in books or on the stage and silver screen. It seems that for such folks the essence of "smartness" consists in having no faith in God or man. If this negation of all high values is not directly taught, it is the inevitable inference to be drawn from the supercilious attitude of these would-be leaders of men.

That popular poet of the masses, Mr. Edgar Guest, has voiced a prayer which good men and women may well join in praying during these days of vociferous smart-aleck-ism:

"The most plausible profession of faith, without works, is dead—as the root is dead when it produces nothing green, nothing of fruit. Faith is the root, good works are the fruit, and we must see to it that we have both. We must not think that either, without the other, will justify and save us. This is the grace of God wherein we stand, and we should stand to it."

AMERICA'S INTEREST IN EDUCATION

The interest of the American people in education seems to be registering at the highest point. During the years of 1923-24, $81,722,000 was given to this cause. Nine hundred and thirteen universities and colleges were the recipients. These figures represent $186,275,000 in real estate, and $127,417,000 in buildings, while the libraries and equipment registers the high figure of $174,323,000. The productive funds for income total a value of $814,718,813. These same institutions received from student fees, $84,171,612; room rent rose to the immense amount of $8,934,709, while board is reported to reach $28,028,854.

These are immense figures with which to deal. Moreover, they reveal the fact that in the field of education large aggregates demand the closest attention and make possible the realization of great educational policies and practices. These institutions report an aggregate of 56,279 professors and instructors, of which 11,934 are women. Under public control are 18,143 schools, and 13,154 under private support. There are in this country 165 schools of theology, 124 law schools, eighty medical schools, forty-three dental schools, and sixty-three of pharmacy. Enrolled in all schools in higher education in America in the year named above were 726,124 persons of whom 457,701 were men. It is estimated that there was an increase of eleven percent in student population throughout the land during the year 1925. If the state of democracy depends upon an enlightened and intelligent people, America is laying well her foundations.—Western Christian Advocate.

Business Manager's Corner

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING

While many people are constantly on the lookout for "something for nothing," it is seldom, indeed, that they find it. It is almost like "rainbow gold."

However strange it may seem, we are going to offer something for about as nearly nothing as one can hope to find. It may seem strange that the Publishing House can make such a proposition as this, when its financial situation is taken into consideration; and, if only the present were to be taken into consideration, it would be strange. But we feel that when the present is considered alone, and little, if any, thought is given to the future, no great success can be achieved. So, it is with an eye to the future that we have decided to give something for nothing for a time.

Free Brethren Evangelist Subscriptions

With an expectation of reaping great future benefits we have decided to offer the Evangelist FREE FOR TWO MONTHS to all new subscribers to the paper. That is, new subscriptions will be received from this date to December thirty-first, 1927, or for fourteen months, for the regularly yearly rate of two dollars.

This is a most generous offer, but it will fall upon deaf ears, unless the pastors and other readers tell about it. No one, except those who are already readers of the paper will see this offer, and it will do them no good, except as they get good out of telling the news to others.

A Win One Campaign

One of the plans for winning souls as featured by many evangelists is the "win one" plan. If every subscriber of the Brethren Evangelist would put forth the effort necessary to secure just ONE other subscription to the paper, see what it would mean to every one concerned.

Of course this could not be done in those congregations that are on the Evangelist Honor Roll, but we have about one hundred congregations that are not on the Honor Roll. If there were but TEN new subscribers secured from each of these one hundred congregations for fourteen months for two dollars it would add $2,000.00 to the yearly receipts for this paper, and be an increase of practically twenty-five percent in its circulation.

Pastors Can Help

Pastors must lend their assistance or no worthwhile results will come from this offer. We feel that it is a pastor's duty to tell it from the pulpit, and to emphasize the fact in no uncertain manner, that The Brethren Evangelist is offered FREE for two months to all new yearly subscriptions at the regular rate.

Any new subscription received from now until Christmas will be entered to expire with the close of 1927. To receive the two months free immediate action must be taken, but the offer will hold good with just ONE week less of free subscription from now until Christmas.

To make the most of the opportunity the pastors and members of the church should get busy at once. Pastors, won't you help? Other readers, won't you help? "Many hands make light work." Lend a hand.

Honor Roll Renewals

While we are not able to report any new churches on the Honor Roll, we are glad to report the following renewals received since our last report: Gretna, Ohio, ninth year; Johnstown, Pennsylvania, second year; Roann, Indiana, eighth year; Washington C. H., Ohio, sixth year; Yellow Creek, Pennsylvania, third year. We are always glad to have these Honor Roll churches renew their subscriptions as it shows the satisfactory working of the plan. However, there are a number of churches that should be sending in their Honor Roll renewals soon.

A Special Honor

While speaking of the Evangelist Honor Roll we would not forget that there are other things connected with our business transactions with the brotherhood that are also worthy of mention. For many years the First Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania and the First Brethren church of Dayton have been our largest purchasers of "our own make" of Sunday school lesson helps, papers, etc. But the last quarter our Dayton school broke all previous records of any school in the brotherhood.

Dayton's order for Sunday school supplies, including some of everything we publish, amounted to ONE HUNDRED SIXTY DOLLARS and forty-five cents, and the bill has been paid in full. While there are a few schools that seem to think the lesson helps we publish are not quite good enough for them, we want to call attention to the fact that the largest Brethren Sunday school in America uses everything that we make. There are a good many Brethren schools that do not use either The Angelus, our Sunday school paper for seniors and adults, or The Educator, our teachers' magazine. Yet, our largest school has use for FIFTY-FIVE copies of The Educator and FOUR HUNDRED copies every week of The Angelus. Dayton has always been our largest user of the Angelus. In the light of the experience of this largest school in the brotherhood, don't some of the rest of the schools feel that they might be doing a real good to their members and at the same time be rendering practical aid to our publishing house?

Let us see if this report will not have some bearing on the orders we receive from our Sunday schools for their lesson helps, etc., next quarter.

Our New Dress

Have you noticed the new dress The Evangelist has been wearing for the past few weeks? It means we have disposed of our two old type-setting machines and have replaced them by two new Intertype machines of the latest models, with new type faces, etc., that give a different appearance to our publications. We hope all our readers appreciate this improvement, as our two new machines were installed at a cost of more than $8,500.00. One of our old machines had been in daily use for thirteen years and the other one for eight years, and as we had an opportunity to dispose of them at an advantage we felt this was the time to install the new, and we did so. This will make a rather heavy financial load for the Company to carry, but we expect the business to pay for the machines, and faithful patronage and prompt payment of bills will be greatly appreciated by the Publishing House.

Spirituality versus Formalism

Why should one be set over against the other? We might answer, To accomplish very practical ends. But why should such a contrast seem necessary? Is it that the two are incompatible, that form and ceremony are forever conspiring against the spirit, and that he who would choose the one must by the very force of consistency eschew the other? No, it is not that the two are irreconcilable. It is not that one who cleaves to forms must be devoid of the spirit, nor that he who appreciates and seeks the spiritual shall necessarily be deprived of the aid of forms. Forms are given us as tools, agencies, means of grace, and there is no one but recognizes the value of tools, the importance of agencies, or the practicability of means. The trouble grows out of our childish tendency to make playthings of tools instead of using them to accomplish set tasks, to change agencies into objects of worship, and to make ends out of means. Moreover we are often so dull of vision, or so lacking in spiritual vigor and penetration, or so listless and indolent that we do not seem to grasp the profound and significant truth that the ceremony was intended to convey and vivify, and we content ourselves with the form devoid of the reality, with the sign minus the thing signified.

Ritual and form have their proper place, and it is not the part of wisdom to deny it. But if we allow them to bulk so large as to obscure the truth, then our religion becomes empty and lifeless. If our acts of worship result in no spirituality, if from them there is realized no new inflow of vitality and no increased consciousness of heavenly power, they are but vain show. And there is a tendency toward that very thing, and against it we must constantly guard. Our religion must mean more than forms and ceremony; it must mean empowerment and passion for a great cause. Our Christian profession must involve more than mere acts of worship and financial support; it must issue in life and enrichment, in growth and fruit-bearing. We would not seek to dispense with forms, nor would we deprecate outward acts and testimonies of religion, but we would give to them purpose, and vitalize them by encouraging sincere observance to that end. They make good servants to bring to our waiting souls great spiritual truths, but poor masters to whom to do obeisance. They constitute a royal highway leading into the haven of spirituality, but are barren and disappointing when considered as ends in themselves. The church can ill afford to deny itself of their use, and few religious bodies are so impracticable as to attempt it. But it must be remembered that there is the possibility and ever-present tendency to their misuse. And the church that makes largest use of them must place the strongest watch against this human frailty. Not only so, but the church that makes large use of them, if used aright, ought to be leading in spiritual attainment. The only justification of outward forms is that they are a means to inward grace, and if there is not a proper manifestation of spiritual grasp, of zeal for holy living and of sacrificial service, all the ceremonies one may observe are worthless, nay more, they are a positive detriment, both individually and socially. Our Lord Jesus bore witness to this fact when he said, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself."

But however much or little dependence we put in forms and ceremonies, and however large or small be the place we give to ritual, there is everywhere and always the tendency to take religion lightly, to grow careless about our profession and to live as if Christianity were a mere matter of church membership. And far too widely we show a lamentable weakness in yielding to this tendency. Too often the zeal with which we began the Christian life has cooled almost to the vanishing point, our delight in the fellowship of the saints has waned and our appreciation and grasp of things spiritual has greatly diminished. We have lost the fervor and power of the spirit, and that loss is manifest in our attitude and conduct. Even the most simple of religious activities, such as Bible reading and prayer, are done in a perfunctory manner, as if it were a mere social organization or fraternal society to which we belonged, and we were going through its ritual. Such a condition does not make for power and influence on the part of the church or of the individual, and when we consider that it is a condition that obtains quite widely, it is greatly to be deplored and well may the voice of warning be sounded, and resounded, as as it is being done in many quarters.

George W. McDaniel, a Southern Baptist minister writing in "The Christian Index," makes a striking plea for greater spirituality and likens the lack of it in the hearts of many to the arid condition of the desert. He says:

In California last August I saw dry and barren land just across the road from fruitful ranches. The one was like a desert, the other was like an eden. The difference was not in the natural fertility of the soil; that was the same. It was in irrigation. Wherever the water from rivers or wells flowed were fields of tall alfalfa, gardens of delicious vegetables and groves of luscious fruit.

It is just so in the religious world. There are pastors, churches and members whose lives are as arid as a desert. The days are monotonous, existence is a drudge. No birds make music all the day, no foliage grows, no flowers bloom, no fruit ripens. They are devoid of spirituality. They are unirrigated by the Spirit of God. They have "a name to live," no more. They count in the numerical statistics as the desert counts as a part of the area of the earth, but that is all.

With others, religion is their vital breath, service is a daily delight, and in their lives flourish the fruits of the Spirit—"goodness and righteousness and truth."

The most important thing after salvation is spirituality. Salvation is a free gift; spirituality is a cultivation. One is the soil which God created; the other is the improvement which man makes on that soil under the divine blessing. We can do nothing to procure salvation, we accept it: we grow into spirituality by personally using the means of grace.

These means are prayer, reading the scriptures, and worship and service. Prayer is as essential to the health of the soul as air is to the health of the body. The scriptures are as necessary to spiritual vigor as is food to physical strength. Worship is as vital to religious development as are wholesome social relations to human happiness. Service is as indispensable to spiritual growth as is bodily exercise to the athlete.

Permit us to adapt his words to our ends and to appeal that Brethren shall make larger and more spiritual use of these divine-of the altar of intercession, study afresh the scriptures, neglect ly appointed means; that they shall take firmer hold of the horr neither the practice nor the spirit of the holy rites, forsake not assembling of themselves together as the manner of all too many is, partake more largely of the Lord's passion for a lost world and consecrate themselves anew to his service. This will give vitality, and vigor to our church life both in the congregation and throughout the brotherhood, and we shall be able to accomplish our aims—missionary, educational, evangelistic, devotional and all, with such ease, alacrity, and efficiency as shall presage a period of unprecedented growth. Without spirituality our religious activities and efforts will be indifferently and ineffectively done and the speed of our progress will be the proverbial "snail's gallop." But let a high and fine spirituality temper and quality our lives and heaven alone knows what we might accomplish in the name of our Lord.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes a brief but interesting epistle concerning the prospects of one of our mission points in the Argentine. This place that has seemed so forbidding and discouraging, now gives reason for encouragement.

Brother C. R. Koontz, pastor at Carleton, Nebraska, describes briefly a very interesting vacation trip, which took him more than three thousand miles to his former home in Maryland and back. His church work is in good condition.

Brother Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, writes of a pleasant trip among churches and attending conferences in the Illiokota and Mid-West districts, where he gave his Historical and Missionary lecture and formed contacts that will prove profitable to the Home Mission interests.

Economists tell us that the dollar, judged by its purchasing power, is worth only sixty-five cents of its pre-war value, but that is far and above what most people value it at. There is a shameful recklessness and extravagance in the average expenditure. It looks as though there was need of some intensive instruction in stewardship, not merely for the sake of the kingdom's advancement, but the people's prosperity as well.

THE HOME BOARD IS ASKING FOR THE LARGEST OFFERING FOR HOME MISSIONS in the history of the church, and due to the fact that they have undertaken the most challenging effort at church extension that has ever been assumed, it is plainly evident that they need all they are asking and hoping for. President Carpenter and Secretary Gearhart both come to you with messages in this connection this week.

The efficient secretary of the Pennsylvania district conference, Brother Dyoll Belote, gives us a comprehensive report of their recent meeting at Berlin, where Brother W. C. Benschoff and his loyal coworkers royally entertained the conference in their beautiful new church and the delegates in their hospitable homes. Brother Ashman, the moderator, who recently gave our office a call, said it was a largely attended and finely spirited conference.

Brother A. B. Cover, pastor at Falls City, Nebraska, tells of his vacation experiences which were localized in two of our Virginia churches, near Roanoke, where he held revival meetings. Six souls made the good confession. It is a good way to spend a vacation, if one can get refreshment of body and soul in that way as Brother Cover says he did. After all a profitable vacation does not necessarily require cessation from activity. It may require merely a change of scenes, or a getting away from a particular responsibility. But every hard-working pastor (and that is the only kind we have room for) ought to get a period of relaxation at some time during the year.

A communication recently received from Brother J. I. Hall, superannuated minister now living at Harrisonburg, Virginia, informs us that he is still busy preaching the Gospel, supplying the pastorless churches in the Shenandoah Valley. It should be a source of inspiration and a challenge to the younger men of the ministry to hear these fathers of Israel say, "It is a great joy to me in my old age to be able to help these churches continue an existence. For pastorless churches are fated unless some one is willing to help them." And we need scarcely to add that there can be little in the way of money for those who are willing to "help these churches continue an existence." It is primarily a work of love and that is why they find such joy in their service. We believe the vast majority of our younger and middle aged ministers are willing to follow in their train, but if any are not, it is not because there are no heroic examples to inspire them.

The tentative program for the annual convention of The Religious Education Association for 1927 is in our hands and it is of interest to note that the burden of the convention will center in the two-fold problem: What is the educational function of the state and of the church, and how these two outstanding social institutions can cooperate to develop character in children and young people. Schoolmen are credited with having little patience with the educational ideals and methods of the church. And on the other hand, church leaders blame the school for much that is lacking in the way of right social ideals being manifested by the young people. These two institutions have not learned much about cooperation as yet. How can they be brought to the point of cooperation for the benefit of the child? That is a vital problem and it is well worth while for them to begin this far in advance to focus interest upon it. The convention will be held in Chicago, April 26-29, of next year.

It is encouraging to note that the opposition to the cigarette evil is mustering strength from the church and moral forces throughout the land, both by means of national and state organizations. Our attention is just now called to the fact that the Anti-Cigarette Alliance of America will hold a conference in Columbus, Ohio, November 9, 1926, for the purpose of planning an effective campaign for the coming year. They have rightly set as their chief aim the protection of childhood and youth from this great enemy. It is beginning to dawn upon the public conscience that the cigarette is one of the most subtle and deeply rooted evils now attacking the young life of our country and that the future welfare of our nation as well as that of millions of boys and girls depends upon how quickly and effectively the Christian people set themselves to the task of exterminating this vice. Several well-known scientific speakers will be at this conference, as well as workers who have been in the field and who know conditions. On November 8 the Ohio Anti-Cigarette Alliance will hold an important conference. All interested are invited to attend the meeting being held in the New Southern Hotel.

NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER ARE CHURCH PAPER MONTHS. If your church is not on the Honor Roll, now is a good time to put it there. There are two ways to do it. First, by putting The Evangelist on your church budget for the new year, sending it to every home of the congregation (every active family, if you prefer) and letting it count in as one of the items of the total budget for which you take pledges at the beginning of your church year. And some of our churches have their church year to coincide with the calendar year. A second way of getting on the Honor Roll is by getting subscribers to the number of seventy-five per cent of the families in your congregation. Either of these two methods will entitle you to the dollar and a half rate. If you can not get your church on the Honor Roll, get as many subscribers as you can at the two dollar rate and send subscriptions immediately and new subscribers will be given the paper for the remainder of this year and for the entire year of 1927 for the two dollars. Every effort to this end will be a service to your local church and to the brotherhood interests as well as to your church paper.

The call of the Week of Prayer for young men and boys has been issued by the World's Committee of the Y. M. C. A. and will be held November 14 to 20. The highly spiritual purpose of it makes it fully worthy of the cooperation of every Christian man. It is "a call to the reverent contemplation of Jesus Christ our Redeemer and Lord in order that we may better understand him and his claims upon our lives." The scriptural portion set for the opening text of the devotional suggestions for this week of prayer is Hebrews 1:1-4. We quote one significant paragraph from the introduction of the booklet: "It was in a period of doubt and drifting, similar to our own, that the anonymous author of the Epistle to the Hebrews undertook to guide his readers toward Christian assurances and confidences. He diverted their attention from side issues and concentrated it upon the main question." The burden of that exhortation was "Consider Jesus" (3:1), and that is the question that ought to occupy the center of our thought in this day of disturbance. The more we "Consider Jesus", the more will the radiance of his personality dawn upon our dimly-seeing eyes and the more will our own drab and disappointing lives take on his illumination and glory. One cannot long contemplate the Savior without being inspired with something of his passion for the lost, and that is to be one of the features of the week. And because evangelism is to be a principal feature, there is a desire to secure the cooperation of pastors and churches to the fullest possible extent. Surely here is an opportunity for the churches to bring the Gospel message to the hearts of men and boys.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Loaded Table

By G. C. Carpenter, President Home Board

A Thanksgiving Parable

The Sunday dinner table discussion centered around the reasons for observing Thanksgiving Day and why the church should be asked to give to the support of Home Missions.

The faithful husband and father reminded the family that because of their loaded table and full granaries and general prosperity they had abundant cause for being thankful to God. Then he quoted the Psalmist's words: "Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation."

Then mother added: "Yes, father is right, for all of us can well say, 'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.' God has been good to us all these years and I am glad when Thanksgiving Day comes, for it gives us special opportunity to acknowledge the Giver of all good gifts. And we ought to be glad that our church calls for its annual offering for Home Missions at the Thanksgiving season."

William, fourteen years of age, who had listened attentively, now exclaimed, "But, Mother, why should we give for mission work in the United States where all have loaded tables?"

"My son," mother replied, "there are many tables not loaded like ours. Sickness, accident, crop failure, flood, storm, earthquake, adversity in many forms come to many people. Not all are so fortunate as we."

"No," said father, "we have been so wonderfully prospered that I think we ought to cry out, 'What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward us?' We ought to do something for others less fortunate. We ought to share our blessings for thus we make room for more. Our church has been painted inside and out and re-roofed and we have money in the treasury for all our needs. In fact we might do well to begin at home by increasing our pastor's salary. His children are in school and he has almost more expense than he can meet."

"Yes, you are right," mother interrupted, "his good wife has not had a new hat for two years, and the children need shoes and stockings. We will talk to the deacons and then propose an increase in our pastor's salary at the next business meeting. We will all enjoy Thanksgiving more if we do our duty toward the Lord's faithful servants."

"We learned in school today," said William, "that the Pilgrim fathers celebrated the first Thanksgiving Day three hundred years ago at Plymouth and that they had a meager meal of wild game, corn and barley. They had none of the luxuries we enjoy. The Indians were invited as guests and together they ate the first Thanksgiving dinner in the wilds of New England."

"If we will but try to count our blessings," said mother, "we will be made to 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow' and we will be glad to respond to the appeal of the Home Mission Board for the largest offering ever. We can give more than we have been giving, you know we have been giving only five dollars a year to Home Missions. We have gotten the five dollar habit and you know we could give twenty-five dollars just as easily, and I propose that we do that, and also that we suggest to others who have loaded tables that they do likewise."

"I heard father say," William added thoughtfully, "that he received one hundred dollars more for that last lot of hogs than he expected and that the one hundred dollars came like a gift dropped into his lap. Why not give that? Father wouldn't miss it, for it was so unexpected and so much extra."

"I'll tell you what we might do," mother exclaimed, as though enthused by a bright idea, "why not give that one hundred dollars as an extra gift to the new Church Extension fund, for the Home Mission board needs a fund to assist in the erection of new churches. Then we could give the twenty-five dollars anyhow which we proposed to give to the General and Kentucky funds. And maybe we could give even more if we would make the tithe the minimum of our giving. You know the preacher wants us to enroll as tithers. He says that he is convinced that it is God's plan and that those who try it are so delighted that they never want to stop. I wish we might give it a trial."

Father moved uncomfortably in his big leather chair, but did not outwardly oppose any of the suggestions, for down in his heart he felt that mother and William were right. "I suppose," he said, after several minutes of silence, "that we could give much more than we have been giving, and that we really ought to give according as we have been prospered. William, bring me the Thanksgiving envelopes."

And on Thanksgiving Day as they with their guests were gathered around their own loaded table, there was no happier family in that church. And their joy was increased the more on the following Sunday when the pastor announced that the Thanksgiving offering of their church for Home Missions was the largest ever, having been increased more than one hundred per cent over last year.

And on the way home mother said: "Wouldn't it be fine if all with loaded tables would do likewise!"

The Thanksgiving Offering

By William A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary

Ever since the Pilgrim Fathers landed on American soil, the people of this great and glorious nation, have had abundant reasons to be thankful to God for all the good things enjoyed by the American people. We have been richly blessed with material things, and we also have reason to be grateful for the spiritual preservation during these many years. Some nations have practically forgotten their Creator and others seem to be drifting rapidly to that position. As a nation, we would do well to read carefully and take the admonition seriously, that was given to the Children of Israel, by Jehovah, relative to obedience to their God: "And it shall be, when the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee great and goodly cities, which thou buildedst not, and houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not, and wells digged, which thou diggedst not, vineyards and olive trees, which thou plantedst not; when thou shalt have eaten and be full; then beware lest thou forget the Lord, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage." We surely do have so many things to enjoy, and we are too prone to be ungrateful for them. If we are not careful, the time may come when a period of adversity and persecution will be permitted to come upon our great nation, to bring us to the proper recognition of him who has dealt so graciously with us.

What Can We Do?

The Brethren people believe, that as a denomination, we are proclaiming the true and unadulterated Gospel. If we do ring true to that claim, it behooves us to enlarge our borders and strengthen our stakes, so we may conserve our forces and extend our work. There are so many manufacturing and business centers to which our Brethren families move for their livelihood, where we do not have the church of their choice. If they want to be active in Christian work, as many do and should do, they become affiliated with other denominations, and we lose them from our ranks. We do want to continue to help deserving churches, but we must be building more new churches in strategic centers of population. There are many places where this could be done, if we only had sufficient funds to give some help. During the past year, two new fields were opened and new churches erected. One of these was the Winchester, Virginia church, and the other one at Fort Wayne, Indiana. We should be doing this in a much larger way than we have.

A New Fund

We believe the time has come to create and build up a "CHURCH ERECTION" fund, from which fund money can be loaned for church erection purposes, at a low rate of interest and for a period of time, all of which can be worked out by the Board. We must be careful however, that the creation of this new fund, will not interfere with our General and Kentucky funds. We are expecting a substantial increase in contributions to these, this year, but we hope every contributor will also give something to build up this new fund. The CHURCH ERECTION fund will be a splendid fund to be remembered when you make your will.

Where Help is Being Given this Year

Spokane, Washington; Fort Scott and Mulvane Kansas; Des Moines, Iowa; Huntington, Peru, Muncie and Fort Wayne, Indiana; Fremont, Columbus, Rittman and Springfield Center, Ohio (Definite decision pending on several in Ohio); Third church of Philadelphia; Winchester, Virginia; Quite a substantial amount will also be given for the erection of a new church in Alameda, California. Some survey work is being done practically every year by our Field Secretaries and other officers of the Board, to ascertain where Brethren churches should be built, but everybody knows it takes money to build and properly equip churches.

Help from Auxiliary Organizations

Considerable help has been given by the W. M. S. for a number of years, to carry on the Home Mission activities. This is greatly appreciated. We are to receive more help this year than usual, for which we are very grateful. The National Sunday School Association has been giving $1,000.00 out of their annual WHITE GIFT offering, for the Kentucky work, and occasionally this Association makes a special contribution. They are doing that this year, for they expect to pay for the Light Plant, purchased from The Brethren Home, which is to be installed at Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, Kentucky. I think it is installed by this time. The National C. E. Organization is also helping in the Kentucky work by furnishing the salary of one teacher. Were it not for the help received by these organizations, our Home Mission work would be greatly handicapped.

Our Kentucky Work

Our Board is compelled every year, to use considerable from the General Fund to keep the Kentucky work going. Why not have larger gifts designated for Kentucky this year, so the General fund need not be used for Kentucky? The slides and lecture are available to help you to boost the offering. Clothing, bed equipment, imperishable food, etc., are always appreciated in Kentucky.

Home Religion

(II) Family Prayers: A Joyous Experience

By Wilbur Brenner Stover, Missionary in India 1894-1920

(Second of a series of articles written by Elder Stover who is actuated by a desire to generate a deeper and more wide-spread interest in "Home Religion." All rights for the articles are reserved by The College Press, Mount Morris, Illinois.)

Scores of definitions of religion have been carefully worked out, but somehow I like my own best of all: "An attitude of the individual towards the Divine, which he believes to be acceptable to the Divine, and which he knows to be a source of joy to himself." Prayer is an expression of that attitude. Prayer is going over things with God. Prayer is not a monologue, it is a dialogue; there are two engaged in conversation, one is talking and the Other is listening. It is worship; but it is more than worship. Prayer is a recount of the present situation, a summing up of the case in the light of highest ideals. It is getting the mind of God, and bringing ourselves to think as we think he thinks.

In the family worship the whole family is taken into complete confidence, with the tenderest regard for the highest interests of every member of the family, as these interests are carefully talked over with the Heavenly Father. As father talks with the Heavenly Father, or as mother pleads with Heavenly Father, sometimes with tears, the impact is irresistible. All present are silent partners in the conversations; all present recognize an emotional response which may not find expression in the audible Amen, but which gives rise to the thought, "That's what I think," or "I wish God would do that," or "I believe just like mother prays." And all leave the prayer room with a joyous feeling.

The prayer room becomes the throne room, because we meet God there. Not just any old place, but a regular place, and that place for prayers. A happy little family in Cleveland, Ohio, pointed me to a corner of the living room, saying, "That is our Holy of Holies." We moved toward the corner, and without a word, all knelt in prayer. And we were filled with joy. That was the throne room, right there in the corner. Every day witnessed prayers. Sure, having a regular place makes a tremendous difference.

The remembrance of Thanksgiving dinners will be pleasing for a time, but that memory will pass with the passing years; the remembrance of Christmas festivities, ever fresh in the minds of the children, assumes a new meaning as we cease to be children; but the memory of the family worship to those who have been brought up in praying homes, becomes increasingly the most sacred memory of home, a source of strength in the moment of temptation, a flame of inspiration in the hour of great opportunity.

When I think of the home of my childhood, I recall father's prayers as we all knelt together, he and mother and I, with several younger children. When I was nine, father died. After some years of struggle, another man came into our home. Our prayers were broken up, so far as the pleasant living room was concerned; but not broken up, mother took us four boys up stairs, and there by our bed side, like a hen gathereth her chicks under her wings, with each arm over two of us as we knelt together, she prayed. This is today my most sacred memory of home.

While writing a thesis on the subject of family worship, I asked scores of folks what is their most joyous and sacred memory of home. To my surprise the answers came almost invariably back to me, saying, "Among my fondest recollections of our dear old home is the family worship hour." Of course, many were not so fortunate as to be raised in praying homes; many a child never has the joy of hearing his father pray, never knows the satisfaction that comes from mother's prayers. In this the child is to be pitied; his loss is greater than he can know. Others replied: "Family worship is one of my most pleasant memories," or "I cannot remember the time when the recognition of the presence of God was not an experience with me; this I attribute to the ideals I absorbed while on my knees listening to the prayers of my father and mother," or "I never could raise my boys without our family prayers," or "It is the altar after all that makes home a sanctuary."

I was urging the erection of the family altar while giving some lectures in Maryland. In a certain home, as the mother later told me, the children recoiled against the idea. She was insistent, and her husband was quietly giving his approval. One morning she said, "Come children, we will all sing a hymn first, in the living room, this morning." They did so, right cheerily, while she played the organ. Then she said, "Now papa will read us a lesson in the Bible." Which papa did, of course. "Now," she said, "we will all kneel down to pray;" and while doing so she led the prayers, then they all joined in the Lord's Prayer. When they arose and went to the kitchen for breakfast, sensing the situation, one of the children asked, "Mother, was that the family altar?" She quickly replied, "Yes, my dear, that's our own family altar. Don't you like it?" The child replied, "Sure I do; and I hope we can have it every morning." Then a smaller child spoke up: "Goody, goody, we've got a family altar in our home. I'm so glad." Interesting indeed; they must have thought it was something with horns, or perhaps something to make them cry, but once established and understood, their hearts were filled with laughter and their house was filled with joy.

If the family worship really affords the most sacred memory of home, where is the secret? I think I can tell you: At this time, all are at their best. In the moments of prayer when the whole family is together, all reserve is laid aside, hearts are uncovered and exposed to view; emotions intended only for God, like so many wave lengths, are caught up by the whole family, and all the family tune in. If there is any real value to the religion of the parents, the children will get it. Absolute sincerity prevails, and the joy of the experience is infectious. Professor Cope says: "Family worship lifts the whole level of family life." One short period of natural reverence sends light and calm all through the day. The social value of family worship is the strongest reason for its maintenance."

Get it, brother? The children see their parents at their best in family worship; not as the outside world must needs see them, but with the vision that is given alone to the inner circle, which discloses them as they are. When children see their parents communing with God, no wonder they grow up to say that the family worship affords them the most sacred and the most joyous memory of home. Yet many a father denies his children this princely spiritual inheritance.

BLESSING AND GRATITUDE

Gratitude consists of a watchful, minute attention to the particulars of our state, and to the multitude of God's gifts, taken one by one. It fills us with a consciousness that God loves and cares for us, even to the least event and smallest need of life. It is a blessed thought, that from our childhood God has been laying his fatherly hands upon us, and always in benediction; that even the strokes of his hands are blessings, and among the chiefest we have ever received. When this feeling is awakened, the heart beats with a pulse of thankfulness. Every gift has its return of praise. It awakens an unceasing daily converse with our Father—he speaking to us by the descent of blessings, we to him by the ascent of thanksgiving. And all our whole life is thereby drawn under the light of his countenance, and is filled with a gladness, serenity, and peace which only thankful hearts can know. —H. E. Manning.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Functioning Church. By A. B. Cover

(Delivered at Mid-West District Conference in session at Carleton, Nebraska, October 12-14, 1926)

TEXT: "That he might present the church to him self a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Ephesians 5:27.

(Concluded from last week)

The Church also provides the privilege of the ordinances. God knows how materialistically inclined we are. To help us overcome, he has committed to the Church the ordinances which are to the Christian means of grace. These ordinances have in themselves inherent and spiritual value. They afford a test of our obedience. "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." A stockman proudly boasted of his deeds of mercy and charity but spoiled it all when he said, "I belong to no church; I go to all of them." How are we to manifest our love to God? How are we to manifest our faith? Not by works alone, although they are the fruits of true faith. These ordinances are witnesses of faith. "Ye proclaim the Lord's death till he comes." They are proof of our love. "Hereby we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and do his commandments" (1 John 5:2). They are a memorial of Christ, "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this wine, ye do it in remembrance of me." They are symbols of fundamental truth; they are means of preserving truth; they are an aid to the understanding. "He that doeth the will of my Father, shall know of the teaching." The ordinances are types which will find their antitype in the Kingdom of God. To the church is committed the symbol of cleansing for service and from sin; the church is to be without spot or blemish and so the individual church member; the fellowship of the Lord's Supper is a foretaste of the marriage supper of the Lamb. The emblems of his broken body and his shed blood continually point us forward to the time when he shall again partake thereof in his greater fulfillment in the eternal kingdom of the redeemed (Luke 22:16-18). Then we shall no longer need the church with its temple; its officers, its symbols; for faith will have become sight, our weakness will have become strength, our hope lost in fruition and "God may be All in All." This is the privilege and opportunity of the church member in the Christian Church.

How shall the Church Function? How shall the Church attain the glorious ideal that Paul portrayed in the text? The pathway of endeavor is not clouded. We are given a Leader, a Head, Her Head is Christ. The functioning church knows but one Lord. She has but one Lord. I wish that I could put that statement of Dr. Miller in terms so emphatic that it would resound to each member of the Brethren church. WE HAVE BUT ONE LORD. Our allegiance should all be HIS. Christ is the commander and must be obeyed. How attentive the soldier on duty is to his superior officer! His every word is implicitly obeyed. Why should we hesitate, stammer and sputter when our Great Commander speaks? There is but one way to function and that is to obey. Then we are impelled to obey his commands. This means that we shall be obedient to the whole revealed will of God. This means that all are under obligation individually as well as the whole body of believers. Here we face the matter of the ordinances, what shall we do with them? Brethren, what attitude do we take in the privilege and teaching of the ordinances? Already we have called attention to them as having value in the church. What shall we do with them? Admission into the church is conditioned upon faith and repentance, the human side, and regeneration of the Holy Spirit, the Divine act. Here we face the initiatory rite into the church; do you brother minister, teach its Scriptural import? This baptism as we hold the Scriptures teach and the Apostolic church practiced, is trine immersion to penitent believers. Then follows the confirmation of baptized believers, symbolizing the reception and indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Do we make it impressive and beautiful as it is? Then follows the Communion Service with its three-fold embodiment: Washing of the Saints' Feet; the Love Feast; and the partaking of the emblematic bread and wine. Do the practice of these mean to the communicants, what they signify? I always thank the Lord that I have the opportunity of these privileges. Coupled with these is the beautiful ordinance of Anointing the Sick. This service should not be neglected. It is perhaps taught too little and the blessing that accompanies its administration is lost to both prospective recipients and the church that is given the privilege of its administration.

Every ordinance is the embodiment of a spiritual truth. Do we live that truth? Some one said, "Why does not the practice of our profession produce a higher type of life? Beloved, is it the fault of the ordinance or does it lie with the individual? The Church and all her God-given ordinances are a means to bring us to Christ. Individually, we use the means to gain Christ; we are responsible as individuals. So my salvation does not depend upon the general type of life in the church (if it were faulty) but upon my appropriation of his means of grace to daily living. But it is true that there should be evidence of our relationship with Christ in the affairs of the world about us. There are the non-resistant principles to uphold as a people professing the same. This refers to our relationship with the state and with individuals. It may be hard to "turn the other cheek;" and to "return evil with good," But we are obligated to do so. In the matter of swearing an oath, we are put to the test. But we profess to believe that we should not "swear at all," let us prove true. There are certain principles that apply in social life, viz., the matter of divorce and subsequent marriage. There are hard places to fill in this day of prevalent divorce; but we must practice what we preach. In short, we must live the life we profess to be in harmony with the Bible. The functioning church obeys the whole gospel. She keeps the unity of the spirit. There are, "many members but one spirit." We must unite on the great ends to be attained in our plea. I believe the Brethren Church has a mission to fulfill. I believe that mission is not yet fulfilled. Therefore I am constrained to labor for her best and greatest interests. May we be united in our Lord for the work committed unto us. The church should keep the unity of spirit in the bond of peace. Local interests must harmonize with the general interests. There must be no clash between these general interests; but all interests, local and general, must harmonize; home loyalty extending to the interests of the body. This will insure success in the promotion of the Cause committed to our beloved Church.

The functioning church will reach the ideal Paul sets forth in the text. She will become aware of the power entrusted to her keeping. The promise of the Master is that all the forces of evil arrayed against her cannot move her or prevail against her. It is a comfort and joy to belong to an institution to which the promise is made that VICTORY shall crown her every effort. Numbers is not necessarily a sign of power. We should crave a larger membership and should use the opportunity to enlarge our membership. But we need human effort empowered by the Spirit of God to function as we ought. Let us undertake in God's name, but in no other. The functioning church can expect success. We must hold the church true to God's purpose. This will require both an anointed ministry and a consecrated laity. We need a fearless ministry. Those who have felt the call of God to the work which they have espoused. They must not be afraid to preach the WORD. There are those who preach as they were afraid of the truth. Truth may find opposition but never defeat. Brother minister proclaim it. If some timid half-hearted member steps up to you and says now be careful and do not offend. Tell them you are not in the offending business, but that you are on the firing-line to teach God's Word and that you propose to teach IT. We need a ministry with character; a ministry feeling the sense of responsibility; a ministry with a passion; and a ministry responsive to God's will. We need a membership consecrated to the Lord, Jesus Christ. We need a membership loyal to his church. We need a laity with a vision of whole-hearted service to Jesus Christ. Then together pledge a fealty to the greater interests of the Lord and his work, that will insure unity of action, concerted and persistent effort that will win. Let us rise to the conscious recognition of God's indwelling Spirit and thus rest assured that ours is a winning cause.

What is attained by the functioning church? It is one "without spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it shall be holy and without blemish." The true Church is composed of true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a church in which members have the same marks. They are all born of the Spirit; they possess repentance toward God, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; holiness of life and conversation; they all hate sin and love Christ. The true Church is not alone dependent upon its earthly ministry, although men are needed to preach the Gospel; the life of its members does not hang on Church membership alone with the privilege of the ordinances, but it has only One Great Head—One Shepherd—One Chief-Bishop—that is Jesus Christ. Such a church will endure unto the end. This is the Church destined to become the Church Triumphant. The functioning Church lives in the imminence of the Lord's return. With her lamps trimmed and burning, with extra supply of oil she is "watching" waiting for the return of the Lord when least expected. "I say unto you watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." May we labor on in the realization of the accomplishment expressed in the words of the hymn:

"The Church's one foundation
Is Jesus Christ her Lord;
She is his new creation
By water and the word;
From Heaven he came and sought her
To be his holy bride;
With his own blood he bought her,
And for her life he died."

Jesus and the Woman at the Well

By Mrs. H. W. Koontz

OUR SCRIPTURE

"So he cometh to a city of Samaria, called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph; and Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus by the well. . . there cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water; Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink. . . The Samaritan woman therefore saith unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, asketh drink of me, who am a Samaritan woman? (For Jews have no dealings with Samaritans.) Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith of thee, Give me to drink;

OUR SOURCE OF HELP—Psalm 121:1-8.

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home:—
Under the shadow of thy throne
Still may we dwell secure;
Sufficient is thy arm alone,
And our defense is sure.

—Isaac Watts.

THURSDAY

THE SOUL'S CLEANSING—1 John 1:7-9.

Jesus, keep me near the Cross,
There a precious fountain
Free to all—a healing stream, Flows from Calvary's mountain.

—Fanny Crosby.

FRIDAY

SECURE IN HIM—John 10:27-30.

God is mighty! he is able to deliver;
Faith can victor be in every trying hour;
Fear and care, and sin and sorrow be defeated
By our faith in God's almighty, conqu'ring power.

—May Agnew Stephens.

SATURDAY

THE EVER-PRESENT FRIEND—Psalm 16:5-9.

I've found a friend in Jesus,
He's everything to me;
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul,
The Lily of the Valley,
In him alone I see
All I need to cleanse and make me fully whole.

SUNDAY

JOY UNQUENCHABLE—Hab. 3:17-19.

What a fellowship, what a joy divine,
Leaning on the everlasting arms!
What a blessedness, what a peace is mine,
Leaning on the everlasting arms!

—E. A. Hoffman.

(Prepared by G. S. B.)

thou wouldst have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: whence then hast thou this living water? . . . Jesus answered and said unto her, Every one that drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall become in him a well of water springing up unto eternal life. The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw. Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither. The woman answered and said unto him, I have no husband. Jesus saith unto her, Thou saidst well, I have no husband: for thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: this thou hast said truly. . . . The woman saith unto him, I know that Messiah cometh (he that is called Christ): when he is come he will declare unto us all things Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he." (John 4:5-26).

OUR MEDITATION

This story is priceless, for it portrays graphically the manner in which Jesus himself went about winning souls for his Kingdom. He is our great Example, and we must turn to him for instruction in this most important task given to the Christian. Let us, therefore, discuss a few of the suggestions found in this narrative.

First, our lives should be modeled as closely as possible after the perfect character of Christ. We must drink deeply of the living water and be convinced of its eternal freshness and boundless supply before we can offer it to the sinner with hope of success. Our lives should show that we have become children of God, born again through the blood of Christ. We should have the burden of lost souls upon our hearts as Jesus did, so that we cannot give them up, no matter how stubborn they are. Then we can go out to the harvest field with our sickles sharpened and a song in our hearts, confident of the divine help of God.

After our own hearts have been prepared for the great task we should use all opportunities for soul winning regardless of personal inclination. Jesus was tired as he sat by the well, but he used his few moments of rest when the call came to offer the living water to a thirsty soul. Too often we let the crucial time pass because we are timid, or because we do not express ourselves easily. Christ in us will give us the appropriate word to say as soon as we accept his promise.

This story also gives us a hint concerning the type of person whom we should approach with the Good News. The woman of the narrative was wicked, and of a hostile nation yet Jesus was not deterred from helping her. He saw her need for cleansing. He knew she was one of the myriads of sinners whom he had come to save and he offered her freely the great Gift. Today no one is too high or too low to need Jesus. Neither social status, nor wealth, nor intellect, nor power, can save a soul. Christ alone can give eternal life to the sinner and it is to him he sends us with the message of the gift of Eternal Life.

Christ's method of approach is masterly. He begins by asking the woman to perform a service for him. People are always more interested in those for whom they have done something. The very act, however small, introduces the brother-feeling, forms a bond of fellowship. So Jesus asked the woman to give him a drink of water. From that simple request he passed naturally into talking of the Gift that he had for her. When we can introduce a religious topic into secular conversation with ease and naturalness, we shall have mastered one of the greatest aids in soul winning. Christ was so full of his subject that he found a use for every bit of conversation, every casual incident, in proclaiming the Gospel.

The topic Christ chose for the conversation was one vitally interesting to the woman. From little girlhood she had been drawing water and carrying it too from the public well to her home. Keeping a steady supply of the liquid so necessary to life and health was one of her greatest concerns, and she was immediately intrigued with the thought of living water that did not require drawing and carrying. Today human nature responds to the same methods. We must command attention by using that which already is interesting to the particular individual we are trying to win. There will be no difficulty in finding something in his life that will yield itself as the wedge that will bring him to the new life.

As Christ could read the thought in the woman's heart, so we too should strive to understand people, to recognize their emotions, to be familiar with daily life, their temptations, their pleasures. It was necessary for Christ to put his finger on the great sin in the woman's life, necessary for him to make her know that he understood her heart, before she was sincerely touched. Sins are much more ugly and condemning when brought to the light and contrasted with right living and pure thinking.

When Christ began to press her more closely concerning her private life, the woman attempted to lead him into a religious controversy but he refused to be persuaded away from the issue at stake. We too should not allow ourselves to be diverted from our purpose by arguments upon mooted points, or obscure Bible passages. Our task is to proclaim the Lamb of God, slain for sinners and the Redemption he purchased.

Lastly, Jesus proclaimed himself, saying, "I that speak unto thee am he." Our mission is to declare the Christ and he who never fails us will give us the wisdom to do his work. Let us yield ourselves to him so completely that it will be, not ourselves, but Christ in us, who strives for the victory over sin in the lives of the lost. He who died for us deserves faithful, earnest, loving, enthusiastic, consecrated Christians to witness by character, word, and deed to his saving and keeping power.

OUR PRAYER

Our Gracious Heavenly Father: Our hearts are full of humble gratitude that thou didst give thy Son to die for us, that through him we might live. We thank thee for the Living Water that springeth up into eternal life. We ask that our lives may be empty vessels ready for thy use. May they proclaim thee acceptably. Make us instruments in thy hands unto soul winning; give us a burning zeal for garnering men's souls. Give us patience and understanding and sympathy. Keep us ever so close to thee that our hearts will be continually overflowing with love and adoration for thee. Make ready the minds of those with whom we labor for the entrance of the blessed Gospel and we will give thee all the praise forever. In the name of him who died for us, we pray. Amen.

The Division of Canaan

The land of Canaan was divided among the twelve tribes whose founders were the two sons of Joseph (Ephraim and Manasseh) and the other sons of Jacob, Levi, excepted. The total number of tribes remained twelve throughout the history of Israel, though as time passes we see the tribe of Simeon practically becoming a part of the tribe of Judah, and the two half tribes of Manasseh, the one east and the other west of the Jordan, practically counting as two tribes. "This is Judah's; this Asher's; this Simeon's; and this is Benjamin's," they said, even while the Amorites, the Jebusites and the Hittites were in open possession! The division made was the announcement in faith of certain high ideals which under God's guidance they proposed to realize by the long and patient struggle which followed (Tarbell.)

Caleb, Man of Vision

Caleb saw the Almighty in the van, leading on; the other spies saw only the dangers ahead of them. "So it is in common life. Men of unquiet vision see gigantic difficulties where the difficulties are only ordinary. Men of imperfect vision see the mountains covered with hostile forces; the true vision sees the enemy, but also beholds the hosts of the Lord. 'Let not your heart be troubled.' That was counsel for the panic-stricken. 'Believe in God; believe also in me.' That is the antidote to fear." "I have closed the door on Fear, He has lived with me far too long; If he were to break forth and reappear, I should life my eyes and look at the sky, And sing aloud, and run lightly by; He will never follow a song."

—Alice B. Adams.

The Secret of Strength

"As Matthew Henry has it, Caleb was still 'fit for business.' Marvelous old man! Effervescent with youthfulness at eighty-five! Ready to storm the stronghold of Hebron! Jubilant in prospect of driving out Anakim! Caleb has youth's strength and valor and optimism in extreme old age. It is beautiful that he ascribes it all to God. 'The Lord hath kept me alive.' So said the aged Wesley, who himself was a Caleb indeed. Godliness hath promise of the life that now is. With the Physician of physicians attending on us surely we shall be kept alive. In a thousand ways faith tends to physical youthfulness. God preserves his Calebs."

"Still God has his choice possessions, and he gives them still to the willing and obedient. They belong to those who, while others are doubting or denying his word of promise, still serve him steadfastly in all good conscience. Such a faith fears not to claim its possessions."—Sarah F. Smiley.

"Anakim" in Our Inheritance

"Some of the highest blessings are fenced about with the greatest difficulties. (1) No earthly inheritance is without its peculiar disadvantages. Some of the "Anakim" which resist us in our efforts to fulfill our mission are (a) the evil in our own heart, e. g., indolence, fear, earthliness; (b) the temptations of the world, arising from bad examples, customs, distracting pleasures; (c) direct hindrance in persecution and opposition, growing out of the world's ignorance, prejudice, envy, etc. (2) Nevertheless it is best for us, as it was for Caleb, to have such an inheritance. Difficulties (a) try our faith and courage; (b) give scope for energy and devotion; (c) make the ultimate peace more blessed." (3) People sometimes think of their inheritance in the religion of Christ as one of mere peace and happiness, and forget that the cross is

"If to be clever means that I must sneer

At every honest effort to be good,
Must tear to pieces all the brave revere,
And scorn what isn't clearly understood;
If only what is rotten can be art,
Lord, keep me from the sin of being smart!

If to be clever means that I must jest

At all that men hold sacred, and disdain
The simple teachings telling what is best,
Must serve the passions for my pocket's gain;

If brilliance means an utter lack of heart,
Lord, save me from the sin of being smart!

If to be clever means that I must see

All that is base and vile and call that real,

And finding honor, swear it cannot be Because I've known some men to lie and steal;

If wit must tear all gentle worth apart,
Lord, save me from the sin of being smart!"

—Reformed Church Messenger.

there, and self-denial, and hard fighting against sin, and hard duties to perform. It is to be won, every inch of it, with marvelous divine help, but also by hard battles and persevering courage. Sin has no right there, and we must drive it out in all its forms.—Illustrated Quarterly.

How the Anakim Effect Some

There are those who hesitate on this account to take possession of their Promised Land. "Let us suppose," says Matheson, "that twelve men were divinely selected to have a preliminary vision of the Christian heaven with the object of reporting its nature to their fellow-men, the selection being made without reference to spirituality, and wholly on the ground of investigative powers. . . . It is almost certain that at the sight of the Christian heaven ten of the company would start back in dismay—not appalled by the difficulty, but appalled by the facility of getting in. For they would see there the last thing they expected to see—a life of sacrifice at the center. Whatever grapes of Eshcol they might behold, whatever gates of pearl they might gaze on, whatever streets of gold they might survey, they would always recognize behind these objects the presence of that form they had regarded as the symbol of misery—the Cross."

In the same line of thought Dr. J. R. Miller wrote: "There are those who sigh for holiness and beauty of character, but they are not willing to pay the price. They sing, 'More holiness give me', and dream of some lofty spiritual attainment, some transfiguration, but they are not willing to endure the toils, fight the battles, and make the self-sacrifices necessary to win these celestial heights. They want a larger spiritual inheritance, but they have no thought of taking it in primeval forests which their own hands must cut down."—Ibid.

"EFFICIENCY" AND "EXTENSION"— GOOD SUNDAY SCHOOL WATCH- WORDS

Rev. H. S. Harris, Sunday School Secretary for Brazil, was recently requested to visit the city of Sao Sebastiao de Paraíso, about fourteen hours distant from Sao Paulo but in the State of Minas, and hold a Sunday school Institute for the workers in this field, in which nine years ago there were only two Christian believers. A Sunday school, however, was organized about that time and ever since it has been the chief means of evangelizing the city and surrounding towns. At the Institute just held, workers were present from the central Sunday school and from four others in nearby places, all under the general direction of the pastor at Sao Sebastiao. These five schools reported an average total attendance each Sunday of 465 and the work is growing rapidly from month to month. The two watchwords of the Sunday school movement in Brazil are "Efficiency" and "Extension" and the devotion to these ideals accounts largely for the fact that the Sunday school enrollment in Brazil has trebled during the past ten years, growing from 30 to 90,000. Institute work and teacher training classes are stressed as means of promoting efficiency and of preparing workers for numbers of "branch" schools, which nearly all the longer established Sunday schools are now seeking to maintain. The opportunities throughout Brazil are limitless for developing effective work in hundreds of centers with results such as these nine years have produced in Sao Sebastiao. The fields are ripe unto the harvest, but, alas, the laborers are so few. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

RED AND GREEN PROPHECIES

In making the annual report of the Hungary Sunday School Union, the General Secretary, J. Victor of Budapest, referred to the method used at Cegled in stimulating "on time" attendance. "Each child has a card with the picture of a bunch of grapes. Those who are punctual place a red paper disk on one of the berries, denoting that it has ripened. Those who are late get a green paper disk, showing that it will never ripen."

At the Ninth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association, held in Glasgow, June, 1924, Mr. Victor reported that there were 403 Sunday schools in Hungary with 21,970 scholars. Now there are approximately 450 schools enrolling 30,000 scholars.

Plans for the Committees

Something Simple and Just a Little Different. Try These Plans

By Rev. Robert P. Anderson

A FLOWER SOCIAL

For Flower and Social Committees

Preparations for this social will have to be made long in advance. At the beginning of summer announce to the Juniors (with the consent of the superintendent, of course) that at a certain time a flower social will be held. The Juniors are all asked to grow plants for the social. The plants will be brought in pots, and prizes will be given for the best, as in a regular flower show. The right judges must be secured to award the prizes. After the display of flowers have a regular social, with games and refreshments. Then the flower committee will take the plants to the sick or to a hospital.

A GUESSING SOCIAL

For Social Committees

The main features of this social should be different guessing games. There will be conundrums, of course. Then charades. Then the following guessing game. On a long cord, which will be strung across the room, tie fourteen paper bags. On each bag print one letter of the words, "Junior Endeavor." Inside each bag place an article that begins with the letter on the outside. Thus: Jar, Urn, Nail, Ivory, Orange, Rag, Eraser, Nuts, Doll, Elastic Apple, Vegetables, Onion, Rubber. (Other articles may be used, of course, provided they begin with the same letter that is on the outside of the bag.) The Juniors are given pencils and paper, and are asked to feel the bags and guess what is inside. The Junior that makes the most correct list gets a small prize. Play other games, besides guessing games, and, of course, serve refreshments.

MEET WITH THE YOUNG PEOPLE

For Prayer Meeting Committees

For this meeting choose a topic that the Juniors can handle easily. Then, through the superintendent, arrange to have the Juniors conduct the Senior society's meeting. The Juniors will prepare and send out the invitations. If the meeting is well advertised, and its unique character known, it will probably attract a crowd. Invite church-members as well as members of the Young People's society. Two Juniors may lead the meeting, and the Juniors should give Bible drills, challenge the Seniors to a verse-finding contest, plan special music, offer sentence prayers, and take part in the short talks. Of course the Seniors will also be called on to take their share in the meeting. This is a fine way to show the Senior society and the church people that there is real value in Junior Christian Endeavor work.

SOME PLEDGE MEETINGS

For Lookout Committees

Every Junior should memorize the pledge. But more important still, every Junior should understand the pledge. To help the Juniors to understand it, hold several pledge meetings. To make these meetings interesting try this plan. You have a large wall-pledge, of course. Take a long piece of blue ribbon (the Junior color), and fasten one end of it to the wall above the pledge. Fasten the other end, by means of a thumb-tack, to the first clause of the pledge. Have a speaker ready to give a talk on that clause. The next night fasten the end of the ribbon to a different clause in the pledge, and have a speaker to talk on that part of it. In this way go through the pledge, explaining it carefully.

Some society may want to print one clause. The next night fasten the end of hang it on the wall while the speaker explains it. The next night a different clause would be printed on another strip of paper.

A MISSIONARY SPELL-DOWN

For Missionary Committees

Seat the members in a circle. Open the meeting with singing and prayer. Tell the Juniors that they must pay close attention to what is said in the meeting, for something is going to happen to test their memories. Testimonies or information on the subject of the meeting will then be given (perhaps read) by members assigned beforehand to do this. Then the Juniors are asked to stand, and sides are chosen. Keep them evenly balanced. Then the leader asks a question bearing on something that has been said in the meeting. If one side does not answer the question correctly, the other side tries. When a member fails to answer

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

(Topic for November 14)

Philip, Who Carried the Torch to a Man in a Chariot. Acts 8:26-31

Once upon a time there was a young man and his name was Philip. This young man lived far across the sea in the land where Jesus used to live. In fact he lived there not long after Jesus had left this world and gone up to heaven to live. Now this young man belonged to the church at Jerusalem. There was a rather large church there and all of the members were trying to make their torches burn brightly so that other people might know about Jesus, the Light of the World, who had died to save them.

Now it happened that there were a lot of poor people who lived in Jerusalem just like there are poor people in nearly every town today. The Christians wanted to help the poor people and make them happier so they appointed some of their members to take care of them and Philip was one of the young men appointed.

Philip was glad, yes, very glad that the church asked him to help to take care of the poor for he wanted to do his work for Jesus, and he was glad whenever he found a chance to do anything. So, that is the very first thing that we know about Philip. We know that he made his Torch bright with kindness to others. Sometimes, some of the poor people would be sick and he would take care of them. Sometimes some of them would want to come to church and would not be able to get there and Philip would go after them and take them to church so that they might worship and be happy with the rest of the people.

Now, there was another young man, named Stephen, who was also appointed to help take care of the poor. He was a good friend of Philip's and what do you think happened. Stephen was telling some people about Jesus and some wicked people found out that Stephen was teaching a lot of people and that he was becoming very well known because of the many wonderful and good things that he was doing. Then what do you think happened? These wicked people became jealous of Stephen and they took him and stoned him to death. Just think how sad that made Philip. Don't you think that he must have felt scared to keep on preaching after his good friend, Stephen, had been stoned for doing that very thing? Well, most anyone would have felt scared and most people would have quit but not Philip. Right then his Torch began to burn even brighter than ever before for some new qualities began to light it. These qualities were Faith in God and Courage.

He had so much Faith and Courage that he kept right on preaching. Then things kept getting worse and worse and one day the people of the church got to gether and decided that they would have to leave Jerusalem and preach somewhere else. You see there were people in Jerusalem that wanted to kill Philip and all the Christians, so they had to leave the city. But Philip kept right on preaching and teaching and he helped to establish some new churches. And so his Torch kept shining brighter and brighter with Kindness, and Faith and Courage.

One day after Philip had been preaching quite a long time he was out walking on his way to a new place. And as he walked along he saw a chariot being driven along the way and in the chariot there was a man and what do you think that this man was doing? He was reading his Bible. Now Philip saw that this man in the chariot was from some other country because he was not white like Philip. However, the man in the chariot seemed to be trying to understand the Bible and Philip realized that there was a big chance to help someone to be a Christian. So, Philip got in the chariot and talked to the man and told him about Jesus. Soon the man became a Christian, for Philip showed him just how Jesus had come into the world and how Jesus' Light was making the world brighter. When the man in the chariot went into his home country he told his people about Jesus.

So, Philip's Torch burned brighter and brighter for as the years passed he was always faithful to Jesus, he helped many people and the qualities of Faith and Courage shone always brightly.

Impressions from the Land of Sunshine

By W. A. Gearhart

At our National Conference several of the pastors from the churches west of the Mississippi River, prevailed upon me to attend the Mid-West and Illiokota district conferences and also to visit our churches in that part of the brotherhood. I was glad to arrange for the trip, inasmuch as I had never visited among them during the seven years that I have served as the Home Mission Secretary, excepting Waterloo, Hudson, Lanark and Milledgeville.

After a long siege of cloudy and rainy weather in the Miami Valley, it seemed good to be in a section where they have lots of sunshine. They seem to have more than their share, especially at Carleton, Nebraska, where the Mid-West conference was held and where I was so royally entertained in the home of Brother and Sister Elias Lichty. Brother Lichty says the sun shines about 90 percent of the time during the entire year. I also found an abundance of sunshine in the hearts of the many good people I was privileged to meet at both conferences and during my visit among a number of the churches. We had ideal weather also at Des Moines, Iowa, where the Illiokota conference was held.

The Garbers, Hoovers, Berkelys, Lichtys, Studebakers, Anderson, Woods, Kemp and others, helped to make my trip an enjoyable and profitable one. Brother Cone was good to me. He took me from Des Moines to Dallas Center and from there to Leon. If I were inclined to criticize any of those good friends in the West, it would be for the temptations they thrust upon me to eat too much. I met many, whose names were familiar to me as regular contributors to our National Home Mission funds. I gave my "Historical and Missionary" lecture in most of the churches I visited, and a liberal offering was made for our mission work. They had some mud in several sections, which kept some from attending, but as a rule, the attendance was very good. House was full on several occasions.

Three of the churches I visited are mission points, receiving support from the National Board, viz., Des Moines, Mulvane and Ft. Scott. Brother Kemp is pastor at Des Moines, and we found him to be one of those hustlers who sees that things do move. We really believe this comparatively young but thriving mission church, will not be many years in becoming a self-supporting congregation. They have some splendid, talented folks who are not afraid to make use of their heavenly gifts. At Mulvane, Kansas, Brother Anderson is doing good work in spite of some handicaps. I was entertained in his home and taken to several points of interest while among them for several days. We had practically all his members and friends of the church out for the lecture on Sunday night. Brother Anderson is planning for a meeting ere long in Mulvane. Our church being located several miles from this point, seems to keep some of the town folks from attending, who seem to be interested in our denomination.

At Fort Scott, we were glad to meet again with the faithful members and friends of our mission. It is about 18 months since

I was there as temporary pastor for a short period of time. Since that time industrial conditions have caused quite a number of our members to move to other cities. This, with other unfavorable conditions, has made it difficult for Brother Wood to accomplish much, so far as visible results are concerned, nevertheless, we are persuaded that a good and substantial foundation has been laid during the past year, upon which we hope to have built a strong, self-supporting congregation by and by.

The District Conferences

Personally, I was very favorably impressed with the attendance and interest at both conferences. Considering the small number of churches in these districts, and the distance some delegates must go, their attendance was better than we have here in our Ohio district, where we have several times the number of churches they have. This was the first time for many years that I was unable to attend our own district conference, but I was glad to be able to attend the two west of the Mississippi River. I enjoyed the trip immensely, but I am glad to be back home again in the good old Miami Valley.

Dayton, Ohio.

Argentina---Laboulaye

On account of special hindrances in Laboulaye our mission has had a hard struggle to have a show of success, measured by attendance and number of converts, but on account of the importance of the place as a strategic center we have persevered in sustaining it, and now we are rejoicing in seeing a growing interest and are confirmed in the belief that it will some day be a strong mission. The following is the translation of part of a letter from Brother Istueta, the pastor there.

"Last Tuesday I held a meeting in Leguizamon with an attendance of more than forty. Monday and Tuesday of this week we held meetings in Villa Rossi with an attendance of nearly fifty. A poor woman to whom I sold a Bible nearly three years ago, came to me so penitent on account of her sins that she wept and confessed all her life. After prayer with her she accepted the assurance of salvation and wept more for joy than before she wept for sorrow.

Here in Laboulaye there is now good interest. The meetings vary from 30 to 50 and the Sunday school from 30 to 40 in the morning and from 40 to 50 in the afternoon. Last week after returning from Leguizamon we had a meeting in our home, Friday evening another in the home of Brother Perez and Saturday evening another in the home of Sister Garcia. Thus we have meetings every night in the week except Wednesday, and three on Sunday. Next week I expect to go to Buchardo Monday and Tuesday instead of Leguizamon."

With love in Christ,

Juan Istueta.

These visits to neighboring towns are made possible by the Ford donated for the use of Brother Istueta. He is making good use of it and will in due time reap the rich harvest of his abundant sowing. I will write more of our work here and in other places in my next.

GRACE VS. "GRANDFATHER"

Representatives of the Church Missionary Society point out that paganism in many parts of Africa is doomed, but that the African is faced by the perils of materialism. His greatest need is an education dominated by Christian ideals and permeated with the spirit of Christianity. The "Church Missionary Outlook" for April states that at least thirty men and twenty women recruits are needed immediately for the rapidly developing C. M. S. missions in Africa. All these could be supported by governmental grants or local funds without any additional charge on the Society's budget, beyond that for training. The urgency of the call from Africa can hardly be overstated. For some years the Bishop and other experienced missionaries have warned the church at home that all was not well in Uganda, and that the story which has been one of the glories of missionary history might easily become a tragedy. As some of the Baganda have put it: "Grace has come into the heart, but grandfather is still in the bones," and the result is often a condition such as grieved St. Paul in Corinth.

SURPRISING GIFTS FROM CONVERTS

The Qua Iboe Mission, which has its headquarters in Belfast and its work in West Africa, undertook a mission in the swampy district extending south of the Niger delta in 1887, Mr. S. A. Bill being the pioneer. He is still alive and has not returned for furlough since 1918. They have been gathering a very gracious harvest of souls, 2,785 being baptized last year. The outstanding feature of the work is the developing of the grace of giving. Years ago the secretary at home became convinced that the method of supporting native workers from the funds of the society was wrong and he pleaded with the missionaries that they insist on the support of their pastors, evangelists and school teachers coming from native gifts. Their reply was that their converts were too poor. But the secretary at home was insistent that the subsidizing principle was wrong, and at last the missionaries agreed to give it a trial. The result has been remarkable, and a surprise at first to the missionaries themselves. Last year the native Christians in West Africa contributed about $65,000, while the total income of the Mission at home was a little under $53,000.

That wisdom which is from above is without hypocrisy. It has no disguises or deceptions. It can not fall in with those managements which the world counts wise, which are crafty and guileful; but it is sincere and open, steady and uniform, and consistent with itself. O that you and I may always be guided by such wisdom as this; that, with Paul, we may be able to say, "Not with fleshy wisdom, but in simplicity and godly sincerity, by the grace of God, we have our conversation."—Matthew Henry.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

The first item of news since my last report to the Brethren Evangelist, I find is our vacation. This covered a period of five weeks and 3200 miles. The five weeks may seem somewhat long, but it was on this wise. Twelve days on the road, seven at National Conference, and the remainder visiting with relatives and friends in the east.

Leaving Carleton, Tuesday, July 27 we motored south into Kansas until we reached the US 40, better known farther east as The National Highway. Here we turned east and headed for Winchester, Virginia, reaching our destination in time for supper Saturday evening.

The next two weeks were spent in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley, visiting relatives and friends, also some of the public gatherings of that section. Here we were privileged to greet again many that we had ministered to during our four years' sojourn in the Valley.

From here we motored northeast up Harper's Ferry into Maryland. Here we visited the Brandenburgs at Linwood and also called to say at least Hello to a few others in and around Linwood and Union Bridge. I should have stated earlier that as we were going through Ohio, one night and a few hours the next morning were spent in the hospitable home of Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Ronk.

Owing to the wet weather and our desire to return home by a different route, from Linwood we drove north to Gettysburg and returned on the Lincoln Highway, stopping off at Winona Lake for the National Conference.

Upon our return home, my wife joined me in saying that we were very thankful for the vacation, the Conference, and the trip. Now that we were home safe and sound, not having had a bit of trouble on the way, we were ready for work. And work was waiting. Promotion Day was fittingly observed Rally Day was staged in spirit rather than in form, and while the weather that day was not so favorable, our people have been rallying since. The next was the entertaining of our District Conference of the Mid-West district. Inasmuch as the Secretary has or will give you a detailed report, I will close by saying that a fine fellowship was enjoyed by all, and I believe all returned home grateful for the encouragement received.

C. R. KOONTZ.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

This report has been somewhat delayed on account of the busy days that follow the pastor's vacation. There are a few folks of the opinion that a pastor should never have a vacation. The writer was told by another pastor who did not take a vacation that the devil never took a vacation. That is very true and we should constantly be on guard, but there are other ways to combat Satanic influence that to deny the nerve-racked pastor a rest which every pastor deserves, if he is worth having at all. Those who find fault should for one month step into the place of their pastor, feel the responsibility and do the work and they would forever be cured of the malady, fault-finding, which afflicts some well-meaning but uninformed church members. We feel grateful to our people for granting us the vacation and I am certain that all are well satisfied by having their pastor return with renewed energy and spirit. I thank my people for granting me this vacation. I may have used the time of my vacation differently than may have been suspected, but the pastor is well satisfied that it was thus spent.

Before leaving some of my dear brethren and friends of Virginia, when coming to the Mid-West, I promised them that I would return and hold meetings for them some time when opportunity afforded. Plans matured and immediately upon the beginning of my vacation, I set my face Southeastward and landed in the growing little city of Roanoke. I was met at the depot by some of the brethren and sisters of the Garden City church. The evening of our arrival, we began a two week's meeting. From the very first evening, we had splendid audiences of young people for the most part. This was an inspiration for today young people graduate, through example and attitude of too many parents, from the church at an early age. We continued with them two weeks, battling with muddy roads, indifference on the part of some, sickness in others and the devil in all his strength, but with a fine interest and spirit. Six young girls from two new families made the good confession. Before leaving we went to the creek, and there in running water amidst the beauty of nature, they were buried with Christ in baptism. Brother Dunahoo still serves this congregation as pastor. He is faithful to Brethrenism and sacrifices to serve these people. He could not be with us much, which we regretted but we knew he was praying for us and that encouraged. The people bestowed upon the weary evangelist the courtesy of the Southern hospitality to the extent that it was difficult to say "good-bye." Our home was with Brother and Sister Perdue, who made us feel at home with them. May God bless these people at Garden City. They have a bright future with careful leading and consecrated work.

From Garden City we went to Mountain View, where Brother J. E. Patterson is pastor. This was our third meeting with the church at this place, so needed no introduction. We were with these people nearly two weeks. It has been a period of three years since last working with these fine people of th Valley. During this time, considerable change was wrought. Many who were active in the work three years ago are now living elsewhere and those who moved into the community are not of Brethren faith. So the result is simply this that the flourishing school and church has decreased in numbers. We state in numbers for this is what happened; in the matter of zeal and spirit the faithful ones are there to labor on. The school as I remember it is scarcely more than half as large as it formerly was. But I noticed an intense earnestness and that they are doing good work. Numbers, much as we desire them, are not always the indication of effective work. Brother Patterson is a man of the spirit and serves faithfully. The condition which effects the status of the community is beyond the power of any pastor. But with this situation, we proclaimed the Word of God in our weak way with a fine interest and many were the expressions of appreciation which were given by those attending the meetings. There are other matters than the above which also tended to keep away those who might have been reached: the Church of the Brethren, just a few miles away had at the same time a tent meeting with a strong evangelist and Gospel singer; this attracted some who would have attended; another fact, that today is telling on church attendance generally, is the presence of the goddess, pleasure; a swimming pool with the attending attractions has been built within several miles of the church, and consequently some who should be at services are serving the goddess. So we had no confessions here, but feel that the meeting was worthwhile and the folks seemed satisfied. I enjoyed the fellowship and hospitality of the different homes and shall always remember with keen pleasure the good people whom we love. I am hoping that the swing back will again bring numbers into active service here with the faithful ones remaining. I received splendid offerings at both places which we gratefully received as an expression of their appreciation of our humble services. The meetings, with the fellowship of these people and the atmosphere helped the writer and we came back to our people refreshed in body and soul.

On our way to Winona, we stopped just to "look in" at old Berlin. How happy those folks are with their beautiful new church building! And the writer also rejoices with them for that is our HOME church we are proud of the building and the people. May God bless them! Here, we met our better half, who was sojourning with relatives and friends. Together, we journeyed to beautiful Winona to attend Board meetings and our own General Conference. Returning home after the conference, we assumed the task which is ours and have been busy since then. The first was planning and getting ready for Rally Day. It was a splendid success everything considered. We have had rain every Sunday for seven successive ones. But we forged right ahead. Our fall communion service was held last Sunday evening with a fairly good attendance and the usual fine fraternal spirit prevailed. The Sunday school was reorganized with Brother J. G. Dodds as superintendent with a corps of assistants that mean business and we are hoping for one of the best years we have had. We rejoice in the splendid reports from our brethren and ask an interest in behalf of our work here with these fine people.

HEBREWS 11:24-26

"He esteemed the reproach of Christ"—put that in one hand; "Greater than the treasures of Egypt"—put that in the other hand. He esteemed reproach, contumely, contempt, derision plus right, more than all the treasures of Egypt plus unrighteousness. He did not mind a scar; some scars are ornaments. Is there a more splendid word in all the supremely splendid Epistles of St. Paul than "I bear about my body the marks of the Lord Jesus"? "Do you see that?" he said; "I was stoned there;" and I think he pulled up his sleeve and said: "Do you see that? It is the mark of the scourge. If you could only see my back; I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus;" he exhibited them as some men parade their degrees. His scars were his crown. So Moses refused, he turned his back upon majesty; he chose, he preferred oppression and weakness.—"Great Texts."

"DIED OF PRELIMINARIES"

By Bishop George A. Miller

I wonder how they will start a meeting in heaven! Will they do it always the same way? If not, a lot of preachers are going to have a hard time.

Night after night, hope springs afresh in the human heart, burning with a message and a chance to speak it to waiting audiences. Ask any missionary or other special speaker. I hopefully approach the pastor, "May we not make the introduction very brief tonight, brother?" I suggest.

"Certainly, certainly."

And then he waits fifteen minutes to be sure they are all there, sings three hymns to give the stragglers a chance, has a long prayer, a responsive reading, a solo, and an introductory address. Forty-five minutes gone, a week-night audience weary and longing for home, a message discounted fifty percent before the first word is uttered. I implored a pastor at a Sunday evening meeting to please, please make it short, I really had something to say. Certainly he would make it short, but it took him fifty-five minutes to do so, and when I arose the people were beginning to go out. I wanted to myself. "Not many came at night," he said. I should think not.

I remember how when a young pastor, occasional lecturers expressed profuse gratitude for opportunity to begin after preliminaries that never occupied more than five minutes. I have come to understand it since I have become the victim of the pastor's propensity for form.

I have hinted, requested, begged, and implored, I have felt like locking the preacher in the parsonage and taking charge myself, but to no purpose. It has to be done. And tonight I will hopefully ask the brother if he can't make it short, and he will cheerfully promise to do so, and then use up a half hour of my time.

Some time I will find somewhere a man who can really put across a short preliminary, and I will mention him most favorably to Saint Peter, if I ever get a chance, after the preliminaries are over.—The Western Christian Advocate.

SAVE-A-LIFE SUNSHINE

For Sunshine Committees

This year the first Sunday in December is Golden Rule Sunday for the Near East Relief (151 Fifth Avenue, New York City). Write to Near East Relief for literature telling about it and suggesting ways in which you may help. Make it Golden Rule Sunday in your society. Set a goal to raise on that day at least $5 for the Near East Relief, if your pastor and superintendent approve of this suggestion. $5 will save the life of some boy or girl in Bible lands. Do this as a part of your Christmas work. Usually Juniors will help to raise money for their gifts by self-denial—denying themselves, for example, candy and ice creams for a week. Perhaps the pastor may want you to use the money for some other good cause. If so, carry out the plan of self-denial and follow the pastor's suggestions.—Junior C. E. World.

MINUTES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE, HELD AT BERLIN, OCTOBER 4-7, 1926

The 38th annual conference of the churches of the Pennsylvania District of the Brethren church was held at Berlin during the week of October 4-7. Here Brother W. C. Benshoff, ministers to the brethren in a fine new church edifice, amply and conveniently appointed for the needs of the entire church. Brother Benshoff made a very efficient host, and was ably seconded by his good people. The entertainment during the entire conference was of the typical Somerset county style, and those who shared it will but hope that some time again they may share the hospitality of these good people in another district gathering.

The attendance at the conference was very good, though not all the congregations were represented, neither were all the active pastors present at the gathering. The report of the credential committee showed a total of 34 ministerial delegates, 95 lay delegates, and a grand total of 129 credentials presented at the conference. Of course that does not represent the actual attendance at the conference. The conference was in fact one of the best attended—and most faithfully attended by the delegates—of the many district conferences which have been held in Pennsylvania.

Following a custom of the district, inaugurated several years ago, the executive committee had secured the services of Professor Alva J. McClain, of Ashland College, to deliver a series of Bible lectures. And true to his reputation, Brother McClain met the highest expectations of the brethren, delivering a group of four lectures which were especially welcome to the delegates because they dealt with topics which were not academic, but such as are the natural expression of the human desire to know more and more of God's will. Brother McClain will find a sincere welcome at the Pennsylvania conferences at any time he wishes to attend.

The report of Brother Albert Trent as secretary of the Pennsylvania District Mission Board was characterized by several interesting points. Brother Trent called attention to the fact that it was at the annual conference of the District at Berlin in 1905 that the conference authorized the District Mission Board to prepare and present before the close of the conference a budget covering an annual apportionment for Missions of $1,000.00. Up to that time the amount requested from each member for missions had been twenty-five cents per member. The Board recommended an advance to thirty-five cents per member. The recommendation was passed, but not by a unanimous vote. The next year the Board received only $669.68, which was somewhat short of the $1,000.00 asked. However the missionary gift of the district continued to increase until at the conference at Conemaugh in 1915 the amount as received during the preceding year was $1,250.00. But with this amount it was realized that it was too small to meet the requests of the brethren at many places for help, and so a motion prevailed to increase the apportionment to 50 cents per member. During the next year the receipts of the Board ran up to $1,725.04 indicating the approval of the district of the work being done by the Mission Board. 50 cents per member has been the apportionment for Missions in the district since 1915. Brother Trent's report showed receipts for the year of $2,749.84, and a balance from the year preceding of $2,071.36, making the total funds for the year $4,821.20. The expenditures during the conference year were $2,489.49, leaving a balance in the treasury of $2,331.71 with which to begin the new year's work. Each year a larger number of the congregations have been contributing to the resources of the Board, until this year but ten of the forty-two churches on the Board's list failed to contribute—and maybe some of them will be shamed into giving even yet. The Board gives support at eight different points in the district.

Two very able Missionary addresses were given during the sessions of the conference by Brethren Chas. H. Ashman on "Five Missionary Hows", and by W. C. Benshoff on "Strengthening the Home Base." No doubt the presence of Brother Clarence L. Sickles from South America during the sessions of the entire conference helped to make the missionary spirit of the gathering more pronounced. Brother Sickles gave his stereopticon lecture on the opening evening of the conference and spoke on Thursday afternoon on "The Needs and Problems of our South American Field." Brother Sickles won his way into the confidence of the delegates, and will doubtless find a warm welcome as he visits among the churches of the district in the months to come.

The sessions of the W. M. S. were well attended, and real interest was manifested among the women in the work accomplished during the past year. While the delegated attendance was not so large, the attendance at the sessions of the Society was good. The report of the secretary-treasurer showed a total of $700.69 handled during the year. These funds were gathered by twenty-four societies. Of this number the entire twenty-four contributed dues, while twenty-one contributed toward the African Mission Fund to which the Pennsylvania societies have pledged $350.00. The new officers for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. Clark White, Berlin; vice president, Mrs. W. C. Benshoff, Berlin; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Dyoll Belote, Johnstown. The women of the district W. M. S. were assisted quite materially in their deliberations by the presence of Miss Gertrude Leedy, General Secretary of the National W. M. S. who is also making a tour of the churches of the district in the interests of the work of the W. M. S.

Several profitable sessions of the district Ministerial Association were held during the conference, with some interesting papers and discussions. Action was taken looking toward the starting of a reading circle among the dominies, and several valuable suggestions were given the executive committee concerning books that will prove valuable helps to the ministers.

While the Ministerial Association and the W. M. S. were busy in their simultaneous sessions the Sisterhood Girls were also planning for the work they are trying to promulgate. Decision was reached among the delegates at the S. M. M. sessions to attempt to raise $5,000.00 as a contribution toward Ashland College endowment, during the coming year. A big task, but a worthy one.

The interests of the Brethren Publishing Company were presented before the delegates by Brother Quinter M. Lyon, editor of the Sunday School literature of the Brethren church. For the presentation of the plans for gathering the needed increased Endowment for Ashland College, Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Secretary, appeared before the assembly, and in his characteristically original and forceful manner laid the claims of the College heavily upon the hearts of his hearers. Brother Bell asserted that the churches visited thus far in Pennsylvania have responded heartily to his appeals, and declared it as his belief that he will be able to raise the first hundred thousand dollars in Pennsylvania.

At the Christian Endeavor session on Wednesday afternoon a report of the State C. E. Convention at Hershey in July was given by Robert Ashman. The aims and plans of the Quiet Hour department of the Christian Endeavor movement were explained to the assembly by Dyoll Belote, who is superintendent of the Quiet Hour department of the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Union. As a result of the brief explanation and in response to an appeal for signers to the Quiet Hour pledge, twenty-two signified their intention of endeavoring to lead a more deeply devotional and prayerful life by signing the pledge cards which were distributed. Brother C. E. Kolb who is now General Secretary of the Pennsylvania State Christian Endeavor Union, also spoke at this session, presenting the goals and plans of the great State Union. Explanation was also made at this session concerning an offer from the District Meeting of the Church of the Brethren for Western Pennsylvania for the use of Camp Harmony, a recreational and Training School center. Camp Harmony is located near Johnstown and has accommodations for about one hundred and fifty young people. The offer was referred to a committee for consideration and report at a later session. The C. E. Session was presided over by Brother J. L. Gingrich, president of the District C. E. Union.

On Tuesday afternoon the Sunday School interests of the district were considered. "Attendance Campaigns and Spiritual Progress" was discussed by H. W. Darr; "Home Extension Work," by Dyoll Belote; and "Better and Bigger Sunday Schools" by Quinter M. Lyon. Following the addresses three divisional conferences were held, the Children's Division conference being led by Mrs. H. M. Cook, of Meyersdale; the Young People's Division led by Mrs. John H. Glessner, of Berlin; and the Adult division led by A. L. Lynn of Pittsburgh. All the conferences were well attended and lively interest was manifested in the problems of each. The Sunday school session was presided over by Prof. A. B. Cober, of Berlin, Chairman of the District Sunday School Board.

The music of the conference was led by Brethren W. C. Benshoff and E. F. Byers. Special numbers of music were rendered at the various sessions, some of the numbers being furnished by local talent and some by various delegates. On Tuesday evening the choir of the Uniontown church attended in a body and gave a special number of song. The participation of the delegates in the singing was very hearty and sincere.

No interest of the denomination was forgotten in the makeup of the program. On the subject of Evangelism R. Paul Miller gave a very excellent address, while the Benevolent interests of the church and district were discussed by A. L. Lynn.

The Memorial Service, planned to be held at the grave of H. R. Holsinger on Wednesday afternoon was not as well attended as it would doubtless have been if the weather had not turned inclement and cool. Because of this fact the service was more brief than originally planned. Tributes were delivered by Dr. W. S. Bell and others at this service.

The business of the conference was handled with precision and dispatch. Moderator Ashman directed the transaction of matters of business with fairness and with celerity. Brethren W. C. Benshoff, A. L. Lynn, and W. A. Steffler served as committee on credentials.

The report of the statistician showed some interesting facts. Of the 41 congregations in the district 38 made report to the statistician. These reports showed a net gain in the membership in the churches of the district of 253, and a grand total membership of 4,805. 28 revivals were held among the churches of this district during the past year. 34 congregations have church houses and 11 have parsonages. The 34 church buildings have a total valuation of $565,700.00, while the parsonages represent an investment of $60,000.00. During the period covered by the statistician's report the ministers of the district received a total of $34,080.98. For the evangelistic efforts of the period $3,175.54 were expended. For current expenses $17,940.45 were paid out, and $26,818.37 for improvements. For District Missions the district contributed $1,731.50 for the period while to National Home Missions $2,205.60 were given. To the cause of Foreign Missions the membership of the district gave $5,045.09; to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund $826.27; to the Brethren Home $471.05; To Ashland College was given the sum of $727.04; to the Brethren Publishing Company $507.40. For calls not strictly denominational the district expended $14,118.54; while for all purposes the grand total of $106,702.97 was contributed.

ler served as the Committee on committees.

The Ministerial Examining Board gave a verbal report showing no calls to have been received for their services during the year.

In the Moderator's address on "The Care of all the Churches" recommendation was made that a committee of five, three clergy and two laymen, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough survey of the district relative to the problem of the pastorless churches, such committee to report back to the Conference of 1927. Provision was made that the expenses incident to the carrying out of the work of this committee shall be paid from the conference treasury. To place on this committee the Committee on Committees nominated the following who were duly elected by the conference: Dyoll Belote, W. C. Benshoff, W. A. Steffler, Albert Trent, Ira Wilcox.

Another recommendation from the Moderator's address which was adopted by the conference was that the per capita apportionment for District Missions be increased from fifty to sixty-five cents, the same to go into effect with the close of the conference of 1926.

A third recommendation from the Moderator's address was that the Board of Appeals shall be abolished, and that the duties heretofore delegated to the Board of Appeals be henceforth vested in the Board of Evangelists, in addition to those already enumerated in The Manual of Procedure. This recommendation was also adopted.

A motion was adopted that the entire Manual of Procedure be printed in connection with the Pennsylvania Conference Rules and By-Laws. Authorization was also given for the printing of a new edition of the Conference Rules and By-Laws. For the carrying out of this latter motion the committee on Committees named Dyoll Belote and Charles H. Ashman, who were by conference elected to perform the task named.

The balloting for conference officers resulted in the election of the following to serve in the several capacities for the ensuing year: Moderator, M. A. Witter; Vice Moderator, Herman Koontz; Secretary, Wm. A. Steffler; Treasurer, D. C. White; Statistician, E. F. Byers.

The conference secretary was instructed to convey by letter the thanks of the Conference to Brother Norman Statler for his years of faithful service as a member of the District Mission Board, and to request him to reconsider his resignation which he had presented to the Conference by letter and remain as a member of the Board.

The nominations of the Committee on Committees, other than those already named, were elected by vote of the delegates, and were as follows: Member Ministerial Examining Board, Chas. H. Ashman; Credential Committee, J. L. Gingrich, Ed Pritchard, A. L. Lynn; Delegates at Large to National Conference: A. D. Gnagey, Dyoll Belote; District Evangelists: Eastern District—M. A. Witter; East Central District—Chas. H. Ashman; West Central District, W. C. Benshoff, J. L. Gingrich; Western District, A. L. Lynn, Herman Koontz. Nominee for Ashland College Trustee, Chas. H. Ashman; Committee on Resolutions, W. S. Crick, Dessie M. Hollinger, A. R. Staley; District Sunday School Board, A. B. Cober, chairman, Albert Trent, A. D. Gnagey; District Christian Endeavor Union Officers: President, J. L. Gingrich; Vice President, W. A. Steffler; Secretary-Treasurer, Mrs. Walter Johnson; Field Secretary, Thomas Hammers; Pastoral Advisors—Dyoll Belote, A. L. Lynn. As members of the National Conference Executive Committee for 1927 the following were chosen: W. C. Benshoff, M. A. Witter, Mrs. D. C. White and Dyoll Belote were named as Members at Large on the District Conference Executive Committee.

An invitation came from the First Brethren church (Tenth and Dauphin streets) of Philadelphia, to hold the conference of 1927 with their congregation. The invitation was unanimously accepted for the first full week in October.

D. C. White, conference treasurer, gave his report as follows:

Balance in treasury Oct. 4, 1926 ..	$548.35
Delegate fees—Conference 1926 ..	217.00
Collections taken during conference	84.51
	<hr/> $859.86

The committee appointed to bring recommendations concerning the proposal of the Church of the Brethren to share in the use of Camp Harmony for recreational and educational training of the young people of the district recommended a favorable consideration of the offer and that the executive officers of the District Christian Endeavor Union, of the District S. M. M., of the District Sunday School Board and of the conference itself be constituted a committee to investigate and negotiate for the use of the Camp for a term of two weeks at some agreeable time during the summer of 1927. The recommendation also carried the proviso that the District Conference shall underwrite the expenses for the first year, if the plan is found practicable and advisable.

The report of the Resolutions committee was given by W. S. Crick, chairman of the committee, and read as follows:

WHEREAS, in the providence of a loving Heavenly Father, our lives have been spared and occasion and opportunity provided for our coming together again for this the thirty-eighth annual sessions of the Pennsylvania District Conference of the Brethren church, and,

WHEREAS, because of having yielded ourselves in measure to the leading of the Holy Spirit, we have had cause for rejoicing in progress attained, and having committed ourselves to programs of greater growth and deeper consecration, be it RESOLVED 1, That we acknowledge with gratitude the inspiration that has come to us through meeting in this place peculiarly sacred to Brethren people, and standing on ground hallowed by the tomb of Elder Henry R. Holsinger.

RESOLVED 2, That we thank all the speakers of this conference program, especially Prof. A. J. McClain and Elder C. L. Sickle, for the broader vision, better understanding and deeper consecration that we have because of their messages.

RESOLVED 3, That we pledge the churches of this district to a continued cooperation in the Ashland College Endowment Campaign being promoted by Dr. W. S. Bell, and increasing loyalty to our educational interests.

RESOLVED 4, That we give tangible and multiplying evidence of our realization of the church's commission to preach and teach the Gospel by making greater personal sacrifices to promote our home and Foreign missionary activities, and by utilizing the literature provided by our Publishing House.

RESOLVED 5, That we recognize the splendid work being done by the women's organizations of our brotherhood, in emphasizing Tithing and the Family Altar, and that we earnestly seek to obey the admonition of the Apostle Paul when he said, "Help those women."

RESOLVED 6, That we urge all the members of this conference to dedicate themselves anew to the defense of those fundamental tenets of our faith known as "non-resistance" and "total abstinence," avail themselves of the privilege of citizenship, and vote for men and measures that will consistently promote the cause of peace and sobriety.

RESOLVED 7, That we heed the appeals of the Holy Spirit and honestly study and practice the grace of stewardship that the program of our District Mission Board may be carried to a successful completion, and the Benevolent causes of our brotherhood be amply financed.

RESOLVED 8, That we express our appreciation of the splendid entertainment afforded us by the hospitable membership of the Berlin Brethren church, and assure them of our enjoyment resulting from their labors.

Respectfully and prayerfully submitted,
W. S. CRICK,
DESSIE M. HOLLINGER,
AUSTIN S. STALEY.

The sessions of the conference were brought to a close with a sermon by Herman Koontz, and the rendering of a Missionary Pageant by the S. M. M. girls of the Berlin church. Repeated comment was made of the very fine spirit which permeated every session of the gathering, and all went to their fields of labor with the conviction that it was "good for us to have been there." "The end of the convention is the beginning of effort" to make the year to come more praiseworthy, more fruitful, more blessed than the last.

Signed,
CHAS. H. ASHMAN, Moderator.
DYOLL BELOTE, Secretary.

GREAT YEARS IN THE NATION'S HISTORY

Interesting things have happened in 1926. Commander Byrd in a Fokker airplane, circled the North Pole. Photographs taken in Europe were transmitted on radio waves to America, and published in newspapers a few hours later. Gertrude Ederle, daughter of a New York butcher, swam the English Channel one hour faster than any of the five men who had ever swum it before. Is anything interesting going to happen in 1927?

For one thing, the Youth's Companion on April 16, will celebrate its HUNDREDTH BIRTHDAY. During 1927, the Companion will contain more interesting reading matter than ever before during its century of successful life. Consider what you will get for $2.00: 52 issues, containing 9 book length serials, 260 short stories by the most popular authors, more than 100 special articles, a weekly section for ingenious boys, called the "Y. C. Lab," a thorough girls' department and 52 pages for children. Also in each issue an extensive survey of current events, making it easy for you to follow the affairs of this busy world.

A Warning to the Churches

The election is over and it still remains evident that the country is overwhelmingly dry and that what the wets have been trying to persuade us was a sweeping turn of the tide in favor of liberalizing the Volstead act was in reality only the demonstration of a noisy minority. But the dry forces, and especially the churches, should not take too much comfort in that fact. There is a ringing warning throughout the land, telling of danger in allowing these demonstrations of wet sentiment to go on unchallenged and unmatched by effective counter efforts for the extending and fortifying of dry convictions. And that is just what we have done. We have made the two-fold mistake of minimizing the noisy efforts of the wets to persuade the people that there was a demand for a revision of the Prohibition enforcement act, and of failing to take adequate measures to counteract that influence and to build up the popular mind in the conviction that the liquor traffic is just as evil and nefarious as it ever was. And the result of this letting down of really earnest temperance effort is beginning to be manifest.

This is not saying that the Prohibition policy as such has failed or is likely to fail. It is sound as a policy and as a program it is proving remarkably successful, and, taking the country over, it has accomplished wonderful results. Nevertheless it has succeeded only to the extent that it has been supported by active public sentiment, and it will persist only to that extent. That sentiment was maintained active and powerful by every right means possible up until and through the war days. But when the reality and magnitude of the accomplishment of national prohibition began to dawn upon the church's consciousness, it experienced a feeling that "Now the job is done", and it loosened its grip upon the many instruments in hand for the focusing and strengthening of sentiment. Since then church people have largely depended on the force of the sentiment previously generated. But like a storage battery, it is beginning to run down, and unless there is very intensive and widespread effort put forth to keep the people educated to the fact of the poisoning and wrecking influence of intoxicating liquors, the unrelenting propaganda of the wets is going to weaken, or frighten, or deceive a sufficient number of the people who are now dry to bring about a practical nullification of Prohibition in many states.

The liquor traffic never was and is not now a modest, sensitive little creature that will betake itself away and hide its face in shame when it is told that its presence is not wanted. It is bold, brazen and strong. Though outlawed, it refuses to be exterminated. It clings to its evil existence with the stubbornness of the proverbial cat with its nine lives, and fights with the viciousness of the tiger. We struck it a stunning blow when we outlawed it, but when the churches practically ceased the struggle, thinking the enemy dead, it was soon revived and was fighting for its life more fiercely than ever. And the battle that it is putting up for an existence is not to be pooh-poohed. The forces of righteousness never put on a more intensive and nation-wide campaign of propaganda in the days of their most vigorous efforts than the liquor interests are at this very moment. Their plans are most wisely and thoroughly laid, their organization most extensively and minutely effected and the campaign strongly financed. Such vigorous and persistent efforts cannot but accomplish disastrous inroads on Prohibition conviction and morale, if the dry forces do not take energetic measures to counteract their influence.

And the first indications of such inroads are already in evidence, a fact which the dry secular press is beginning to point out to us, as witness the Cleveland Plain Dealer's statement in calling for a revival of temperance education:

New York, voting on a resolution urging congress to modify the Volstead act, returned a wet majority of something like 1,200,000. Illinois was at least 200,000 wet on practically the same proposal. Wisconsin voted 2-to-1 in favor of a 2.75 alcoholic content for beer. Nevada gave a similar majority in favor of calling a convention to modify the eighteenth amendment. Montana repealed its state enforcement code. In Colorado, California and Missouri the dries carried the day.

"The American Issue", realizing the folly of this relaxation of educational effort, and stressing the importance of a reviving of intensive temperance education, said in part:

The dries of the country may as well face the necessity for a systematic, nation-wide campaign of education against the evils of liquor, illegal as well as legal. . . .

It was agitation and education extending over long years which made prohibition possible. Continued agitation and education is necessary to make prohibition effective.

When the Eighteenth Amendment and enforcement law were secured, educational work slumped and attention was directed to the problem of enforcement. THE EDUCATIONAL WORK SHOULD HAVE BEEN CARRIED ON WITHOUT INTERMISSION OR DIMINUTION.

Public sentiment was built up through education. The multiplied evils of the traffic were made plain to every thinking man and woman. As a result 33 states were made dry by constitutional amendments and statutory laws, and then the Eighteenth Amendment was submitted and ratified. SYSTEMATIC AND CONTINUED EDUCATION DID THE WORK.

But when the dries loosed their efforts in these directions, wet organizations and wet newspapers began the work of undermining and destroying the dry sentiment which had been built up through the years.

Wets went on the theory that what the dries accomplished in a constructive way could be undone in a destructive way. They believed the people would forget the saloon and all it stood for. Never has the United States witnessed such a flood of propaganda as the wets have turned loose during the past two years. THE DELUGE IS GREATER NOW THAN AT ANY TIME SINCE PROHIBITION HAS BEEN IN OPERATION.

This campaign of the wets could not possibly have been nearly so effective if the churches had not let down in their educational efforts in behalf of temperance. Premier Ferguson of Canada has also placed his finger upon this point of weakness. Ontario is to vote in general election on December 1, and Prohibition seems to be the chief issue. Judging by election figures dry sentiment has fallen off in the province rapidly in recent years and this conservative leader asks why it is, and then adds:

Does this changed condition not prove that there has been a lamentable falling off of temperance education and effort? Is it not a fact that . . . there has been little or no attempt to educate public opinion upon this important subject? Has the (temperance) act not lost public support because those interested in the cause of temperance have practically abandoned their work during the past seven years? . . . Our course has not been to advise and enlighten people but to coerce them by penalties and prison terms.

In line with this complaint the Cleveland Plain Dealer says, Prohibition came in the United States as a result of education. It may be lost by neglecting education and trying to substitute therefor the coercion of law.

We do not believe there should be a relaxing of effort at law-enforcement, but we are convinced that increasing difficulty will be experienced with the enforcement of Prohibition until there is a renewal of intensive effort at temperance education. Public sentiment must be refreshed in its conviction of the damning influence of the liquor traffic and also be marshalled and enthused for the enforcement of law, or we are headed for a still more serious period of lawlessness than we have already experienced. And chief in responsibility for this campaign of education and agitation is the church of Christ.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We learn of an interesting Homecoming Day service at the church near Terra Alta, Virginia, on which occasion Brother W. H. Miller was the speaker of the day.

District Conference secretaries, who have not yet done so, should comply immediately with the request of Brother O. C. Starn, General Conference Secretary and editor of the Brethren Annual. All copy should be in the printer's hands right now.

"Straight is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth unto life and few there be that go in thereat", because it is easier to take the broad course. The narrow way is hard and people, like rivers, are inclined to follow the line of least resistance.

We have another echo from the recent enthusiastic Hoosier conference held at Warsaw. Mrs. C. G. Wolfe writes from the women's standpoint and comments on a number of interesting features of the gathering, important among which was the program of the W. M. S.

The Mid-West District Conference, entertained by the church at Carleton, Nebraska, proved to be a very inspiring and helpful meeting, according to word from the Secretary, Brother W. R. Deeter. The conference is not large in numbers and the churches are scattered widely, nevertheless they are doing a splendid work.

The first report of the Layman's Day Offering is published in this issue over the signature of the treasurer Brother U. J. Shively. It shows good interest on the part of the churches participating, in the aims of the movement, but the vast majority are yet to be heard from. It is worthy of general support.

Brother Homer Anderson, pastor of the church at Mulvane Kansas, writes of the condition of the Lord's work at this country charge. He thinks an opportunity for a larger work presents itself in the town of Mulvane, where he has already arranged for a series of evangelistic meetings.

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor at Portis, Kansas, continues to find joy in carrying a heavy load. Besides efficiently directing the work of his pastorate he is a leader in practically every worthy community project in his section. The church work shows commendable progress.

Read the Business Manager's Corner and give Dr. Teeter your best cooperation in an effort to extend the circulation of The Brethren Evangelist. No pastor should think it beneath his office to push the circulation of his church paper. It is not commercializing his position, it is performing a legitimate duty and aiding in denominational propaganda.

Brother S. P. Fogle, who resides in Washington, D. C., and preaches for some of our needy churches in Virginia writes some items of interest relating both to his own work at Reliance Virginia and also to the Brethren church in Washington, D. C., where Brother Homer A. Kent is the aggressive pastor and where splendid progress is being made in the erection of a new church building.

Another new mission church is announced for dedication. It is the Second Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania and the date set is November 14. Brother Dyoll Belote is the hard working and efficient pastor and Dr. W. H. Beachler is the special dedicant and money raised of the occasion. We shall expect a report of the occasion, as well as a picture of the new building in the near future.

We regret to learn of the death of Elder J. W. Leedy of Manassas, Virginia, and in whose honor two of his intimate friends in the ministry are writing in this issue. We had the pleasure of meeting Brother Leedy several years ago when on a visit to the Virginia Valley and formed a high regard for his character and interest in the Brethren church. He will be greatly missed among the Virginia churches. The Evangelist extends sympathy to all sorrowing friends.

Brother E. B. Shaver, bishop of the Virginia Valley churches reports a meeting at Harrisonburg led by Elder I. D. Bowman, resulting in sixteen confessions. It would have been an inspiring sight to have been present and to have seen these two veteran and able warriors in the Lord's army carry on together. It is not surprising that victory was with them. May God abundantly bless these and others of the older soldiers of the cross who are continuing to endure the hardness of the battle.

One of the most fascinating pieces of mission work undertaken in the last quarter of a century is that in the hills of Kentucky, and through the years of its existence this mission has accomplished wonderful results. It has practically remade the district in which it is located and besides giving its young life trained by Riverside Institute for the leadership and instruction of the towns and communities round about, it has given of its product to the brotherhood. It is well worthy of our continued maintenance. We are glad for the privilege of presenting to our readers some pictures of the workers and students of Riverside Institute.

Brother J. L. Kimmel reports the dedication of the new church house at Fort Wayne, Indiana, which occurred in August. This marks a great accomplishment for this new mission point and redounds greatly to the credit of the pastor. Dr. W. H. Beachler had charge of the dedicatory services and the money raising of the occasion. The building is quite attractive, well located and adequate for the needs of the field for a number of years. This field is considered by Mission Board members as one of the very promising mission points, and it and the work at Winchester, Virginia, are two very tangible results of the intensive effort of the Home Board during the past year. There are numerous other prospective fields calling for such intensive effort and the progress that is possible for us to make in extending the borders of our beloved church is limited only by the extent to which Brethren people are willing to consecrate their wealth to God. Here is our challenge at this Thanksgiving. What will we do about it?

(The following item was written several weeks ago and crowded out for lack of space, but it is still timely.)

Dr. Graham H. Stewart, head of the department of science in Leland Stanford University, who with a group of forty-five other professors made a three months' observation of conditions in Europe this summer under the auspices of the Carnegie Foundation, stated recently in Cleveland his belief that the United States would ultimately be drawn into the League of Nations and the World Court in spite of herself. He said further:

"The League and the World Court are free of politics. The representatives at Geneva and The Hague actually are working to create an international body which will serve the world. Individual advantages are never sought. The League will live whether America enters it or not. The League wants America and is willing to make reservations to bring her in. But even without the aid of the United States the League is an actual living thing operating on a high plane of efficiency and free of intrigue."

The Evangelical Messenger is not optimistic about it and in support of its incredulity cites President Coolidge's attitude towards the action of the Geneva conference in adopting the report of its committee, that the signatory states acting together and by not less than a two-thirds majority should have a corresponding right to withdraw consent to the American reservations. The President has said that the European nations must accept the Senate reservations exactly as they stand or reject the American resolution of adherence to the World Court altogether. No other man in the president's chair could have said anything materially different, in view of the prevailing temper of American politics. But it is never safe to say the last word has been spoken, and it is conceivable and believable that when prejudice has been cleared away from American eyes and Christian internationalism is allowed to assert itself more fully on both sides of the Atlantic, that the nations of the world, the United States included, will move forward to a place of understanding and cooperation that will make for world peace and will lessen the chances of war many fold.

GENERAL ARTICLES

A Good Investment

By J. L. Kimmel

In this commercial age every one apparently is looking for a good investment. How many people are constantly disappointed by making poor investments.

The reason that people make so many poor investments is, they are looking for too large dividends.

But the best investments as a rule, do not pay extraordinary large dividends. If they do, you will not get a chance to invest. Because the stock is not for sale.

Now I have in mind a good investment. It is absolutely safe, pays very large dividends, and the beauty about it all is, there is plenty of stock for sale, you can get right in here on the ground floor.

You say, Well, that is fine, just what I have been looking for, tell me quick so I can make the investment at once!

Well! my friend, I am thinking of Home Missions as an investment. I know of nothing else that pays like that. Money invested in home missionary enterprises pays large dividends, is absolutely safe, and your money will go on doing good, and paying large dividends, long after you have gone to heaven to reap your reward for your devotion, and self-sacrificing life.

I think I hear the worldly man say—I do not care for that kind of an investment. I want my dividends here and now. No doubt there are a great many people just like that, who see only the physical things of life, and care not for the spiritual at all. Do you belong to that class, my friend, who value the material things entirely too high, and underrate the things that pertain to God, and everlasting life? For illustration, I say to a man, Give me ten dollars, I want to build a mission church in a city where we have no church at all. In this church the gospel of Jesus Christ will be preached to both saint and sinner? The saints will be fed with the bread of heaven, and become valiant soldiers of the Cross. They will go out into the activities of life; and let their light so shine, that others may see their good works and glorify their Father who art in heaven.

In this church the sinners will be converted, perhaps fifty, perhaps a hundred, every year. And they will go out into the world and tell about the joy that came into their lives when they found the Savior.

In this church, every Lord's day, the adults will study the holy oracles of God; and talk about the way that leads to heaven.

In this church, teachers filled with the Holy Spirit, will stand Sunday after Sunday, and instill the great doctrines and principles of the religion of Jesus Christ into the plastic minds and hearts of the little children. And, as a natural consequence, these children will grow up to be men and women of integrity and honor, of power and influence, and will go out to bless the world; and make it better.

In this church, young men and women will stand at the altar of holy matrimony and pledge fidelity and allegiance, one to the other, while life shall last.

In this church, the followers of the Savior shall sit again and again at the Lord's table, and engage in the sacred institution of his house, and get that blessing promised to the faithful people of God.

Then just think, that this church will be a missionary church too, and pay many thousands of dollars for missions every year, and the money you invest now will multiply a thousand fold, and go on doing good as long as the church of Jesus Christ shall remain here upon earth.

Nothing, however, that I say appeals to this worldly man. He cannot see that there is any value in anything but houses and lands, and stocks and bonds, and the material things of earth. In reply to all I have said, he simply smiles and says, Do you see that house across the street? I answer, Yes sir, I do. Well! says my worldly man, I have just bought that house recently and paid five thousand dollars for it; and I may have to spend several thousand dollars more before that house will be an up-to-date home.

And so this worldly man goes on pouring his hard cash into this house, until his bank account is down to the minimum. And being naturally of a very close-fisted disposition, he refuses to have his house insured. And now it so happens that just a little while before this man is ready to occupy his beautiful home, upon which he has set his affections, in which he has invested all his wealth—in some mysterious way takes fire and when the neighbors are apprized of the fact, this beautiful home is shrouded in flames and the idol of this man's heart goes up in smoke. And now this close-fisted man begins to realize that riches may take unto themselves wings and fly away. And that which sometimes seems to be a "gold edged" investment is no investment at all, but robs you of the last dollar you possess.

I well remember at our State Conference a good many years ago, when a prominent member of the church objected to paying sixty dollars for which his church was assessed. Yet at this same conference he invested five hundred dollars in mining stock and lost every cent of it. It was too much for the whole church to pay sixty dollars for missions to save the people for whom Christ died, but it was easy for him to give five hundred dollars for mining stock and lose it all. A poor investment!

Then answered Peter and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee: what shall we have therefore?

And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you that ye which have followed me in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses or brethren, or sister or father or mother or wife or children, or lands for my sake, shall receive a hundred fold and shall inherit everlasting life (Matt. 19:27, 29, 29).

A good investment—

Absolutely safe.

Don't you think?

Our Thanksgiving Offering---What Shall My Part Be?

Our Thanksgiving Offering

By M. A. Witter, Member Foreign Board

"How happy every child of grace who knows his sins forgiven." If anyone on earth has a right to be happy it is the Christian with his assurance of heaven's smile upon him and the hope of an eternity in Christ's likeness before him. Perhaps the richest joy that comes to the Christian or to any soul in this life is the joy of working together with Christ in the saving of the lost. To win one soul from eternal ruin sets heaven ringing with rejoicing and it sets the heart of the worker who has been used to that end rejoicing with a heavenly joy.

Our Home Mission Board is engaged in this blessed work of soul-winning right here in our own homeland. Some of the strongest churches in the brotherhood were a few years ago mission points receiving support from this Board. Now they are yearly pouring their stream of offerings into the home and foreign work of the church besides winning their hundreds in their own community. What a glorious dividend on these investments of former years!

And if the Lord tarries doubtless many of the mission points now receiving support from this Board will in a few years be numbered among the strongest churches and will be great soul-winning centers pouring thousands of dollars and many lives into the great work of making Christ known. How wonderfully God blesses the loaves and fishes placed in his hands for the feeding of the multitude!

At Thanksgiving time the whole brotherhood is given the opportunity to share in this great work. As an expression of our gratitude and thanks to Almighty God for the blessings he has granted to us during the year, we lay at Jesus' feet an offering to be used to the glory of his name in establishing churches in our own land. And what shall my offering be? Surely I will not offer to the Lord some trifling odds and ends left over after my selfish desires are gratified. Surely I will not want to offer the blind or the lame or the maimed out of the flock of blessings that have flowed into my hands during the year. But of the choice, the best that God has given me, this will I lay at his blessed feet and rejoice that I am granted the privilege of giving up something for the glory of his name.

Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

No father can train his children unless they are obedient. No teacher can teach a child who continues to disobey him. Pray God to imprint this lesson on your heart: The life of faith is a life of obedience. As Christ lived in obedience to the Father, so we, too, need obedience for a life in the love of God.—Andrew Murray.

"Freely Ye Have Received"

Of the Whole Gospel of the Grace of God

"Freely Give"

That Others May Rejoice in its Truth

What Shall My Part Be?

By A. B. Cover, Member Home Board

That question may be raised by every member of our brotherhood. It should be raised, if it is not. Church membership embodies certain privileges and responsibilities. When it concerns the problem of our mission work, it involves both privilege and responsibility. It is a privilege to obey the Master's voice, "Go ye." The outstanding privilege of service lies in sharing the propagation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. And if we are loyal to our church we shall deem it a great privilege to make possible the spreading of the "good tidings."

The Brethren church is facing a serious problem but one which may be solved according to the writer's viewpoint. Our foreign work, by the Grace of God, has grown to the extent that should bring rejoicing to every member of the brotherhood. It is marvelous! We want to keep our borders expanding; we must keep the ranks of the laborers filled. How are we going to do it? There is an affirmative answer: KEEP THE HOME BASE STRONG.

What is essential to keep it thus? A prayerful, consecrated endeavor to strengthen and extend the HOME Base. That means that we must give to the support of home missions so that the weak may be helped and that new fields may be entered and churches established. The policy of the Home Board is to center upon some field, deemed, "white unto the harvest," with our funds and men of ability to accomplish the task. It is a stupendous task in the presence of present day worldliness, but brethren, it is a challenge. Let us accept it! The writer does not like the expression that we sometimes hear, "we have a peculiar doctrine to present." I do not believe the Bible with its plan of life is so peculiar. We presume to state that Jesus Christ did not mean for it to be peculiar and that its heralds should make apology for it. Let us go forth to the task God has committed to us with the assurance that ours is a real task, but backed by the Word of God for which no apology is necessary.

Every brethren should feel proud of the work that has been accomplished. We do not want to retreat; we do not want to give up one inch of ground gained. But if we are not to do it, we must pray and give so that the Home Board may be enabled to build up the church in our homeland. It appears to be evident that God has given us the particular foreign fields which are ours for a very definite purpose. It should stimulate us to the utmost and make this Thanksgiving offering such as would indicate both PRAYER and CONSECRATION. The writer feels that our contributions in the past have indicated consecrated loyalty. The membership seems to realize that ours is a task worthwhile and is God-given. But in view of the urgent need, let us make this offering exceed any previous offering, that we may be able to go forward in the face of the enemy's guns, stimulated by the challenge of a mighty task committed to the Brethren church.

Layman's Day and the Student's Aid Fund

By Earl Huette

The Brethren church will need pastors and missoinaries as long as it is in existence and in increasing numbers. Not all of our young prospects for the ministry come from homes where there is enough money to send them through College. Still we demand an adequate education and training of every pastor and missionary before we will consider them for a position.

A few years ago, at one of our National Conferences, a group of Brethren proposed the establishment of a fund which would be known as the Student Aid Fund of the Brethren Church. From this fund worthy young men or women who plan to go into the Brethren ministry or missionary work are privileged to borrow money to assist them to go through a Brethren Church School. Applicants for loans are investigated as to their reliability, ability, etc., by members of the Faculty and only upon recommendation from the Faculty of the school will the loan be made.

After the student has finished his or her school work and is in the field, then the loan becomes payable. Terms are arranged to fit the income of the student. Therefore the money in this fund will be loaned and reloaned as long as there is a Brethren Church school. Many young men and women will be assisted financially toward preparing their lives for a really useful career in the Kingdom of God.

At our last National Conference, September 12th was designated as Laymans' Day throughout the entire brotherhood. The laymen of the church were urged to be responsible for the services of the day and to fully explain the Laymans' Movement of the Brethren Church and also to explain the Student Aid Fund. The collection for the day was to be sent to the treasurer of the Student Aid Fund. Thus during the current year the Fund should reach such proportions that would make it useful immediately.

Some churches found it impossible to have the above date fit in with their local program. The suggestion followed that a date suitable to each local congregation would be acceptable. Several churches have already responded and others will report in the very near future while still others will plan for later dates.

Here is our suggestion: As Brethren we cannot afford to omit any young man or woman from entrance into our College, who aspires to enter these special fields of service.

Our young people who will carry the burden of the church affairs tomorrow must be equipped much better than many of our present and former ministers. Many of the most outstanding leaders come from poor homes. Homes without funds. Therefore if the Brethren church in the future shall pretend to stand on an equal footing with other denominations, she must avail herself of every opportunity to seek out every person who has the power of leadership and who has consecrated that power of leadership to the work of the Master.

The Student Aid fund must be supported in order that these persons who are found may be assisted.

IF YOUR CHURCH HAS NOT ALREADY OBSERVED LAYMANS' DAY, do not sleep another night or eat another meal until you have made the first step toward:

1. Setting a Date.
2. Building a program.
3. Boosting for a really large attendance and offering.

This money is held in trust by a Board of Trustees composed of outstanding laymen of the brotherhood and the money is handled in a very businesslike manner and is secured by responsible persons.

Here is one Fund of which it can be said, "WATCH IT GROW—THE RESULTS WILL GLOW."

Dayton, Ohio.

Keeping Faith

By Bishop Frederick D. Leete in Western Christian Advocate

During the past year and more I have sought opportunities to hear preachers and to read sermons. Out of a score of pulpit discourses, I profess to have heard three or four which did not advise the congregation not to be concerned as to what they believe, if only their lives are all right. In the printed texts this popular strain is less evident, but is sufficiently constant to indicate the present tendency, which is to minify, belittle, and occasionally to scoff at anything like a firm and settled belief in specific religious teaching.

Once, when I was a layman, we had a preacher whose one and only theme was faith. I thought we had too much of it, but I would like to hear the man again, just to be told that it is worth while, not only to have a "will to believe," for which right William James ably contended, but actually to do so. In my own judgment, too many congregations are starving for the Word preached as if accepted and recommended with implicit confidence in its value.

In certain quarters, if one ventures to speak favorably of Christian belief, it is at once taken as if he were slighting or denying the importance of Christian living. It is a cheap, shallow philosophy which sets one of these vital acts against the other. If one is virtuous, does it harm him to think clearly and to have matured value judgments of religious truth? Whence come virtue, service, sacrifice, and whatever else may be connoted with the concept and experience of Christian living? Of course, even savages have some crude virtue, and in an environment impregnated with Christian idealism very evidently some who make little or no profession of religious faith live honorable and useful lives.

How much goodness and how much cleanness and soundness of living are to be found in non-religious lands and peoples? How long would Christian living last and do business for God where no one believed in the great gospel truths, and in him who if he was only a human phenomenon and without spiritual power and authority has no right to superlative faith in his nature and leadership? Think on this, and answer honestly the question, Should the world keep faith or lose it? If we say, It should keep its Christian belief, then tell us how this may be done if laymen in the pews and especially if preachers in the pulpit accept and teach a false antithesis between believing and living Christianity.

"The just shall live by faith" is a word which not only established Protestantism, but evangelical and all meaningful Christianity. What is this which Jesus says? "Have faith"; "Believe in me"; "Follow me"; "One is your Master, the Christ"; "Thy faith hath made thee whole"; "Today is salvation come to this house"; "To as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God"; "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent"; "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater"; "He that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die."

These sayings and many more like them are the basis of Christian teaching. They are true or they are false. They must be accepted or rejected. They must be taught or ignored. Christianity and the church, and more and more the faithful lovers of the truth, demand that they be believed and taught as believed. Nothing else will give humanity the saving knowledge it needs. Nothing else is keeping faith with Christ and his kingdom.

FINDING THE DEEP THINGS

The Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God.—1 Corinthians 2:7-12.

The deep things of God cannot be discovered by unaided reason. "Eye hath not seen;" they are not to be apprehended by the artistic vision. "Ear hath not heard;" they are not unveiled amid the discussion of the philosophic schools. "Neither hath it entered into the heart of man:" even poetic insight cannot discern them. All the common lights fail in this realm. We need another illumination, even that provided by the Holy Spirit. And the Spirit is offered unto us "that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."

And here we have the reason why so many uncultured people are spiritually wiser than many who are learned. They lack talent, but they have grace. They lack accomplishments, but they have the Holy Ghost. They lack telescope, but they have the sunlight. They are not scholars, but they are saints. They may not be theologians, but they have true religion. And so they have "the open vision." They "walk with God," and "the deep things of God" are made known to their souls.

We must put first things first. We may be busy polishing our lenses when our primary and fundamental need is light. It is not a gift that we require, but a Friend.—J. H. Jowett.

Let us never forget, that to be profited, that is, to be spiritually improved in knowledge, faith, holiness, joy and love, is the end of hearing sermons, and not merely to have our taste gratified by genius, eloquence, and oratory.—John Angel James.

True happiness consists not in the multitude of friends, but in the worth and choice.—Dr. Johnson.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

My Father's Business

By C. R. Koontz

(Opening Message of the Mid-West District Conference convened at Carleton, Nebraska, October 12-14, 1926)

TEXT: Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? or Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house? Luke 2:49.

These different translations are attempts to paraphrase a Greek pronoun, which would be literally "I must be in the things of my Father."

My purpose in selecting this text is not to direct your attention to Jesus' visitation with the doctors, but rather, his words to his parents. These are his first recorded words and what a message they speak!

As we assemble in this first session of this district conference, I deem it highly fitting that we address ourselves to the last three words of this text: "MY FATHER'S BUSINESS."

First, may I state a few conditions that sometimes exist—not only at conferences, but also at regular worship. We are in his house this evening. Can it be said that we are here primarily in our Father's Business? Or, have we met to visit relatives and friends, to have a good time, a little outing? I trust that we have all gathered to further our Father's Business in this part of his vineyard, and that while here you that are visiting with us may get to see your relatives, your friends, and that you will return with a larger circle of friends than when you came.

Again, it is possible to sit in a pew in church and not be in the Father's Business. Bodily present, but the mind is elsewhere. Sometimes we are eager to have a great crowd congregate with us, but it must be remembered that sanctity and religion cannot be rubbed off of pews. A crowd to be valuable must be of one mind, and that of the Master.

Just a word concerning the kinds of services. A movie is no less a movie and is no more elevating, though held in a church. A raffle is no less a gamble if done in the basement or upon the lawn. A service to be of value and worthy of God's blessing should contribute an uplift and spiritual vision to man's soul.

There are those who attend through force of habit. Habits are good allies but they are not sufficient. Others attend because they feel it their duty. Duty should be crowned with desire. Yet others attend because they feel it good business policy.

Now, beloved, I am not pessimistic, nor did I get up this morning with a grouch, but I make mention of these things because I am persuaded that they are among the things that thwart the success of many religious gatherings—and they are sometimes noticeable at conferences. Therefore, I wish to remind us of them and urge you one and all to keep constantly before you the fact that you are here on business for your King.

A study of the words just preceding these reveal an "inner compulsion" "I MUST BE IN." There is some difference of opinion among men as to just how rapidly Jesus developed: just how early he became conscious of his mission to earth. But this need not bother us here. If we will associate this statement with others that fell from his lips, such as "I do always the things that are pleasing to my Father" and "Not my will but thine be done" you will be persuaded that there was a very vital relation, a real communion between Jesus and the Father.

Before becoming absorbed in the details of this conference may we get clearly before us "Our Father's Business." May we briefly catalog its objectives. (The catalogs of today not only picture but also color the picture of the merchandise, so as to make it as real as possible.) I wish I could picture to you these objectives tonight, but I shall have time to draw only the bold outline, trusting that you will do the coloring.

(1) Our Father's Business is to reveal God to man. That was the mission of Jesus to earth, "to reveal the Father." The Hebrew writer declares that God revealed himself to man at different times and in divers manners, but in these last days hath revealed him through the Son. Can you picture all that is contained in that statement? The church is the custodian of that revelation. Other institutions may be working along this same line, but this is the church's supreme business. In the church should be the place where we can personally find God and commune with him. Entertaining such a view as this of the church and its worship, is the reason why I referred to entering the sanctuary in a passive attitude or with a pre-occupied mind. A Quaker once said: "I tell thee worship is hard work." Think that statement over and try it out!

This worship will be supplemented with the experiences and testimonies of the present and past ages. You may wish to think of it as Bible study, preaching and song. All right, color it that way. Add to this all the symbolism, make it just as impressive as possible, but never lose sight of the real purpose. The theater had its beginning in the church.

(2) He came to seek and save the lost. Do you know what it means to be lost? This does not mean that we are forgiven of our sins and given a ticket to heaven with a reserved seat to listen to the music and watch the party. We are saved to serve. Jesus said that he came not to be ministered unto but to minister. The pews are not to be thought of as bleacher seats for spectators to view a few performers play the game. We all are expected to play the game of life—and that seriously. You may color this Christian service, if you please.

(3) What is the Father's Business?

It is more than merely keeping the Sabbath day holy. It is more than promoting an organization, or even a denomination. A big church means little unless it is big in the giving of a vision and in the transforming power of the gospel. The Father's Business, through his Son as I see it is the setting up of the kingdom of God in the hearts and lives of men and women. The biggest business in the world. The best proof of the Christian religion is the Christian.

In conclusion, may I make it clear that I have not sought to minimize the specific work of this conference by not referring to it. I am aware of the fact that as a district we have a past, although being a new man in this district I am not so familiar with it. I am well aware of the fact that mission interests need a larger place if we are to conserve our strength and extend our borders. But the reason why I have not dwelt upon that important topic is because it will be cared for later on in the program. Likewise I am fully convinced that the statement "as goes our College, so goes our Church" is true. One of the really great tasks before us is the endowing of Ashland College permanently. This likewise will be stressed later. My aim has been to set before us the first thing, our Father's Business. When once this is clearly seen, I am of the opinion these other activities will receive greater attention, because they are activities of the church, which is the custodian of God's revelation to man.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Jesus Ministering to the Needy

By T. R. Arnold

OUR SCRIPTURE

And they went away in the boat to a desert place apart. And the people saw them going, and many knew them, and they ran together there on foot from all the cities, and outwent them. And he came forth and saw a great multitude, and he had compassion on them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things. And when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, The place is desert, and the day is now far spent; send them away, that they may go into the country and villages round about, and buy themselves somewhat to eat. But he answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred shillings'

MONDAY

THE BLESSEDNESS OF TRUST—Jer. 17:5-8.

'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus,

Just to take him at his word;

Just to rest upon his promise;

Just to know, "Thus saith the Lord."

—Louisa M. R. Stead.

TUESDAY

TRUST AND GUIDANCE—Psalm 31:1-6.

I am trusting thee to guide me,

Thou alone shalt lead,

Every day and hour supplying,

All my need.

—Frances R. Havergal

WEDNESDAY

TRUST AND OBEDIENCE—Psalm 25:1-5.

Trust and obey, for there's no other way

To be happy in Jesus,

Than to trust and obey.—J. H. Sammis.

THURSDAY

TRUSTING MIDST DANGER—Psalm 46:1-3.

O Savior, take my hand in thine,

For dangers round me press,

To keep me from the living way

And from thy righteousness;

But with thy hand to guide me,

No evil will I fear;

No ill can e'er betide me

If only thou art near.

—Effie S. Black.

FRIDAY

TRUST IN SORROW—John 14:1-11.

Then trust in God through all thy days;

Fear not, for he doth hold;

Though dark thy way, still sing and praise,

Sometime, sometime, we'll understand.

—Maxwell N. Cornelius.

SATURDAY

TRUST AND PROVISION—Psalm 37:3-7.

I do not ask for earthly store

Beyond a day's supply;

I only covet, more and more,

The clear and single eye,

To see my duty face to face,

And trust the Lord for daily grace.

—J. J. Maxfield.

SUNDAY

TRUST AND BLESSING—2 Chron. 20:26-30.

I have entered the valley of blessing so sweet,

And Jesus abides with me there;

And his spirit and blood make my cleansing complete,

And his perfect love casteth out fear.

—Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer.

worth of bread, and give them to eat? And he saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes. And he commanded them that all should sit down by companies upon the green grass. And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties. And he took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake the loaves: and he gave them to the disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all. And they all ate, and were filled. And they took up broken pieces, twelve basketfuls, and also of the fishes. And they that ate the loaves were five thousand men. (Mark 6:32-44).

OUR MEDITATION

"Come . . . and rest." There were two classes to whom this invitation was given, those mourning at the death of John the Baptist, and the apostles who had just returned from a difficult mission and desired to make a full report of their teaching and work. Christ himself was deeply affected by John's death. He had been a faithful herald, giving his life to magnify Christ. Rest was recognized by Christ as a necessity for man. It is intended to exercise a wholesome influence on the character. It is needed for the nurture of mind and spirit, as well as body. Rest is as much a duty as work. The mind must at times look away from things, as well as at them, if it is to discern clearly and soundly. The rest to which Jesus led them was to prepare them for further work. They needed to come into closer converse with the Master. Retirement is essential to the growth of true piety, and yet not alone by solitary meditations or raptures of silent communion with Christ can spiritual life be strong and deep, but by earnest work for him in the world. As the Master and his disciples were interrupted by the multitude, a new feature of work necessary to the development of the disciples opened before them. Christ's mourning for the dead was changed into compassion for the living. He always took the broad and inclusive view, and steadily held to his work, so that individual instances of affliction did not deject or hinder him. The multitude saw Jesus and ran to reach him.

Jesus "was moved with compassion toward them . . . and he began to teach them many things." The people had intruded, yet Jesus was not disappointed or annoyed. He endured the world pressure of surrounding humanity in all its phases. In the people we see a striking representation of the moral condition of the human family. In the provision for their hunger we see an exhibition of the blessings of the gospel. In the distribution of food we see the nature of the office of the Christian ministry. In the abundance of remaining fragments we see the boundlessness of gospel supplies. The miracle as a whole is a type of gospel provisions for the souls of men, an emblem of the work of the church in this world. All races, all ages, from the gray-haired to innocent childhood, may find in Christ food for their souls. Nor shall the supply fail until all nations have been refreshed. The power was in the hands of Jesus. The food, though supernaturally provided, was carried to the hungry by ordinary means. The disciples had to learn the absolute disproportion between the means at their command and the need of the crowd. It is when the power of man is confessedly inadequate that Christ interposes. The disciples brought to Christ the result of their efforts, the five loaves and two fishes, and in his hands they multiplied exceedingly. Jesus here manifested himself as the sustainer of life, but he employed men to minister to men, thereby teaching our dependence upon one another. He taught respect for his ministers as they act on his behalf. The miracle as to time and place encourages confidence in Christ in the most trying and destitute situations.

A young minister and his wife were on their first charge, where the financial support was meager. They decided they would not go in debt, but would trust the Lord to supply their needs. The worldly brothers of the minister's wife had opposed her marriage to a preacher and prophesied starvation and keen privation when she persisted in accepting the lot of an itinerant's life. One of these brothers visited them unexpectedly during this first year, coming late one evening and stopping for breakfast. It happened that there was enough for a comfortable breakfast, but after this meal was served, there was nothing left for dinner; no bread, no flour, no potatoes, absolutely nothing that would be sufficient for a meal. The brother was to be in the city during the day attending to business matters, and his sister was at a loss to know whether to ask him back to dinner or not. Her husband advised that this be done and that they would ask the Lord to supply the dinner. After the brother had left, the minister and his wife knelt down and told the Lord all about it, explained their need and asked him to provide for them, especially in view of the skepticism of the visiting brother. They asked the Lord to lay it upon the heart of one of two brethren in comfortable circumstances to supply their need. The forenoon passed and nothing came. Eleven o'clock came and still no food. The fire was laid ready for lighting, and the Lord was reminded that he was faithful who had promised. At eleven thirty a knock was heard at the door and the minister's wife hastening to open it, found a poor colored sister, a member of the church, with a large basket on her arm, while the perspiration ran in streams down her face. She said she had commenced washing that morning, but that something kept saying to her, "Brother S. has nothing for dinner!" At length she left her tub and going to two or three other members they had filled the basket and she hoped she was not too late. Sister S. shouted the praises of the Lord as she told the colored sister the experience of the morning. Then she hastened her dinner and at twelve-thirty when her brother came, another bounteous meal was ready for him. Near the close he asked if they had such good meals all the time, and then with tears of joy and gratitude, his sister told him of the answered prayer and how faithful God was, and the scoffer was dumb,—he answered never a word. The Lord is ever true to his promises.

OUR PRAYER

Lord Jesus, whose compassion for the multitudes and the needy called forth such great and noble ministries in the days of thy flesh, look upon us in mercy and mete out the needs of our hearts, we pray. For we are weak and wearied through lack of spiritual nurture and by reason of our lone-handed struggle with the evil forces of this world. Thou hast held out to us the strength and provision all the while and we had no need of languishing under our burdens, but we have failed to make use of the supply which thou didst offer us. Forgive us and make us more spiritually minded, that we may seek the bread that giveth life. And then may we have compassion on our fellow-men, who are vainly hungering and thirsting after righteousness and have not had any one to distribute to them. May we as we received the bread of life broken and blessed by thy hands not withhold it, but freely give unto those we meet, even as thou hast given unto us. And in all things may we trust thee, and praise thee for thy goodness and mercy unto us. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Joshua Renewing the Covenant

Scripture Lesson—Josh. 24:14-25.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 107:1-9.

Golden Text—Choose you this day whom ye will serve; . . . but as for me and my house, we will serve Jehovah. Joshua 24:15.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

The last two chapters of Joshua are either two reports of the same address or two addresses given on the same occasion—one to the officers and leaders, the other to a great assembly. The only importance of the question is its bearing on the structure of the book.

The conquest of Canaan was practically ended, and Israel was settling down into the new home. Joshua determined to make one solemn appeal to them before he died, to strengthen them in their high resolve of obedience to Jehovah. Joshua 24:1-13 is a summary of their past history, recounting all that Jehovah had done for them in the past as a motive for trusting and obeying him in the present.

Decision Day

We are approaching the close of the old year, and our entrance upon a new year. The lesson for today would be a good one for the last day of 1926, but we can take this time before the end of the year to ponder carefully all that a decision for God may mean. Those of us who have trusted God for years can still find plenty they would like to change in their lives.

Look over the past, during these final weeks, note what you wish to change, and decide what kind of a year you propose to make the new year. The most essential thing to do for the new year is to decide that as for you you will serve the Lord with all your heart and mind and strength. That you will trust him as your Guide, and Helper, and Savior. There are few of even those who have given themselves to God in consecration that measure up to their own desires in this.

Having done this, you may well listen carefully to the words of President David Starr Jordan in his "Appeal to Boys" which he made many years ago. This "Appeal" is easily adaptable to girls, to men, and to women. It contains a principle which never grows out-of-date, nor stale, no matter how many years may have passed since it was first spoken, nor how much customs may have changed meanwhile.

"Your first duty in life is toward your afterself. So live that your afterself—the man you ought to be—may in his time be possible and actual. Far away in the years he is waiting his turn. His body, his brain, his soul, are in your boyish hands. He cannot help himself.

"What will you leave for him?"

"Will it be a brain unspoiled by lust or dissipation, a mind trained to think and act, a nervous system true as a dial in its response to the truth about you? Will you, Boy, let him come as a man among men in his time? Or will you throw away his inheritance before he has had a chance to touch it? Will you turn over to him a brain distorted, a mind diseased? A will untrained to action? A spinal cord grown through and through with the devil grass of that vile harvest we call wild oats?

"Will you let him come, taking your place, gaining through your experience, hallowed through your joys, building on them his own? Or will you fling his hope away, decreeing wanton-like that the man you might have been shall never be?"

"This is your problem in life—the problem of more importance to you than any or all others. How will you meet it, as a man or as a fool? When you answer this we shall know what use the world can make of you."

Two Lives to Live

The appeal quoted above applies to the life that now is—the life of the human being in the world of sense. There is another life for us, and this too is conditioned about

A certain Bishop had these lines on his Christmas card this year, according to the Church of England Newspaper:

"Give me a good digestion, Lord
And also something to digest.
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
With sense to keep it at its best,
Give me a healthy mind, good Lord,
To keep the pure and good in sight,
With sense to keep it at its best.
But finds a way to set it right.
Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine, or sigh.
Don't let me worry overmuch
About the fussy thing called "I."
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke;
To get some happiness in life,
And pass it on to other folks."

—Living Church.

this choice. "The Lord Jesus tells us that beyond this little life there is a life which is 'better than all the golden fancies of all our golden dreams.' It is the heritage of the brave and true, and he says to us: 'Have you the courage to choose it and to face suffering and sacrifice that you may attain it and be fit for its enjoyment?' This is his appeal."

The Value of Covenants

Parents dedicate their children to God, making a solemn covenant to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The home is established on a covenant, the marriage vow. When new citizens come here, they covenant to be loyal to this nation. When a President takes office, or a judge assumes the ermine, or a soldier enters the army, a new and binding covenant is made. The greatest of secular organizations, the League of Nations, is bound together by a covenant.

It is well that, in accordance with all other important human affairs, a covenant forms the entrance to our life as a Christian, our life in the church. This covenant has two parties, Christ and the Christian. We promise to trust; Christ, to protect and guide. We promise to obey and serve; Christ to bless and keep. Each of our promises Christ matches with one far greater. To enter this covenant is the greatest human privilege. It leads to our highest glory and richest happiness. It brings us numberless gains here below, and in the world to come, eternal life.

Choose Ye This Day Whom Ye will Serve. Note the word "Serve." It is not a nominal allegiance, it involves labor, discipline, suffering, and the greatest of all possible rewards.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL IN NEW ZEALAND

Encouraging items concerning Sunday school work in New Zealand are indicated in the annual report of Rev. L. B. Busfield, Secretary of the Auckland Sunday School Union. The churches are evincing a keen desire to build up the religious educational work of their respective denominations. There are now quite a considerable number of men and women whose time and energy is wholly devoted to Sunday school and Bible Class work. Conferences of Youth Workers are becoming popular and profitable. Earnest attention is being given to the problem of training teachers. The efforts of the various provincial bodies in this respect are worthy of all praise. Young people are being trained to regard Sunday school leadership as a life vocation.

In the South Seas Exhibition recently held for several months in Dunedin, a Religious Educational Court was an established and popular feature.

New Zealand is particularly fortunate in having a very effective and well organized Bible Class Movement and it is to this movement that the churches look for leaders in church and Sunday school enterprise. Students in theological colleges are now being given some instruction in religious pedagogy and are doing practical Sunday school work to enable them to be better fitted for future leadership. Libraries for Sunday school teachers are being established in various parts of the Dominion and an earnest inquiry exists which betokens better things.

DOING ONE'S DUTY

He who does not do his duty in this world will never do his duty in any world. He who does not do his duty to his brother will never do his duty to his God. I am bound to put my whole strength and energy and wisdom into my business. To be lackadaisical, half-hearted, so taken up with things above as to be slipshod in my dealings with things below, is to serve neither God nor man; to serve neither this world nor the next. Because I am a Christian I am bound to be earnest and indeed enthusiastic in all that makes for the welfare of the place in which I live, and of the people about me, and of the nation to which I belong. He will never do his duty as a Christian who does not do his duty as a citizen. I am unworthy of my liberties unless I seek to extend to other the good that has been conferred upon me. Surely there is nothing more cowardly than that which seems to say: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, to run away from it!"—Mark Guy Pearse.

Forty Books for Boys and Girls

While it is not possible to furnish a list containing all the books that boys and girls should read before they are sixteen, the Bureau of Education offers as a guide the following reading course which is intended merely to furnish suggestions for selecting books for children:

"Little Women," by Louisa M. Alcott; "Robinson Crusoe," by Daniel Defoe; "Tanglewood Tales," by Nathaniel Hawthorne; "Uncle Remus: His Songs and Sayings," by Joel Chandler Harris; "Andersen's Fairy Tales," by Hans Christian Andersen; "The Jungle Book," by Rudyard Kipling; "Alice in Wonderland," by Lewis Carroll.

"Heidi," by Johanna Spyri; "The Arabian Knights," "The Adventures of Odysseus," and "The Tale of Troy," by Pardiac Colum; "The Oregon Trail," by Francis Parkman; "Hans Brinker; or The Silver Skates," by Mary Maples Dodge; "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," by Mark Twain; "Swiss Family Robinson," by Johann David Wyss; "The Merry Adventures of Robin Hood," by Howard Pyle; "Captains Courageous," by Rudyard Kipling; "The Boy's King Arthur," by Sir T. Mallory.

"Ivanhoe," by Sir Walter Scott; "Æsop's Fables," "The Water Babies," by Charles Kingsley; "A Child's Garden of Verses," by Robert Louis Stevenson; "Master Skylark," by John Bennett; "Little Men," by Louisa M. Alcott; "The Little Lame Prince," by Dinah Mulock Craig; "Gulliver's Travels," by Jonathan Swift; "The Boy's Life of Abraham Lincoln," by Helen Nicolay; "The Story of a Bad Boy," by Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

"The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," by Mark Twain; "Grimm's Fairy Tales," "The Story of Dr. Doolittle," by Hugh Lofting; "The Wonderful Adventures of Nils," by Selma Lagerlof; "Joan of Arc," by Mark Twain; "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," by Kate Douglas Wiggin; "The Man Without a Country," by Edward Everett Hale; "Men of Iron," by Howard Pyle; "Understood Betsey," by Dorothy Canfield; "A Dog of Flanders," by Ouida; "Treasure Island," by Robert Louis Stevenson; and "Just So Stories," by Rudyard Kipling.

WHY I LOVE THE BIBLE

Because it glows with the light and love of Christ; because it shows me him who walked the earth and hung upon the cross, that he might save men such as I; because it brings me what he revealed of the living God and Father, whom to know is life eternal.

Because it shames me, inspires me, and calls me upward. It is the book of faith and hope and love, of comfort, holiness, and power, of salvation and eternal life. It is my truest visible guide to the right knowledge and experience of God, the true estimating of myself and my life, and the spirit in which I may live worthily with men.

Because out of it I may gather, and have gathered, a little book most precious, a Bible from within the Bible, which I bind to my heart and carry in my memory and have within lights and darkness, a treasure of the strongest and sweetest words for the soul that were ever known.—Williaw Newton Clarke.

SUGGESTION

Is your pray meeting well attended? What is the trouble? Have you canvassed the community? Did your large attendance continue after the contest? Is the meeting dry? What is the solution? There are many various solutions to such problems and many more we might mention. Perhaps the leader of a meeting is the most important character. Little do they realize the bigness of the place they are trying to fill. Who is the next leader? Do they have the material sufficient to make a success? The leader should have the following B's in mind:

Be prepared.
Be on time.
Be prayerful.
Be resourceful.
Be sociable.
Be helpful.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for November 21)

Real "Thank Yous" John 15:12-14

Once upon a time a little boy named Bobby was attending church just like all little boys and girls ought to do. He was sitting on the front row, looking very sober and listening very closely to the sermon which his pastor was preaching. Just like all boys and girls, he forgot to listen sometimes, but on this particular Sunday the preacher was telling about some man who loved people and who was always doing things for people. One time near the end of the sermon Bobby heard these words.

"This Man of love always blessed the little children. He has blessed every child in our church today, for he has given them parents who are Christian and has told these parents how to live. I wonder how many boys and girls have thanked him for this blessing. Children are usually taught to thank people who give them things but do you children thank Jesus for his love and his blessing and for giving you Christian parents?"

That night when Bobby said his prayers, he added these words to the prayer.

"Dear Jesus, I do thank you for blessing me. I thank you for my kind mother and father, too."

Now Bobby's mother heard him make this prayer, so she told him a story before he went to sleep, and her story was about saying Thank You to Jesus by doing things for others and by always being thoughtful for others.

The next morning Bobby thought about the sermon and about his mother's story as he dressed and he decided that he was going to spend all that day saying Thank You to Jesus. As he went into the dining room, his mother was saying to his father:

"We ought to have that wood all stacked under the shed because it is going to snow pretty soon and when it does it will make the wood too wet to burn good. Still I haven't time to do it and I know you are too busy at the farm work."

As soon as breakfast was over Bobby put on his old coat and soon he was very busy and very happy stacking the wood. He got cold and tired before the job was finished, but he stuck to it and by the middle of the afternoon he had the job all finished. Then he went into the house to rest a little. His mother smiled very happily when he came in and said:

"You have said Thank You today by doing as well as by saying it in words and I am proud of you, Bobby."

When Bobby started over to the home of his chum to have a nice time playing that evening, he passed an old lady carrying a basket of eggs to town. After he had passed her Bobby began to think about his day of Thank Yous. Then he turned back and instead of playing that evening he carried the basket to town for the old lady who needed money and had no other way of getting it but that of taking those eggs all the way to town. As they walked along, the woman told the small boy about her life and work. She told him that she had to work very hard but that she was thankful that she had plenty to eat and wear, and so Bobby learned about a new thing to say Thank You for.

It was late when he got home that night and his mother asked if he had had a good time playing, so he told her about his trip to town, and again his mother was proud of him. As he went to bed that night his mother told him another story about a little boy who said Thank You to his mother and to Jesus by the things he did as well as the things that he said. But the nice thing about this story and the thing that Bobby liked was that this time his mother called the hero of her story Bobby, and the things that Bobby of the story had done to say Thank You were stacking the wood for nearly a whole day and then helping an old lady who had a heavy load to carry a long distance.

Bobby was sleepy from his hard work, but before he closed his eyes and went to Shut Eye Town, he knelt beside his bed and told Jesus Thank You for his blessings and said, "I want to do many things in my life that will say Thank You as well as my words."

The Dedication of the First Brethren Church of Fort Wayne, Indiana

The dedication of the church took place August 22nd, 1926. We were ready for the dedication August 1st, but on account of the heavy rain on that day, we were compelled to postpone the event until three weeks later.

Dr. William Beachler had charge of the services; and preached twice on the first day, and three times on the second occasion.

The church is located on East Leith street, and is within six blocks of the center of the population of the city.

The lot is 47 feet by 150 feet, and it is on a good street, in a fine residence part of the city. I am convinced more and more that we have made no mistake in the location.

The church is 30 by 40 feet, and is a frame building, painted white.

It contains fourteen very beautiful art glass windows, and in addition three doors which also have art glass windows.

The main auditorium has circular pews and the Sunday school room straight pews. Above the Sunday school room there is a balcony, with 38 opera chairs, and in the church tower there is a fine room for boys of the Sunday school.

There is a basement under the whole church. This gives us a large social room for Sunday school purposes and social functions. In this room the baptistry is located. Then a kitchen for the ladies to use for special occasions, the furnace room, and two toilets. A very complete and commodious church indeed.

The cost of the church, fully completed and equipped, will be nearly eight thousand dollars; including the lot it will mean nearly ten thousand dollars for the plant.

To buy this lot and build this church was made possible, by the Home Mission Board, the Sunday schools, Woman's Missionary Societies, and the people of Indiana.

When the Mission Boards met on February 9th, 1926, there was not a dollar in sight. But by the help of God and the kind friends of the Fort Wayne Mission, the work was accomplished.

On day of dedication we succeeded in raising two thousand, five hundred dollars, and we hope and pray that some day, not in the

The International Conference on the Christian Mission in Africa

By Leslie B. Moss

A little seaside town in Belgium, Le Zoute by name, has been the scene of a Conference of missionary forces during the week of September 14-20. If we count Africa as only one, thirteen countries have been represented and sixty-three mission societies from Europe, America, and South Africa have contributed to the personnel.

The purpose of the conference was to study the rapidly changing and developing conditions in the various parts of Africa, and to try to discover how the missionary forces might more effectively relate themselves to these conditions in order to more rapidly advance the Kingdom of God. It was clear that the time had come for all the missionary interests to come together for this purpose and under the auspices of the International Missionary Council this meeting was at last brought about.

The delightful fellowship of the nearly two hundred and fifty people present has been productive of increased understanding and sympathy. Both native Africans and American negroes have had large opportunity to express their hopes and convictions. National barriers have been forgotten in the earnestness to lay before the conference the experience of every group.

The plan of the program in general divided the subjects for discussion under five general heads. Evangelism claimed first attention on the opening morning of the conference. The second morning was devoted to Education. The African church and its Problems, and Racial Contacts and Cooperation each occupied a morning session. During the afternoon hours sectional meetings were held to discuss more adequately problems brought out in these morning meetings. In addition Health and Native Welfare was the subject of study of one section. The evening sessions of the conference were devoted to addresses on more general subjects and by government representatives and other philanthropic agencies.

Each of the sections met on three afternoons and formulated a series of resolutions which were considered and adapted by the whole conference on the closing day.

The significance of this conference cannot be over-emphasized. Cooperation might be called the keynote of its deliberations. It has been a revelation to many who had little conception of the amount of effort or the quality of work which is being done both by missionary agencies and by governmental forces. Of course there was implicit in the mere holding of the conference the fact that the missionary enterprise recognizes many of its present shortcomings and evidences its desire to improve the situation. To this end certain resolutions of very far-reaching importance were adopted. The character of some of these only can be indicated in so brief a space but the more important are mentioned under appropriate headings.

Health and Native Welfare

The increased utilization of mission schools for the spreading of knowledge regarding health matters.

A request to the International Missionary Council to explore the possibility of securing a larger measure of cooperation between missions and other agencies in a definite and united campaign against disease.

Language and Literature

Welcome to the newly established International Institute of African Languages and Cultures and recommendations that missions and mission boards cooperate with it.

An emphasis on the importance of missionary bodies laying out for themselves a program of publication of Christian literature for their work.

That attention be given to the preparation of adequate literature for helping the African church in its effort to evangelize the Moslems.

That steps be taken to emphasize the immense importance of cooperative effort in developing adequate literature.

Economic Matters

That African natives should be more clearly protected in their holdings of land because of the great significance which this has in the proper development of the people.

The African should be protected from exploitation in the sale or compulsory use of his labor.

Education

The resolutions under this head are too extensive to summarize briefly but they outline a most significant policy for the carrying on of educational work throughout equatorial and South Africa. The use of the vernacular and the problems of religious education were also strongly considered and resolutions adopted.

Evangelism and the Church

The main effort of the Christian church is the carrying of the evangel to those who have not received it and this purpose was set forth in strong terms.

The highly devotional and spiritual life of the conference together with the very rare quality of interchange of opinions on a uniformly high level make it one that will exert a very large influence on mission, and probably on government, thought and planning for years to come.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

PORTIS, KANSAS

The work here is going in the usual good way. We have many things for which to be thankful and some thing we would like to see realized. However with all the forward look to things hoped for, we still have reason to rejoice for the good which God has sent our way. We closed the church year with banners flying, on September 30th. All local bills are paid. In the church, Sunday school and other auxiliaries we had a surplus balance. And this on top of one of the "shortest crop years" in many a season. One man said: "It just doesn't seem possible, but I guess it is true." Some churches here in the west have almost closed their doors when it comes to being able to employ a minister or to have regular services, as the summer drouth was quite extensive—affecting most all of north-west Kansas. We haven't missed a service and will continue to carry on our full force of activities as heretofore, and with the Lord's help and guidance we shall take another venture on faith, as we did a year ago.

Our Sunday school averaged for the church year 112 plus up to September 30th, and for the first 3 quarters of 1926—118. For October our average has been 122. We are hoping our attendance will hold up through the winter as it did through the summer, in spite of the fact that many of our people have moved and are moving away to hunt work.

Our Christian Endeavor is still running good, and our President, Miss Elizabeth Wagner, has the honor of being President of the District Christian Endeavor work for the coming year, composing a territory of 14 counties of Northwestern Kansas. We just closed the District Christian Endeavor Convention in our church. Over a hundred young people came in from various sections of the district, and we had a great time. Portis hospitality was shown to our visitors and was very much appreciated by them.

Our Women and Girls' Societies are still working and making things move. They both are putting on a Thanksgiving Bazaar, and will serve dinner to the public. Both organizations have assumed their share of the church's budget for the present year, and are making good at raising it.

We are now making ready for the coming of Rev. Dr Wood, of Fort Scott, Kansas, to hold our fall revival, which will begin near Thanksgiving time. Wood was once our pastor, and we have often coveted the privilege of working with him since we entered the ministry, but never has that privilege been ours yet; but we are looking forward to a pleasant and profitable season with him. Not many churches feel they can afford a revival campaign, but our people agreed, and we are thus making a venture through faith, and we feel sure the Lord will see us through.

We are now in our fifth year of work here, and we have many calls of service here and there. Up to November first we have given 111 sermons and addresses in 1926. We have delivered 9 addresses in Sunday school and Institute work over the county this fall. We go to a near-by town to address a high school soon. We recently held our County Council Convention 45 miles from our home. Many of the delegates came from 20 to 50 miles to attend, and it was one of the most pleasant and spicy conventions we have been in for many a day.

Ten of our people attended our District Conference at Carleton, Nebraska, and all enjoyed the hospitality and inspiration of the occasion. The district always affords a spiritual feast to those who go, and we were all helped.

The church has given us the privilege of holding a meeting out somewhere, and if any church feels like giving us a call to help them out we shall be glad to hear from them. We are ready to serve.

We rejoice in the good work accomplished and carried on elsewhere and all have an interest in our papers.

Yours for the Glory of the Lord.

W. R. DEETER.

A FEW ITEMS OF INTEREST

Just a brief letter with a few items that may be of interest to some of the readers of the Evangelist. Brother Kent recently sent the Evangelist notice of the laying of the cornerstone of the new First Brethren church, which has been much needed for several years. They are hoping to be in it by Thanksgiving, as the hall in which they are worshipping, the best that could be found near at hand, is situated where there is much noise, which disturbs the services. I can speak from experience as I filled Brother Kent's appointments while he was at General Conference. I was glad to do this, and to help out in any time of need, as under the heavy strain Brother Kent has passed through during his wife's illness. He was taken sick at the close of his sermon on Sunday morning, October 17th and I took his place in the evening. We had special prayer for the pastor and family. Last Sunday he was back at his post of duty in his usual health. Brother Kent is well liked by all who have met him. With the new church and adequate room for all departments, by God's grace, they will be able to do a great work for the advancement of souls.

I was so situated that I could not go to my Reliance, Virginia, appointment last Sunday and Brother Homer Lemon of the Washington church, who has been appointed to the ministry for sixteen or eighteen years willingly took my place and made the trip of over one hundred miles. There was some rain, but I have the word that they had a good meeting. Brother Lemon's test was, "God is our refuge." In behalf of the congregation and myself I want to thank him for this kindness in going to the Mount Zion church. Brother Lemon is teacher of the Ladies' Bible class of the Washington church and his class speaks well of him. He has taken part every Sunday afternoon for five or six years in a service at the Charity Hospital of this city, only missing a half a dozen times when he was away in other meetings.

We were all over last night to the annual convention of the D. C. Sunday School Council of Religious Education. I was privileged to attend with Brother Clay Dooley, the faithful superintendent of our Washington Sunday school. The leader of this district organization is Brother E. B. Shaver, nephew of our old and highly loved and faithful Elder E. B. Shaver of Maurertown, Virginia. He knows administration problems and is full of pep and energy like his Uncle E. B. Shaver. He knows what to do, what to say and how and when to say it.

Love to all the Evangelist family.

S. P. FOGLE.

HOMEcoming DAY

"Homecoming Day was observed at White Dale Church last Sunday. An all day meeting was planned, and a large crowd was present.

At the noon hour long tables were spread in the church, and were loaded to their utmost capacity with the good things to eat.

The church was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves, potted plants and ferns.

The afternoon service which was conducted by Rev. Wm. Miller of Grantsville, was especially fitting and interesting in the form of a Thanksgiving service for the bountiful harvest of the year.

A very delightful and enjoyable day was had by all and the feeling of harmony and fellowship was certainly manifested by every one present. Each one doing his or her part to make others happy. It was a day long to be remembered by all present.—"Preston Republican," Terra Alta West, Virginia.

MID-WEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Conference convened at the Carleton, Nebraska, Brethren church on Tuesday evening, October 12, and closed on Thursday evening, the 14th. The eight churches in the district sent delegates, Beaver City having the largest with 13, and Portis next with ten; others in less number.

The Moderator, Rev. Staley, being absent from the district, Rev. Koontz, vice-moderator, engineered all the sessions through in a commendable way, he being elected to the Moderatorship at the first business session. All but one of the speakers listed on the program was present to serve when the time came. The addresses and sermons were all of a high order and to the point, none deviating from the subject under discussion.

The singing was all inspirational and helpful. The chorus was ably assisted by the Beaver City orchestra on Wednesday evening and Thursday, with Mr. Davis as leader. Some of their special numbers were exceptionally fine.

Wm. A. Gearhart was present and gave a stereopticon lecture, and presented the Home Mission needs, and all had a better and clearer understanding of what "Home Missions" meant. Courtesies of the Conference were given to Mrs. Ronk and Brother Gearhart. Mrs. Ronk's presence was very helpful to the Women's work and the S. M. M. Girls.

Ministerial cards were issued to twelve active and inactive ministers and elders. There were 26 registered lay delegates.

The new officers are: C. R. Koontz, Moderator; L. A. Myers, Vice-Moderator; W. R. Deeter, Secretary-treasurer; Mrs. A. B. Cover, President W. M. S.; Mrs. Elda Deeter, Patroness of S. M. M.

The reports of our two mission churches, Fort Scott and Mulvane, denoted progress, with a good outlook for the future. The Mulvane church is located 4 miles in the country, but is seriously contemplating purchasing a church in town. This is under consideration of the Mission Board now.

W. R. DEETER, Secretary.

OLD DOMINION

I wish to say a word about our meeting at Bethlehem, Virginia, near Harrisonburg, where the writer is now acting pastor. Our evangelist for the two weeks' campaign needs no introduction as he is regarded by many as one of our best Bible preachers, free from modernism and all stuff that retards spiritual growth. Such were the Bible sermons given by Elder I. D. Bowman. There were sixteen added to the church and more are to follow. This section is well worked by the various churches and few are not connected with some organization. Upon the whole our people were delighted with the results and were made stronger in faith and spiritual growth.

E. B. SHAVER,
Mauertown, Virginia.

NOTES ON THE INDIANA CONFERENCE

First we would note the important change of dates. I am sure the women of our Indiana congregations appreciate greatly the change of the opening session to Tuesday evening. It gives us an extra day in which to make preparations to attend. We are grateful for the chance.

Second, perhaps we would note the happy frame of mind of our moderator throughout all the sessions, and his repeated use of the term as a means of keeping the assembled body in fine spirits. A very commendable trait of Brother Duker's, we are sure.

Then the attendance was worthy of note. The delegates came filing in for the opening session of the W. M. S. until some one said it looked more like a crowd at our Winona Conference. The auditorium of the Warsaw church was filled and for the conference sessions proper the lecture room was needed. Some had predicted a lack of attendance because of the location being so near Winona where general conference had so recently assembled.

We cannot refrain from mentioning the fact of dear Brother Rensch's presence this year, again taking his usual active part throughout the convention. Surely every one agrees that his presence lends inspiration and proves a very great blessing to such gatherings. It is no secret that Brother Rensch has endeared himself to our Indiana people. We appreciate the fact and wish him to know as much.

Then the Brethren Retreat located at Shipshewana Lake is seemingly drawing an increased interest throughout our district. Numbers of our brethren according to testimonials, are experiencing a "change of heart" toward said place. Measures to create better organization are on foot. A special Indiana Day is being planned for next season when all the churches are wont to meet at this beautiful place. The missionary interests of our state held no small part on the program. Brother Stewart brought his report with a smile this year because of a surplus of means. Who could go far wrong by giving to missions? If we had more faith in our Lord and less distrust in our workers and stations we would be getting nearer his commands, it seems. We have some very fine examples of Mission churches in our district.

We are not desirous of passing by the music of our conference. Brother Zumbaugh is such a pleasing yet unassuming leader, that everyone seemed drawn into the song service. Mrs. Mishler also aided materially in this part of the program and we hope to meet her another year. If we learned correctly she is a writer of hymns.

New recruits to the ministry were a feature of our conference this year. Brother Jones from the east seems to be a worker with young people and he will be sure to find opportunities in this district. Such a leader is greatly needed. Brother Coleman comes from the west and is an evangelist. Others are Rev. Fry and Rev. Spacht.

A note concerning our W. M. S. work seems important. Two sessions of an hour and thirty minutes each were held. Most of our subjects for discussion were brought before us in the form of papers this year, the committee assigning different women over our district with such subjects. A number of new workers appeared and this in my opinion, is as it should be. We feel confident there are any number of workers here and there over our district who should be used on these programs. It would be a fine way of learning who is who, and we ought to get better acquainted.

And so we might go on for there are other features of the conference equally as worthy of note. Yet we should not continue to use the space.

MRS. C. G. WOLFE,
North Liberty, Indiana.

BETHEL CHURCH, MULVANE, KANSAS

Some time has passed since there has been any report from this field. The work here has been handicapped by much rain. Much rain in Kansas means mud. There are no gravel roads and no pavement around Mulvane. That makes church going unfavorable.

Our plans have been hindered so that there is no news of much interest, though we are working away at the job. Since it managed to rain on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays all through September and was not much better in October, our plans for our Sunday school were hindered. We have had no business meeting for the past quarter of the year and so our plans for our revival are not made. However we think we can see one in sight.

The Presbyterian church in Mulvane has disbanded, and the church and the parsonage are for sale. It is a fairly good church house, large basement with large dining room, a new furnace, and a house far better than the one we worship in. We wish we could buy this and move into Mulvane. But as usual such moves find some objections. We have rented this church for a few nights evangelistic services in which we will bring before the people of Mulvane the doctrine of the Brethren church, and hoping this will put the Bethel church in Mulvane.

THE SUDDEN DEATH OF REV. JOHN W. LEEDY

It is not often that I take time to attempt to record the death of a friend for publication. Men and women are born, reared and die. Few get more than a passing notice of their lives in a publication. We live but once and die but once and our friends' death causes sorrow. A friend's death should be perpetuated in some way, and a public notice is one way of doing it.

Brother Leedy deserves more than a small notice in a publication with small type. He was a pastor in the church of the living God and the church will miss him in his labors for her.

Our brother was born in the Valley of Virginia and educated in the public schools of his day. When he came to the age of manhood he engaged in the business of a grain broker. Later he moved to Manassas where he was the active agent for a pulp mill industry.

He identified himself with the Brethren church when the division came in the Dunkard fraternity in 1884 here in the valley. He left a church where he had every opportunity to enjoy peace and quietness and in which he had long before identified himself and took chances with a new one with its trials and disappointments. He had convictions that could not be drowned by ease and old church ties. It was hard, very hard to break these bonds and ties, but it was harder to smother his duty to God and man and he went out as Abraham of old not knowing whither he was going nor where he would land in those trying days.

Brother Leedy was elected to the ministry in the Brethren church in the early years of our church and did much preaching when time permitted it. He was held in high esteem in his county and community, being the nominee of one of the major parties for Congress in the 8th District here in Virginia. He had held the office for a number of years as Justice of the Peace in his county. His death was a great shock to his many friends and his untimely death will be a distinct loss to the church and community.

I am not attempting to write an obituary of him, but leave that for those who conducted his funeral services, but I feel I owe our good brother a last parting word in these lines.

GEO. A. COPP,
Strasburg, Virginia.

ELDER J. W. LEEDY PASSES

Elder J. W. Leedy passed away on the 16th of October, having been sick only a few days. The church mourns the loss, but our comfort is to believe it is his gain. Brother Leedy was appointed to the ministry about 1886 and stood loyal to the principles and doctrines of the Brethren church. He with Brother Geo. A. Copp and P. W. Wisman were of much help to the writer in the battle for the Whole Gospel when the writer was the only active minister south of the Mason and Dixon line. These men were strong and courageous and much credit has come to their memory. Brother Leedy was faithful in his ministerial work which was without compensation. He was a good thinker and heavy reader, and strong on doctrinal themes. He stood equal to those who pose as trained men, never refusing to walk or ride to places and build up the work. He lived to see the principles for which we stood accepted by many of those who stood for tradition and order discipline. Brother Leedy began life as a poor young man financially but by his skillful methods he became a prominent farmer, and at one time he was in the Civil Service of the Government. This summer he was nominated for Congress to represent the Eighth District, by the Republican party. Had he lived we hoped for his election.

He lived at Manassas, Virginia, and the funeral was at Maurertown, Virginia. Upon this sad occasion the theme was "It is finished," by the writer, assisted by Elder Geo. A. Copp.

E. B. SHAVER,

A TELLING POSTER

"So—This is Canada"—a poster telling of the facts of moderation in that country, is being widely distributed by the Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement. The poster quotes various Canadian authorities to show that moderation has not abolished the saloon. Some of the points made are as follows:

Who Wants the Canadian System of Government Control?

IT HAS NOT ABOLISHED THE SALOON
But has changed its name to Tavern. In Quebec there are 563 Taverns; 489 Hotels; 100 Clubs; 59 Restaurants, where clients sit and are served with beer and wine. (Quebec Liquor Commission Report, 1924-5).

IT HAS NOT STOPPED BOOTLEGGING

In year ending May, 1925, there had been 4,806 complaints against bootlegging and blind pigs,—increase of 1,000 over previous year. (Quebec Liquor Commission Report, 1924-5).

IT HAS NOT DECREASED LIQUOR DRINKING

Sales of beer increased 1,000,000 gallons over last year.

Sales of hard spirits increased 32,245 gallons.

Sales of wine increased 89,000 gallons. (Quebec Liquor Commission Report 1924-5). This takes no account of illicit sales.

"Boisterous drinking and licentiousness common."

"Drunkenness among women increased fifty-three per cent."—Montreal Star.

IT DOES NOT IMPROVE MORAL CONDITIONS

"Vice shows itself in our city with hideousness and insolence. Prostitution in its most shameful form operates and flourishes in Montreal."—Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney-General of Dominion.

BRITISH COLUMBIA REPORTS THE SAME CONDITIONS

"The present system worse than the open bar, not only destructive of morals but results in general contempt for law and order."—Resolution of British Columbia Municipal Union.

"Bootlegging to extent of 5,000 cases a month ... in and around Vancouver." (The Hook ... an Anti-Prohibition paper).

"Bootleggers handle twice as much liquor as the Government stores." (Vancouver World).

MANITOBA BREWERS LAWBREAKERS

In 1925 every brewer in Manitoba was fined for violation of law, and in January, 1926, six out of seven were again convicted. (Premier Brakin, Liquor Controller Waugh, Chief Inspector MacLean).

doll to represent the various cities, as Miss Washington and Miss Washington, Jr., Miss Des Moines and Miss Des Moines, Jr., Miss Los Angeles and Miss Los Angeles, Jr.

"State Committees of Award are in process of formation," says Dr. Gulick, "who are to select from among the dolls bearing city names in their respective states, the one to have the honor of representing the State and to carry the State Colors."

"These dolls with State names," Dr. Gulick adds, "will be assembled in New York or Washington where a National Committee of Award will select the two dolls to bear the names, 'Miss America' and 'Miss America, Jr.'"

"Miss America" and "Miss America, Jr.," together with the two groups of Senior and Junior dolls bearing State names, each carrying its own State colors, will travel to Japan as a special group. They will be presented in a formal meeting to the children of Japan and will be intrusted for permanent exhibit to the Imperial Museum.

"Three thousand passports and tickets have already been issued from the Doll Travel Bureau, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and scores of new reservations and orders for passports and steamer tickets are coming in daily. The Doll Messengers will travel to Japan on various ships in November and December. The last party, headed by 'Miss America' and 'Miss America, Jr.," is expected to sail on December 20, so as to arrive in ample time for the Festival of Dolls."

The dolls with personal, school and city names will be distributed through the Department of Education of the Japanese Government.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

CRIST-PRICE—At the home of the bride on the evening of October 20th, Mr. George E. Crist and Miss Charlotte Price were joined in the bonds of holy wedlock by the writer. The bride for several years has been an active worker in the Washington church. She is at present a teacher in the Sunday school. The bridegroom while not a member of the Brethren church is interested in the work of the church and looks forward to worshipping with the local Brethren. After a brief honeymoon the happy couple will be at home in Washington. The Brotherhood joins in wishing for the bridal pair a long and happy life together.

HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.

WISLER-GINGRICH—Mr. Sarnel T. Wisler and Mrs. Alice L. Gingrich were united in marriage at the home of the groom, on the evening of September 25, 1926, by the writer. Mr. Wisler and Mrs. Gingrich were both faithful members of the Brethren church at Martinsburg, and we wish them many happy years together in the Lord's service.

JAS. S. COOK.

ACKER-BURKET—Melvin K. Acker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Acker of Roaring Spring, Blair County, Pa., and Miss Malinda C. Burket, of New Enterprise, Pa., were united in marriage September fourth. The bride is a popular teacher in the public schools and in the children's division of the Bible School. Owing to the bride's pastor, the writer, being absent on vacation, the ceremony was solemnized by the bridegroom's pastor, in the First Lutheran church at Roaring Spring, in the presence of a few members of the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom. A host of friends have assured Mr. and Mrs. Acker of their best wishes for a happy and useful life together.

BARR-BEACH—On July 15th, Miss Blanche Beach of New Enterprise, Pa., became the bride of William L. Barr, of Altoona, Pa. The wedding was solemnized at the home of the writer. Mrs. Barr is a member of one of the pioneer families of the Brethren church here, and has a host of friends and relatives. She is a daughter of Brother James Beach. Mr. and Mrs. Barr are making their home in Altoona where Mr. Barr is employed. May God's richest blessings attend them.

IN THE SHADOW

GARRET—Frank Garret, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Garret, was born near Gatewood, West Virginia, January 23, 1904 and was accidentally killed while working in the mines at Rock Lick by a slate fall September 22, 1926. He was aged 22 years, 7 months and 29 days. He is survived by his father and invalid mother with three brothers and three sisters. Seven years ago he united with the Brethren church

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

THE SHOOTING STAR

Last evening, when my mother dear
Was rocking me to sleep,
My drowsy eyes I opened wide
For just a farewell peep.

The stars were smiling down at me
With gentle, silver light,
When suddenly a little one
Went flying through the night!

All in a moment it was gone
Before I could say, "O!"
I wondered where 'twas flying to,
And if it had to go.

I think that 'way off in the sky,
Some place had not a light,
And God said to the little stars,
"Who'll go and make it bright?"

And then this little willing star,
Before the rest had stirred,
Cried, "I will go!" and off he flew,
Without another word.

THE DOLL CONTEST

"High honors await the dolls selected as 'Miss America' and 'Miss America, Jr.," in the Doll Messenger of Friendship contest," said Dr. Sidney L. Gulick in reporting on the progress of the movement, today.

"These will be presented to the children of Japan and intrusted to the Imperial Museum of Japan in Tokio for exhibition and safe-keeping. The Museum will preserve them as perpetual reminders of the friendship of American children to Japan."

The Doll Messengers of Friendship contest is part of the nation-wide project of the Committee on World Friendship Among Children, instituted by the Federal Council of Churches, to send thousands of American dolls to Japan to take part in the Festival of Dolls on March 3, 1927.

Many American high schools and grade schools, according to those interested in the project, are taking part. Interclass contests are under way to decide by popular vote which dolls shall represent the school, the prize doll from the high school being Senior and from the grade school, Junior. Shortly, interschool contests will be held to pick the of which he has been a faithful and consistent member up until the time of his sudden death. Frank was a keen student of the word and very conscientious, good natured and one who found pleasure in helping others. In fact he worked until a few hours before his death to assist a neighbor in the repair of his car that a trip might be made to a hospital, little dreaming that this was his last day upon earth. He will be remembered as having been present at Winona two years ago with delegates from here. His sudden departure leaves a vacancy in the home, the church and the community. The writer has lost a friend and a supporter in the great work of spreading the Gospel.

Services conducted in the home at Salem by his pastor, the writer, assisted by Rev. A. L. Lynn.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

CROUSE AND CROUSE—Carrie Louise and Carol Louis, came September 25 to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Crouse of Minden for a little while before being taken away. Services conducted at the home by the writer. Burial in the Chestnut Grove Church of the Brethren cemetery.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

YECHT—Francis Lee Yecht, son of Mr. and Mrs. Andy Yecht, was born at Lecwood, Kanawha County, West Virginia, May 26, 1903 and passed away at the Montgomery hospital Friday night, October 1, aged 22 years, five months, four days. Nine years ago he became a member of the Brethren church, afterwards transferring his membership to the Methodist church at Salem. He is survived by his father and mother with three sisters and four brothers.

Services were conducted at the Chestnut Grove Church of the Brethren by the writer, assisted by Rev. Hopson of Fayetteville. Interment was in the nearby cemetery.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

WEIDENHAMER—Jacob Wallace Weidenhamer was born August 22, 1859, at Limestoneville, Pa., and departed this life, July 17, 1926, at the age of 66 years, 10 months, and 26 days. Brother Weidenhamer was a member of the McKee church but resided at Roaring Springs. He had been an active member of the city council for years, and was highly esteemed by the people in Roaring Springs for the good that was effected largely through his efforts.

The funeral was conducted by the pastor in the home, and assisted by Dr. Yates, pastor of Bethel church at Roaring Springs.

JAS. S. COOK.

WALTERS—Moses W. Walters was born September 7, 1856, and departed this life May 27, 1926, at the age of 69 years, 6 months and 20 days. He was a member of the church at McKee, Pa., but lived near Queen, Pa. Brother Walters died very suddenly of heart failure. The funeral was conducted in the church of the Brethren near Queen, by the writer, and assisted by Rev. Popple.

JAS. S. COOK.

DEVORE—Esby L. DeVore was born September 28, 1848, at Bedford, Pennsylvania, and died October 3, 1926. He was the son of Jacob G. and Mary Studebaker DeVore. At an early age he moved with his parents to Stephenson county, Illinois where he attended public school until at the age of seventeen years he joined the Brethren church. He served three years until the close of the Civil War. He was wounded at Vicksburg and carried the bullet during the remainder of his life.

He was married to Emma Leonard, March 19, 1866. To this union were born five children: Samuel Franklin, of Missouri Valley, Iowa; Newton Isaac, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Robert L., of Joplin, Missouri; Katy May McDeid, of Alta, Iowa; and Mabel who died in infancy.

While a young man he united with the Brethren church. He lived a consistent but unpretentious Christian life. He was a kind husband, a good father, and a man in every sense of the word.

Funeral services were conducted from the Methodist church, Rev. G. R. Gilbert officiating, and the body laid to rest in the Aurelia (Iowa) cemetery.

MRS. JESSE MCDEID.

WHITTED—Bebecca Jane Harris, daughter of James and Charity Harris, was born near Sedalia, Missouri, August 9th, 1867, and went to rest October 7th, 1926, at the age of 52 years, 1 month and 27 days.

When she was five years old her parents moved to a farm south of Douglass, Kansas. When she was fourteen years old she was converted and united with the Methodist Protestant church. She was united in marriage to Silas R. Whitted on August 31st, 1884, and to this union were born four boys and eight girls. Two sons, Archie and Berton preceded her in death. The rest of the family were at her bedside when death came to her relief.

Mrs. Whitted was a wonderful mother, a true companion and a very patient sufferer. She placed her membership in the Bethel Brethren church in 1908, with her family of which congregation she remained a loyal member until promoted to the church triumphant.

She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, two sons, Fred Whitted of El Dorado, Chester Whitted of Wichita and eight daughters. Mrs. Eva Albright, Mona and Jessie Whitted of Mulvane, Agnes of Hutchinson, and Fern, Ruby, Glen and Fae, at home. She also leaves nine grandchildren and a host of relatives and friends who will miss her kind words and motherly deeds.

The writer, being an old friend of the family and once pastor of the Bethel church for nine years was called to conduct the funeral, which was held at the Bethel church October 9th, and was assisted by the present pastor, H. W. Anderson. The Bethel choir sang several appropriate numbers and Mrs. V. L. Gordon sang a beautiful solo.

Many beautiful floral offerings were made and the body was laid to rest in Richland cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

PECK—Mrs. Rebecca Peck, wife of Jacob Peck, of 2227 13th Street, N. E., Canton, Ohio, passed away at her home on Saturday evening, September 11, 1926, aged 67 years and 13 days. She lived a consistent Christian life, having been a charter member of the Louisville church. A number of years ago Brother and Sister Peck moved to Nebraska, returning to Ohio about a year and a half ago and at that time bringing their membership to the Canton church. Besides the bereaved husband, she is survived by five children: Mrs. Florence Ostrand, of Omaha, Neb.; Robert of Omaha, Chancey of Lincoln, Neb.; Homer of Shubert, Neb.; and Mahlon, of Davenport, Iowa, also four sisters, Mrs. Levi Snyder, Mrs. Mae Bruder, Mrs. Emma Clapper, Mrs. H. E. Spice and three brothers, Jacob, John and Isaac Clapper. The funeral services were held at the home and the Louisville church on September 15th at 2:00 o'clock. Services by the writer, assisted by Rev. Robert Porte of Louisville.

FRED C. VANATOR.

ELY—Anita Vanita Ely, daughter of Earl Ely and Grace Edwards Ely, was born March 17, 1910, and departed this life at the Lee Hospital in Johnstown, October 30, 1926, aged 16 years, 7 months and 13 days. She accepted her Lord early in life and united with the Conemaugh Brethren church, where she remained faithful until her going. She was ready his will to be done in her life. Funeral services were conducted in the church, by her pastor.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

SMITH—Mrs. Mary A. (Hornor) Smith died October 30, 1926, at her home, 728 Oak Street, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, 82 years. Mrs. Smith was a faithful member of the Conemaugh Brethren church and was known and loved for her good Christian life. Funeral services were in charge of the undersigned, her pastor. Interment was made in the Hedrick's Cemetery.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

RITCHIE—Viola Anna Ritchie, daughter of William J. and Lydia A. Kelly, was born July 19, 1860, died October 1, 1926, aged 66 years, 2 months and 12 days.

She was united in marriage to Lewis Sherman Ritchie, December 25, 1884.

She is survived by her husband, one sister, one brother, 3 children and a number of grandchildren.

Her home was near North Georgetown, Ohio, where she was a member of the Brethren church since 1894.

She was a good mother and loyal to the church of her faith.

Funeral services were conducted in the home by the writer. The blessings of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ, his Son, our Savior, and of the Holy Spirit, our Comforter, rest upon this sorrowing family and friends.

Business Manager's Corner

ITERATION AND REITERATION

This section of the Business Manager's corner may be only an iteration this time, but, if it does not produce satisfactory results, it will be a reiteration long before Christmas.

We have reference to the announcement regarding the offer of the Brethren Evangelist from now until the close of 1927 for two dollars, the price of a yearly subscription. Of course this is for NEW subscriptions only, and the CASH should accompany the order, for we should not be expected to open book accounts on an liberal offer like this.

Following our previous announcement of this liberal offer, we sent a personal letter to all the pastors where they do not have Honor Roll churches, and asked them to join us in this campaign, by making earnest announcement of this offer from the pulpit, and by appointing some one in their congregation to receive such subscriptions or to take the responsibility of doing the work themselves.

I said we sent letters to ALL the pastors, that is, we aimed to reach them all, and if any were slighted, it was the proverbial "mistake of the head and not of the heart."

Several letters came back to us, so we presume a few pastors have moved since we last had their correct address.

If there is any congregation that has not been told of this remarkable offer for the Evangelist by its pastor, will not some one please ask his pastor if he received a letter from us. If so, why was not the announcement made? If he failed to get such a letter, then we will assume the responsibility. But we want action. Each week of delay means just one less paper for the new subscriber, and we are anxious to get the paper into as many homes as possible.

Tell the Good News

Some one must speak out in each congregation. Those who are not now receiving the paper will know nothing about this offer, unless some one tell them. And since most of the public announcements in the churches are made by the pastors, it is "up to" the pastors to announce this proposition. Sometimes the superintendent of the Sunday school can put in a helpful word that will produce results. But some one should point out the advantages of having such a paper as the Evangelist in every Brethren home.

There seems to be plenty of reading matter of the lighter sort in most modern homes, but something of a more spiritual and more enduring type should be within the reach of the children in every Christian home.

And what better than The Brethren Evangelist could be kept in the presence of the children of Brethren homes? Speak out, brethren. This is a great opportunity, but great opportunities are without value, unless some one seizes upon them and makes the most of them.

Remember, The Brethren Evangelist from now until the CLOSE of NINETEEN HUNDRED TWENTY-SEVEN for TWO DOLLARS.

Business Manager.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

The Conemaugh Brethren church will hold communion service on Sunday evening, November 28. All of like faith who can are invited to enjoy this holy ordinance with us.

AUSTIN R. STALEY, Pastor.

NOTICE

This will be the last call. The minutes of the last National Conference have been ready for the Annual for six weeks. I have been waiting for reports from organizations that may want their minutes incorporated in the Annual. To date I have no report from the Sisterhood and The Evangelistic and Bible Study League. Also no report from the following District Conference organizations: Ohio, Maryland-Virginia, Northwest, N. California, S. California. Please be prompt and send them in immediately. The Annual should be to press NOW.

A number have written concerning the price of the Annual for this year. We can not advise as to this until it is off the press, for Conference ordered it sold this year at cost. As soon as possible we will give notice of the price.

O. C. STARN, Secretary
Gratis, Ohio.

DEDICATORY SERVICES

The congregation of the Second Brethren church, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, will hold the formal dedicatory services for their new church edifice on Sunday, November 14, 1926. There will be three services throughout the day, morning at 11, afternoon at 2:30 and evening at 8. The afternoon service will be a fraternal service participated in by representative ministers of Moxham; the note of Brethren fraternity to be brought by Elder Joseph L. Gingrich, who will deliver the sermon. The dedicatory sermon will be delivered by Dr. Wm. H. Beachler, of Dayton, Ohio. Brother Beachler will also have charge of the raising of the debt at all the services through the day. Neighboring Brethren are cordially invited to share in the joy of the completion of another house of worship to the praise of Almighty God. The dedicatory services will be followed by a week of special meetings and the observance of the Communion service on November 21. Invitation is also extended to our neighbors to share in this blessing.

DYOLL BELOTE, Pastor.

EDITORIAL

Necessity of Home Mission Advancement

The work of Home Missions is one of the most fundamental and bounden duties of the church, and the time is upon us when we must give concentrated attention to that interest. On the Sunday preceding, or the one following Thanksgiving, the churches of the brotherhood are asked to take their annual offering for the promotion of missionary work in the homeland. And the askings this year are larger and more urgent than ever before. Our leaders are not satisfied to allow us to mark time; they insist that some really advanced steps must be taken. The fact is that the time has come when an aggressive program in Home Missions is a necessity. We have been doing some commendable work in the home field in the past, but we have not done all that we were capable of doing, nor all that was important to be done, in the interest of our denominational future. The situation that we face now makes it imperative that we lay aside our indifferent attitude and our half-hearted efforts, and give ourselves to the task with holy zeal.

It is necessary if we are not to be reckoned delinquent in the discharge of our responsibility for giving the Whole Gospel to the lost and dying souls of our generation. Now is the only time that it can be done; and if we fail to do it, it will go undone. And there never was an age that was more sorely in need of the pure, unadulterated Gospel of the Son of God than our age. Men are recognizing that fact, and are calling for it. It is the day of opportunity and of responsibility. The opportunity is of such proportions that it lays upon us the responsibility of giving our very utmost of consecration and sacrifice to the task.

We cannot delay longer in making possible a really worth while advance in Home Missions if we are not to give up the claim of "Whole Gospel obedience." Implicit obedience to all that Jesus taught and practiced and enjoined upon his followers is not to be accomplished by the mere observance of a few ordinances. These become empty shells when the life of the devotee is not brought into harmony with the plans and purposes of God for the salvation of the world. And the first and most fundamental step in that program was the preaching of the Gospel in "Jerusalem and Judea"—the home field. Let us be less vocal about our obedience in such matters as triune immersion, feet washing and the Lord's supper, until we have rendered a fuller and more zealous obedience in the things that are vastly more important than forms and ceremonies. "These ought ye to have done, and not to have left the others undone."

Moreover the problem of self-perpetuation ought to drive us to more heroic efforts at Home Mission work. We must count on some churches passing out of existence; that is in line with the history of churches. Communities change so that fields here and there that once enabled churches to flourish become barren and unfruitful and the congregations die out. This has actually happened in various communities in our brotherhood, and the process is still in operation in certain localities, and more rapidly than we are building new churches. This is not intimating that we have gone backward in numbers as a denomination. On the contrary we have increased numerically by virtue of the fact that some of our congregations have grown so much larger than formerly. But a church that is merely growing in the size of its congregations and not in the number of its congregations has little to boast of with regard to a future. It ought to be a matter for serious contemplation by every member of our fraternity that we have fewer congregations now than we had a decade and a half ago. It means that we have not really concerned ourselves with church extension. There have been spurts and starts, and isolated instances of success, but no forward-looking, aggressive program has been adopted and no concerted effort secured until recently. For a few years we have been gaining experience, accumulating missionary momentum and trying to bring the vision of larger things to the eyes of our people. But our progress has been hung up on the dollar mark. It is time we were opening up our purse strings so as to make possible a really courageous step forward, and begin to secure the future of our brotherhood.

It is necessary that we shall make really bold advancement in the establishing of churches in our cities in order to conserve the membership of our country and small town churches as they drift into the centers of population. Our membership leak from this cause has proven to be a serious loss. We must do something to check it and the most effective thing we can do to check this leak is to build churches in the cities where the members go. And that, as we understand it, is one of the purposes of our national mission board, to build mission churches at strategic points in cities. But to accomplish that program unhampered, there must be some generous giving of our money into the Lord's treasury. The measure of our giving will largely determine the extent of our progress. If we give niggardly, church extension will go forward slowly.

The building of the home base more strongly and extensively is necessary to the continued growth and permanence of our foreign mission work. It will be a disastrous thing if we allow ourselves to become top-heavy and unable to maintain the outreach we have undertaken. That can be prevented by turning a dollar into the strengthening of the home base for every dollar we send abroad. And that is not an unreasonable asking. It is not unreasonable to ask and expect the members to do their very best for Home Missions at this Thanksgiving season. The more generously we give to Home Missions the more quickly and fully we as a church shall be able to discharge our obligation to the benighted millions in foreign lands. That should spur us to sacrifice.

Real advancement in Home Missions is necessary to the enlargement and strengthening of all our brotherhood interests. Progress in educational facilities is hindered by the limitation of our constituency. The more congregations we build, the broader will be the scope of our appeal for funds with which to endow our college. The greater the number of our people and churches, the greater are the possibilities of extending our church publications. The more widely we extend our borders the more adequately will our benevolent interests be supported and the greater will be the chances of including among our numbers men and women whom God has blessed with wealth, which, when consecrated, many a denomination has found to be the means of accomplishing noble Christian purposes in a large way. Church extension is the key to our progress in many lines. When we give to Home Missions we are giving indirectly for the benefit of every other interest of the church. It is therefore with full justification that the national home board is asking for a truly banner offering, an offering that will mean sacrifice, the largest offering ever made in the history of the church. Such an offering would bring hope and rejoicing to all.

Golden Rule Sunday

It is a day set apart on which the people of America are asked to deny themselves of some of the accustomed luxury of their tables, to eat a single meal and to give the amount saved thereby, and anything more that one may feel led to give, to the Near East Relief for the support of the orphans of the Near East. The day suggested is Sunday, December 5th. It is called "Golden Rule" Sunday because we are urged to think and act towards those orphaned children as we would want the people of other lands to do towards our children if ours had suffered the loss of home and loved ones through the curse of war and its aftermath.

We commend the observance of the day to the Evangelist family. The need is real. The funds are carefully and economically handled, and they reach their goal. American people are well able to help, because they are prosperous. But if they were not, it would be their Christian duty to help these suffering, hungry, homeless children. Besides it will do us good to enter into the life and suffering of these people in this manner. Albert Shaw, editor of "The Review of Reviews" says, "International Golden Rule Sunday comes into our calendar and into our contemporary life at a time when the world needs its lesson and its benign influence." President Coolidge approves the movement and says concerning its influence: "The aid we give out of our abundance to those who are less fortunately situated than we, should be of great value in bringing about the application of the Golden Rule to the settlement of misunderstandings among nations as well as among individuals." It is a splendid way of building into our hearts the spirit of friendship for people of other lands. And to quote Mr. Coolidge again, "Practical help is the best expression of friendship."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother W. A. Gearhart supplies a report of Home Mission receipts for three months, closing the last of October.

Communion services will be conducted at Rittman, Ohio, on Sunday evening, November 28th. The usual invitation is extended to neighboring Brethren.

From a personal communication from Brother A. R. Staley, pastor of the church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, we learn that he began a revival meeting in his own church, November 14th, he himself doing the preaching. Three have been received by baptism at regular services since he took up the work in September.

The Evangelist office is in receipt of a copy of "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide for 1927", published by Fleming H. Revell, 158 Fifth Avenue, New York, at $2.00 postpaid, and we find it holds up the same high standard that this publication has maintained through the 22 years of its existence. We commend it as a really high quality publication dealing with the year's Sunday school course.

We have made this issue distinctly a Home Mission number, and the importance of this task of the church fully warrants the emphasis we have given it. Read it all and pass your paper on to some one else who may thereby be encouraged to do his or her duty at the Thanksgiving season. Send offerings to Wm. A. Gearhart, 1101 American Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Brother C. A. Landis, who left Ashland in September, where he has been in school work for several years, writes of his reception at Garwin, Iowa, where he entered upon his first pastorate. He finds these people, as other pastors have found them, generous hearted and loyal. This congregation has suffered a loss in the death of one of its prominent members—Brother Harvey N. Richards.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, reports his canvass of the Allentown congregation in eastern Pennsylvania. This church is without a pastor and has experienced some hindrances, but the people showed their loyalty to Ashland College to the extent of $700, which Dr. Bell says was good under the circumstances. Let us continue to pray for the Endowment Campaign and for Brother Bell, that God may crown the undertaking with great success.

Brother B. F. Owen, who is pastor of the Williamstown and Glenford, Ohio, congregations and is residing at 79 East Blake Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, reports an evangelistic campaign which he conducted in conjunction with the pastor, Brother H. H. Rowsey, of Roanoke, Virginia. He reports a very enjoyable time with the Roanoke people and pastor. We imagine that these two preachers, strong in body and energetic and ambitious in mind, made a splendid team and wielded a lasting influence on the community.

Prof. J. A. Garber, general secretary of the National Sunday School Association, gives us another installment of "Church School News." He offers a suggestive theme for the last month of the year—"December and Others." The theme is appropriate for December is the month when we think of "others" possibly more than any other month of the year. It is the giving month, and it is gratifying to note that we are becoming more and more unselfish in our Christmas giving. That is the quality that makes gifts white.

Our efficient correspondent of the Pittsburgh church records the happenings of that congregation during the first three months. Two items of importance are the loan of their pastor, Brother A. L. Lynn, to the Oak Hill congregation in West Virginia for an evangelistic campaign and the conduct of such a campaign in their own church under the leadership of Brother W. C. Benshoff of Berlin, Pennsylvania, whose services were greatly appreciated. The meetings closed with a well attended Communion service. The work of the Pittsburgh church is being well cared for and the people hold their pastor in high regard.

Brother J. L. Gingrich makes his first report as pastor of the Third Church of Johnstown, where he began the first of April. The first accomplishment was the building of a parsonage which the pastor and family now enjoy. It is encouraging to note that so many of our churches are building parsonages. It is a paying investment to the congregation as well as to the pastor. The fine thing about the Third church's effort was that the parsonage was dedicated free of debt, with a surplus from the offerings to apply on the church building debt. Brother H. E. Eppley is now engaged as song leader in an evangelistic campaign in this church, with the pastor serving as evangelist.

A real treat is in store for Evangelist subscribers for the coming year. Dean J. Allen Miller, who made an extensive tour in Egypt and the Holy Land during the early part of this year has agreed to write a series of articles on his travels. We are desirous of giving them the widest possible reading, and ask the pastors and other church leaders to kindly cooperate in extending the circulation of the Evangelist in their communities. Make use of the special offer of subscription to the end of 1927 beginning from the present for the regular $2.00 rate. Or try for the Honor Roll and take advantage of the $1.50 rate. This series of articles and the photos which Dr. Miller took on his trip will be worth the year's subscription price alone. Besides there are many other good things coming.

Keep thy body with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of health.

He who in a spirit of condescension and patronage extends the hand of help to the needy, should not be surprised if he finds his proffer spurned.

From the vast numbers who crowd God out of their lives while they confess him with their lips, it becomes evident that the atheism of life is far more treacherous and widespread than the atheism of creed.

Notwithstanding the wide prevalence of failures on the part of Christian people, we can scarcely imagine one such failure that is excusable in view of the fact that through prayer they may tap the infinite resources of heaven.

Our Extension Program---The Sin of Discouragement

By George T. Ronk

"And be ye of good courage and bring of the fruit of the land. . . . And Caleb said, Let us go up at once and possess it. . . . But the men . . . said, We are not able . . . for they are stronger than we . . . and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers and so were we in their sight . . . and the people wept that night. . . . And the Lord said How long will this people despise me? And how long will they not believe in me? . . . But as for you your dead bodies shall fall in this wilderness and your children shall be wanderers in the wilderness forty years. . . . But Joshua and Caleb remained alive." Numbers 13 and 14.

"Now these things happened unto them by way of example; and they were written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the ages are come." 1 Cor. 10:11.

Our universe bears witness to the unchanging nature of natural law. By natural we mean that to which experience witnesses, not only physical, but also psychological, moral, spiritual and Juridical. Laws are a statement of Eternal Truth in action, working consistently. Our scriptural quotation is an example confirming the eternal truth that discouragement is a sin against Providence.

In the timelessness of natural, discouragement in the program of God is as evil in America in the jazz days of

A. D., 1926 as in the Wilderness of Paran in the frontier days of B. C., 1926. Viewed in the perspective of the Bible, who will have the temerity to say God is not as immediate, as direct, as forceful, as purposeful today as in any age?

Though they be inscrutable to each generation, treading the boards of the Present on the stage of the Living, God's purposes are sure, comprehending and directing all. We stubbornly close our eyes to the law that his purposes are also invariably and consistently so veiled as to demand faith. Here is the stumbling block for the scientist, the philosopher, the whole intellectual man. In his zeal for recording laws he has overlooked the keystone of them all.

Whatever God's ultimate end for his Universe, his immediate end for each living soul includes development, discipline, renunciation, purification, action in the dim light of faith—all for the ultimate end of a personal faith "that God is and is a rewarder of them that diligently seek after him." The philosophical problems of evil, pain, suffering and death are all absorbed here by the faith of the Christian.

Discouragement is the suicide of faith—gross sin against the nature of God as loving, purposeful, powerful. It is likewise sin against our own spiritual ends, against our capacity to be, to do and to become, which instinct itself teaches us is the goal of our nature.

The Brethren people, though a people of God, have historically failed here and so have lacked the vision, the resources and the power to deliver a great program or to move the world with a great token. While others, less doctrinally sound, less pietistic in life, have moved forward with great weight to mould the world.

Spiritual and material progress seems fearfully slow, the needs so cataclysmic, the resources so impoverished, the fruit of the years so pitifully lean. This is the typical Brethren attitude. But we are guilty here of the cardinal oversight of a great fundamental: that God is working together with us, not interested so much in results as we estimate them, as in the manner and its reaction on ourselves. Though he is All-powerful, our co-operative enterprise has not been notable, because we have not challenged him with a sensible plan, a long vision and a gigantic faith that "he is and is a rewarder." As the senior but silent Partner in our spiritual corporation, he has left the executive function very much in our hands, has stood by patiently and helpfully, but has not placed great resources in our hands, because he has not seen evidence we have the foresight, the brains, the greatness of heart to profit therewith. Better for us to maintain us as the corner grocer than to capitalize us for a department store and thereby wreck the partnership.

Specifically, we have suffered from lack of inspired leadership. Beginning as a lay church, our laity has always been intrinsically more solvent, than our ministry in the terms of integrity, fidelity and power. Our ministry has too consistently played the grasshopper role, "loathed this light bread," or "longed for the fleshpots of Egypt," throughout our generations, not realizing the road to true greatness lay straight to the hill of Jebus. This disease is still current.

Our extension program needs nothing so much as the healing of our mental attitude. God help us to pray for release from the demons of doubt, discouragement and despair. God help us to read aright the lesson of church history which shows on every page that victory is not to the powerful, the popular, the current, the numerous, but to the few on the central track. These God has fashioned into a hammer for his mighty blows in every age, scattering the superficial, the worldly, the corrupt, the heterodox, to the four winds with their philosophies, their proofs, their insidious doubts, their open blasphemies. By every lesson of history, by every tenet of our religion we are in a strong position, not in a weak position. May God clear our minds, strengthen, establish and settle us.

Our extension program needs first prayer for ourselves and our leaders: prayer for a sound mind; prayer for greater personal resources; prayer for greater consecration of our greater resources when once given; prayer for our present consecration of present scanty resources; prayer for the men and women on the firing line that present activities meet greater returns; prayer for such magnitude of ideals and plans and such a passion for achievement that God may feel justified in giving us a new rating and new credits in his scheme of things; prayer that we may carry a new token to a world deep in sin and in love with its mire.

Secondly, we need money, big money, behind this program. Church building has become a primary economic problem. But what of it! This age has become an age of big money, of stupendous economics. World syndicates have not left God behind. Let us meet the conditions and get behind the program of God with big money.

Extending the Whole Gospel Church in the Homeland---A Symposium

I. THE HOME BOARD APPEALS FOR COOPERATION

Extending the Whole Gospel

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D., President Home Board

1. The Whole Gospel is better than a part Gospel and brings a greater blessing.

2. Our whole country needs now if ever a Whole Gospel in the life of the people to raise the moral standard and lead the people to live Godly lives.

3. Jesus commands us to evangelize and to teach the people to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded and he commands us to begin at home.

4. Our church believes in world-wide evangelization, but we believe also that the home base must be strong to support the foreign superstructure. The strength of the church at home must be conserved, and also increased by the building of new churches in opportune places.

WHEN?

Now! Now! Now!

Now is God's appointed time for us to work. The fields are white and we are passing on. We have assurance of no other time. "Go work today in my vineyard."

To save America the church must awaken, rise up and assert itself. There is no other hope. If we would save America we must make America Christian.

A part Gospel suffers the loss of power. America needs a Whole Gospel, power-full church. Religion today is too often a skeleton, robbed of flesh and blood. America is worshipping idols,—gold, pleasure, self. Nothing but a Whole Gospel in the lives of her millions will save America from the same fate that befell ungodly nations in the past.

God help our churches to weigh the need and then to lay adequate gifts upon the altar at Thanksgiving time.

A Fund for Church Building

By H. F. Stuckman, Member Home Board

Unfortunately Home Missions have not the appeal, neither do they somehow present the challenge that gets for them the support they deserve. Few people fail to note, that unless the home base is consistently extended, there can be no decided growth in foreign work. The Foreign Board must sense this very grave possibility in our own fraternity with regard to extending their program. A glance at the amounts of their offerings for the past few years will reveal that it has been static. Interpreted from a sensible standpoint it would mean that we are giving about all we are capable of, or inclined to give, with our present numbers. Of course present Foreign Mission work can not be neglected, but certainly not much greater things can be undertaken, until we strengthen our source of supply at home.

We should for the very reason of self-perpetuation, begin a more elaborate Home Mission program, but this cannot be undertaken until your Board is quite certain that you will back us with the needed financial support to branch out into new fields. We have conceived the idea, that perhaps there are many who would welcome the plan of giving toward a fund for church building, which fund would be loaned by your Board to groups who would begin a work here and there, if they were assured of help in getting under way. The building and equipment is always one of the chief considerations in opening a new work, where we are always in competition with well established churches. A Niggardly program at the beginning of any undertaking will drive folks away, rather than woo them to the task at hand. There is much dormant money lying loose in Brethren hands that could well be used in church extension work in our brotherhood.

Let us not do less, or even be satisfied with doing as much as we have done in years gone by, but let us see the dilemma we are in, and resolve to make possible very advanced steps, by our increased offerings this Thanksgiving time.

Conserving a Whole Gospel Church

By C. C. Grisso, Member Home Board

By permission of the Edntor who has asked me to write a few lines from the above subject, I desire to confine my thought to the work of "conserving the whole gospel church in the homeland." There is indeed a great need of building new churches, of opening new fields, "of lengthening our ropes and strengthening our stakes." This is no new appeal. It has been before our National and District Conferences for all these years, but I am making an appeal just now for the weak, struggling and oftentimes pastorless church. The Home Mission Board is much concerned about these places. We have many appeals from such for financial aid. How anxious we are about them! Well, do we not know that from these have come our ministers and missionaries of the past. From these come our young people for our college. And surely if we fail in our ministry to these churches, we are going to suffer a corresponding loss in the supply of young people for our future leaders. Not only this, but many of them are serving as feeders for our city churches.

In the light of these things what shall our answer be to them? To me it is no less than a tragedy to turn a deaf ear to them. The leaders of our movement fifty years ago, call out from their graves. The very soil upon which they fought and bled and died is being taken by the enemy. They believed tremendously in the cause they represented. Through toil and poverty and persecution they established churches. Today these churches are calling for help. Shall they still have the Whole Gospel message? Shall we betray the trust committed to us?

If we want to build larger and finer churches, Well. If we desire a greater endowment for our college, that is our privilege, too. If more missionaries should be sent to Africa, even so, let that be done. These things we ought to do, and not leave the other undone. Oh! that every church and individual upon this Thanksgiving Day would so pray and so give, that your Board might respond as never before to the calls that come from the weaker churches worthy of our help.

Foreign Missions Challenge the Home Base

By A. B. Cover, Member Home Board

"Go and preach the gospel" was the final marching order given to the disciples and through them to the church. The supreme sacrifice was consummated when Jesus died upon the Cross in order that the lost might be saved. Crying souls are constantly pleading for the "good news." It is imperative that we give it to them. Some are gifted to go in person and "tell"; others cannot "go" but they have ability to make possible the going of others, by their gifts. But that they may know, they too must be taught. So one of the great tasks of the church is to build up the home church; it means a program of education; it means a program of prayer; it means a program of whole-hearted consecration. God in a very wondrous way has given the Brethren church a challenging opportunity in foreign fields. Thank God for it! We want to glean all of it. But to do it, we must have the home base strong enough and willing enough and consecrated enough to supply the needed workers and means. So may this Thanksgiving offering be representative of a determined effort to extend our influence by building up the Home Base. The fields are waiting to be possessed; but we must have the means wherewith to possess them. May God put it into the hearts of our people to give a real telling offering at this Thanksgiving season.

The Keystone of the Arch

By Claud Studebaker, Member Home Board

Our Home Mission work is just that vital to the expansion and strength of the Brethren church. Unless she occupies strategic points and builds new churches she is doomed to stagnation and eventual impotency. The history of every denomination is that there are churches constantly passing out of existence; here and there where there was a prosperous church, there is now none, due to various causes of course. But the fact is that some of the Brethren churches now prospering will in years to come be obsolete. Not an encouraging prophecy, but true. We are in a shifting and changing world. Unless we keep moving we drop behind, whether we will it or not. Therefore, if we do not keep pushing out and building new churches, we will grow smaller and every interest of the church will suffer; it cannot be otherwise. We must bring our offering to the altar and thereto call the man who has the strength and vision to build, and, under God and by the power of the Holy Spirit this man and money must be placed in some center of population, to which the people are now drifting and there witness to the whole Gospel

The Best We Have

*Christ wants the best. In the far-off ages
Once claimed the firstling of the flock, the finest of the wheat;
And still he asks his own with gentlest pleading
To lay their highest hopes and brightest talents at his feet.
He'll not forget the feeblest service, humblest love,
He only asks that of our store we give him
The best we have.
Christ gives the best. He takes the hearts we offer
And fills them with his glorious beauty, joy and peace.
And in his service we are growing stronger,
The calls to grand achievement still increase.
The richest gifts for us on earth, or in heaven above
Are hid in Christ. In Jesus we receive
The best we have.
And is our best too much? O friends, let us remember
How once our Lord poured out his soul for us,
And in the prime of his mysterious manhood
The Lord of Lords, by whom the worlds were made,
Laid up his precious life upon the cross!
Through bitter grief and tears gave us
The best he had.*

plea which will win, and build a strong church for the declaration of the whole truth. We have the money and men but it will be placed on the altar. The Brethren church is loafing on the job, we must build more churches, brethren. "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead and Christ will give you light." A dollar or two a year is a mighty small amount to call "a thank offering." Will we lay on the altar a worthy gift for the most vital work for the future strength and growth of the church? Our answer will be registered in the home mission offering at the Thanksgiving season.

A Serious Blow to Foreign Missions

By R. Paul Miller, Member Home Board

There is no more serious hurt that could be done to the work of Missions in foreign lands than to neglect the work at home. Some people are not wise in their devotion to foreign missions, inasmuch as they sacrifice greatly to foreign work to a total exclusion of the home field. This is suicidal to foreign missions. Neglect the home field and where will our missionaries come from? Where will our support for those we have sent come from? Even the example of such a person is hurtful to the work in general.

Furthermore, there is a limit to the lives and money which a small denomination like ourselves can supply. If we are to arise to the challenge which God has plainly set before us of taking Oubangi-Chari in Africa, and a great section of Argentine for Christ, we must increase here at home by establishing new churches. The man who drains his business to invest in some pet hobby will soon have neither. No one believes more in foreign missions and workers harder for their success, than myself, but I recognize the impossibility of large increase there without large increase at home. THE ONLY ANSWER IS—FULLEST SUPPORT OF OUR ENTIRE HOME MISSION PROGRAM FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF SELF-SUPPORTING CHURCHES!

II. SOME MISSION PASTORS APPEAL FOR HELP

Extending the Whole Gospel Church in the Homeland

By L. G. Wood, One of Our Mission Pastors

If there ever was a time when our Whole Gospel message was needed in the homeland it is NOW. I need only to mention that we are living in a materialistic, careless, pleasure-intoxicated, sin-darkened age, and this applies to what we call the Homeland, just as much as it does to other lands.

With some experience in different sections of our home field, I am thoroughly convinced that our historic and doctrinal position admirably fits us as a denomination, to meet the great present and universal need. This need is everywhere manifest, and if traced to its source will be found rising from a general restlessness of the human mind. This is a great day and the writer is optimistic, believing that the prospects are just as bright as the promises of God, but the present generation is not getting satisfaction out of its day, and this applies to every human activity and enterprise. Why is it that the political parties today are found almost without leadership? Just this morning I saw an article in a leading Magazine headed: "Why is God so Unpopular?" These things indicate to me that there is lots of room for the Whole Gospel Message of the Brethren church; yea these things constitute a DEMAND for that message. When the mind is restless and "men's hearts are failing them," what is more inspiring than the faithful presentation of the simple Gospel of the Son of God, which points the way to the Rock of Ages as the only real resting place.

We find some men today who are asking: "To whom shall we go?" Some have tried the god of wealth, some the god of pleasure, some the god of honor and they have all failed of their coveted goal. I feel that it is no small privilege to give the Apostle's own answer to his question: "Thou hast the words of eternal life." He alone, who "hath the words of eternal life," can cleanse the heart from sin. He alone can crown life with richness and unfading glory. I am persuaded that our people are going to meet the challenge, of this present day, with the largest Thanksgiving offering ever made by the church. If some of us are willing to put LIFE and BLOOD into these needy mission points, for the glory of Christ and the extension of his Kingdom, in the homeland, certainly all of our people should be ready and willing to make their offerings very liberal for the establishment of churches in these strategic centers. All can not go into these mission fields but all can share in the Glory of Christ by their prayers and their gifts.

Extending the Whole Gospel Church in the Homeland: We Want Help!

By Fred V. Kirzie, One of Our Mission Pastors

How can the Brethren church, the "whole Gospel" church, extend her borders in the homeland? This is a question every sage, alive and within the denominational fold, would like to have answered, indeed!

The savage American Indian cried out in silence, "We want help!" It came in the form of Pilgrims (Puritans, Huguenots, Quakers, and Dunkers.

Today, Brethren men and women on the fields of Africa, South America, China, Kentucky, and in the mission centers here and there are crying out, "We want help!" What kind of help? Recruits,—Prayers,—Encouragement,—Money! And the last word often breaks the "camel's back."

Which way can we turn in our human endeavors and not be confronted with the financial element? Eating, grocery bill; sleeping, furnishing bill; walking, cobbler bill; riding, gas bill; writing, postage bill; pleasure, biggest bill. Money is required any way we turn, unless we

*"Is this a time, O Church of Christ, to sound retreat,
To arm with weapons cheap and blunt
The men and women who have borne the brunt
Of Truth's fierce strife, and nobly held their ground?
Is this the time to halt, when all around
Horizons lift, new destinies confront?
No, rather strengthen stakes and lengthen cords,
Enlarge thy plans and gifts, O thou Elect;
And, to thy Kingdom come for such a time!
The earth with all its fulness is the Lord's!
Great things attempt for him, great things expect,
Whose love imperial is, whose power sublime!"*

Sermonette

Tuberculosis Sunday November 28, 1926

By Dr. W. O. Thompson, Chairman Committee

In the 11th Chapter of Hebrews and the first verse is found that oft-repeated and prophetic utterance, "Now Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the Evidence of things not seen."

Immediately following this the writer calls the roll of one of the most famous personages that can be found since time began.

He concludes his chapter with the blanket phrase, "And what shall I say more, for time would fail me to tell"—and here he goes on to mention many others too numerous to tell about, but declares that all of these conquered through faith.

May we not, on this Tuberculosis Sunday, with Equal propriety call the roll of some distinguished pioneers who through Faith prepared the way for later victories over malignant germ diseases so that they can no longer rob mankind of millions of lives.

By Faith, Pasteur laid the foundation for modern disease prevention.

By Faith, Robert Koch, toiling on through many discouragements, finally laid before the world the actual cause of Tuberculosis. He thereby laid the foundation for a campaign of prevention and relief of suffering.

By Faith, Edward Livingston Trudeau, doomed to die of tuberculosis, proved to the world that Tuberculosis could be cured. By faith he labored to make his own experience real to other men and women. He built the first sanatorium in America for treatment of tuberculosis.

By reason of this victory through faith, the national tuberculosis death rate has been reduced from 200 deaths out of every 100,000 persons to 90.

As a materialized result of his vision, more than 100,000 men and women who would have died during the last year are alive today, the "evidence of things not seen." "The substance of things hoped for."

Lawrence F. Flick, himself a victim of tuberculosis, but cured by the "seeing of the Unseen" resolved to tell the world that through organization and education the fight against the "Great White Plague" could be won.

In 1892 he formed the first tuberculosis society in the world, The Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society. Twelve years later the National Tuberculosis Association was formed.

Vincent Y. Bowditch proved to the world that tuberculosis could be cured at sea level as well as in the higher altitudes and dryer climates. This encouraged the establishing of local hospitals and sanatoria throughout the country until there are now 700 such institutions providing 70,000 beds for the care of tuberculosis. Fifteen of these sanatoria with 2500 beds are in Ohio. And what shall we say more? Time forbids us to go into details and to tell step by step how the movement spread from Maine to California and from the Gulf to Canada.

The torch that was lighted by those pioneers who first saw the vision is being kept ablaze by an army of men, women and children who today are rising up and calling them blessed because of the benefits they have received from the campaign against tuberculosis.

How shall we speak with sufficient enthusiasm of the faith and labor of those scattered groups in every village and hamlet, who have gone forward with organization, with education, with Christmas Seals and with such knowledge as they had to stem the tide of this devastating plague, tuberculosis? Their works speak for themselves. They have restored to health thousands who were dying of tuberculosis. They have rescued the families of those who were in want; they have safeguarded their children from future disease, and they have taught all of us how we too, may avoid tuberculosis.

From the discoveries and experiences of the past, we now know that tuberculosis is a communicable disease.

That it may be cured if treated in its early stages. That it may be prevented from spreading to those who are well if precautions are taken in time.

Because of these scientific foundations, every man and woman has a responsibility for the stamping out of Tuberculosis from their midst.

Your responsibility is first as an individual living in a community and under an organized society. It is for the protection of your own health and the health of your family. The consumptives who walk the streets of your town carelessly spreading the germs of their disease will sooner or later come in contact with you, your wife and your children.

Your second responsibility is as a citizen of the community. To be true to the trust of citizenship you must make yourself a part of the civic corporation in which you live and this in turn gives to you a responsibility for the welfare of every other individual who calls himself your fellow citizen. You would spare no effort, time nor money to ward off a deadly catastrophe if you saw it staring you in the face or threatening the destruction of your family. Every catastrophe that impairs the efficiency of any member of your community weakens, by just so much, the efficiency of the entire citizenship and impairs the usefulness of the civic body to its individual members. The menace of a large number of consumptives inadequately cared for, places upon us as citizens, a responsibility we cannot evade.

There is no issue between the Labor and Expense of responsibility and health when health is at stake.

Good citizenship demands health, whatever the expense.

Finally, you have a responsibility as a church member. The very essence of our religion is Brotherhood, not a mere silent assent to a principle, but a dynamic service for those whom we call brothers. If religion and Brotherhood means anything, it must mean an individual responsibility for those who are sick and suffering, as well as an added responsibility for those who are in danger of sickness.

If, when our day's work is done, even "one of these least of my Brethren" may say "I was sick and ye ministered unto me," may not that be sufficient reward for any hardship, effort, time or money we may have contributed in measuring up to our full responsibility?

An American Catholic's Criticism of the Church

"Current History" for November contains an article under the title "An American Catholic's Criticism of the Church." The author, Mr. Harry Pascoe, was United States Vice-Counsel in Mexico for three years. He came in contact with the Mexican people intimately, and as a Roman Catholic also touched the church there much more closely than a member of the Protestant faith would. It is in fact a criticism from the inside, which makes it of great value to those who really wish to know the truth about the church problem in Mexico. I, as a Mexican, have written several articles upon the subject and sent them through the United States. It is interesting to note that Mr. Pascoe, a citizen of the United States and a Catholic, confirms all that I have written. Below are printed a few excerpts from Mr. Pascoe's article.—Arthur M. Elias.

The root of the evil which is causing the trouble in Mexico today between the Church and the Government goes back to that early time, when the Catholic clergy who came to the country with the Spanish Viceroy's condoned the actions of the Spaniards in wresting the lands from the Indians and forcing them into slavery. The teachings of the Catholic church are not involved in this situation, yet it must be admitted that the members of the clergy who thus stood by and witnessed the enslavement of the Indian population, without protest, were either weak tools who owed their existence to the ruling classes or were misguided fools who labored under the delusion that the brutal actions of the Spaniards could be condoned by sophisms of religious fanaticism. The inescapable fact remains that they not only condoned the Spaniard's actions, but that they actually assisted in the diabolical scheme. Why? Because in return for their influence and power over the helpless natives, the Spanish rulers gave them large grants of land and other privileges which they have endeavored to maintain up to the present time.

It is practically impossible for an American, and I am referring to an American Catholic especially, to get any sort of a mental picture of the religious situation in Mexico. Our mental attitude is so entirely different; our development and history; our institutions, are all so different that only a person who has lived in Mexico and has come into close intimate contact with the people there, can grasp any idea of what the situation really is.

We see a population of about 15,000,000 souls, but we also see that about 85 per cent of them are illiterate, barefooted, ragged and with little or no ambition. We immediately say to ourselves: "How can this be in a Catholic country where the Catholic church has been in control for four hundred years?"

Catholics in the United States have not only a totally different background, higher ideals and higher standards to maintain, but the discipline of the church in regard to the clergy in the United States and that in Mexico are in violent contrast. In the United States the Catholic church is the exemplar of austere chastity and purity in private life, whereas in Mexico among the clergy this strict reward for moral restraints does not obtain. In the United States the Catholic church rigidly abstains from interference in matters political, but the story is entirely different in Mexico. It is a fact that no one dare truthfully deny that the uprising and revolution of Huerta, the bloody assassin of Madero, who was repudiated by President Wilson as unfit to receive recognition from the United States Government, was aided, abetted and, it is believed, financed in its dastardly conspiracies by an influential faction of the Mexican Catholic hierarchy. The church has been the persistent, inexorable, uncompromising foe of every reform measure instituted since 1910, when Madero led the revolt against the oppressive rule of the Church.

In spite of whatever our religious convictions may be, it becomes only too apparent after studying the situation thoroughly that some terrible mistakes have been made in the past, and that they will take some time and effort to rectify. That they can be rectified there is, however, every reason to believe, because the fault lies not with the church so much as it does with all those ecclesiastics from the time of Cortes down to the present, who by their actions have assisted, either willingly or unwillingly, in the exploitation of the country's resources and the enslavement of its people for their own selfish ends.

Americans or Europeans should not denounce the Government of Mexico as being Bolshevik. Before expressing an opinion on the situation, they should first study it very carefully and, if possible, go to Mexico and learn the facts. It will then not be difficult to see things in their true relation to one another, and rather than attempt to impede the efforts of the Government in its efforts to bring order out of a seemingly hopeless chaos, it would be far better to lend the Government the moral support which it needs and which it deserves if Mexico is to be permitted to fulfill her destiny as a great nation among the nations of the world.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

"The Period of the Judges has been called Israel's iron age. The people frequently lapsed into idolatry, and worship at the sanctuary was rendered difficult by the distracted state of the country. Rudeness of manners was displayed in Jael's murder of Sisera, in Jephthah's sacrifice of his daughter, in Gideon's treatment of the men of Succoth, in the sin of the men of Gibeah. Against these shadows, however, there stand out brightly the trust and filial piety of Jephthah's daughter, the fidelity of Ruth to Naomi, and the kindly and upright character of Boaz."

Size of Gideon's Army

Gideon's Forces, numbering thirty-two thousand warriors, were encamped on a mountain slope overlooking the valley of Jezreel, which lay to the north of the Israelites. The encampment was made early in the day, and the Midianites, after their long course of unhindered maraudings, must have been greatly surprised to see this first evidence of opposition. But they were in no wise alarmed, for they greatly outnumbered Gideon's army, numbering 135,000 men (Judg. 8:10). They filled the valley like grasshoppers (Judg. 7:12), and their camels were like the sands of the sea for multitude. In spite of this, the Lord bade Gideon make the usual proclamation (Deut. 20:8), bidding all that were fearful and afraid to return home from Mount Gilead (Gilboa?). To his dismay, 22,000 of his soldiers, disheartened by the numerical superiority of the enemy, took advantage of the permission, and left at once for their homes. Thus Gideon's army was reduced at a stroke to less than a third of what it had been, namely, to only 10,000. But it was immensely stronger when relieved of those 22,000 cowards.

Sifting the Army

In order to understand the test, we must see clearly the circumstances. Gideon's army was on one side of the stream, and the enemy on the other, and how near some scouting parties might be was unknown for the reeds and shrubs along the banks afforded ample cover for hostile ambushes. Those who bowed down, drinking headlong, did not appreciate their position or the foe; while the others, who merely crouched, lapping up the water with one hand, while they held their weapons with the other were aware of their danger, and ready against surprise. Thus the 300 showed exactly the qualities needed for the night attack which a few careless men might spoil.

Lapping

"You have seen a dog running in the shallow of a stream, and without stopping, snatching mouthfuls or tonguefuls of water, too intent on his pursuit to take a leisurely drink, never even while slaking his thirst turning aside or pausing from the chase.

So the man who is carried away with enthusiasm in a good cause will rarely pay enough attention to his own health or business, or to any of those objects men count most necessary. The common rank and file of Christians who are not sorry for excuse for lingering and hanging back from duty." They are more like the oxen, who "fix their eyes upon the stream, glue their lips to the water, and drink all they want heedless of everything except the slaking of their thirst. You may pound them, but they will not move until they have had enough."

Gideon's Strategem

The torches were concealed in the large pitchers, or water-or bread-jars, until the men had taken their stations, so that their movement might not be detected. Three hundred trumpets and torches represented regularly three hundred companies of troops; the breaking of the jars, the flashing of the lights, the deafening blare of trumpets on every side, aroused the enemy from sleep. The Israelites seemed by the many lights and trumpets to be present in overwhelming numbers. Each Midianite in the darkness mistook his neighbor for a foe. They slew one another. The panic was universal. The invaders, encumbered with women and children and plunder of flocks and herds, as nomadic invaders are always cumbered, fled in confusion, and scattered over the country.

Examples

There have been instances of somewhat similar victories of the few over the many. For example, "Maryland's Cornstalk Militia," in the Revolutionary War, when Mr. Purnell stationed himself on horseback on a hill, and has his servants armed with cornstalks for guns, march over the hill in sight of the enemy, and returning behind the hill march over it again and again, giving the appearance of a large body of soldiers. Rosecrans once did the same thing with his small company, marching to music all night. Hannibal extricated himself in a similar manner when surrounded by Fabius. And there is an account of an Arab chief escaping from a fortress in which he was besieged.

An Application

In the Christian Warfare the trumpets express our power of speaking for God. The torches are our character and example, lighted by God's grace and shining for men; and the pitchers represent our capacity for receiving the truth and the Spirit of God. Thus armed, the Christian can enter upon the warfare against evil with the certainty of victory.

Practical Points

1. God tests his people in various ways. Only those who stand the test can do his best work.
2. God can conquer by few as well as by many. But this story shows that the adaptation of means to an end is not contrary to the will of God.
3. God would have us do our part, and when we have done all the victory is his.
4. There is far too much trimming and seesawing in our day; the age wants men of stern fidelity to God and his cause.—Davidson.
5. Never be discouraged because your numbers are small and your means feeble. "One with God is a majority."
6. I would call Gideon an inverted Elijah. Elijah begins in full flame and gradually mellows down; Gideon begins in trembling and gradually gathers heat.—George Matheson.
7. God sometimes thins the ranks of the Church School News

By Prof. J. A. Garber, General Secretary

Certain reports indicate Brethren church schools are forging ahead with renewed zeal. Helpful rally day services were held in most of our schools. Teacher training classes have been started in a number of schools. Father and Son week has been observed by many of our workers. We hereby request superintendents and other workers to report activities of interest to the undersigned that we may share this information with fellow workers in the brotherhood. That we may encourage and provoke one another to good works.

December

December promises to be a month replete with opportunities and responsibilities. We have suggested the general theme, December and Others. Our greatest warrant for the consideration of others is found in the Bible. December the 5th has been designated Universal Bible Sunday with the appropriate topic "The Voice and the Book." American Bible Society, New York, offers suggestive helps.

The same day is to be remembered as Golden Rule Sunday. At this time church people are called upon to think of those in need in the Near East. Offerings will be made by many of the churches to help to provide the necessities of life for those in want.

This thought of others may continue through the month, helping us to focus our thinking upon the objects of the White Gift Offering. Old and young are to be encouraged to think of giving Self, Substance, and Service. Stewardship is the basic idea. The feelings centering about this idea may be given expression in the opportunity to give in support of Ashland College and Kentucky missions. Advancing years of growth find these causes with growing need.

The White Gift Service has proved to be the best with which to celebrate Christmas in the church school. Consider these helps: White Gifts for the King, Selection No. 1, Meigs Publishing Company, Indianapolis, Indiana; A Service for Christmas, Joyful Voices, The Judson Press, Chicago; Good Will Among Men, The Pilgrim Press, Chicago; The Eternal Guest, a Christmas Pageant, Grace Sloan Overton. The last named may be found in the November number of Religious Education. Church school superintendents will do well to acquaint themselves with the offerings of these publishers.

Facing a Problem

By Robert D. Crees

The tendency of people at present seems to be to commercialize most of their activities. The modern man judges things in terms of money value and this largely determines his actions. This tendency has even got a grip on our colleges of today. Many students think of education in terms of dollars and cents. The poor medical student feels that he can afford to borrow the money needed for his college education because the medical field offers rich compensation to the learned practitioner. It is so with the young engineer and the young lawyer. There is a class of young men, however, who are striving for an education in order that they might serve humanity and not that they might accumulate wealth for themselves. Included in this class is the theological student,—the young preacher. Often he is poor and has to struggle alone—without outside aid—to get his training. He feels that he cannot borrow, for he will have a hard time paying it back. The churches of today do not pay much—they do not think that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is worth as much as the clothes they wear and the amusements they indulge in. Because of this fact, many Seminary graduates go into other fields of work, for they do not feel that they can support themselves with the small salaries that the churches offer them. Brethren young men are doing this very thing. There is but one solution. The Brethren church must help her ministerial students while they are in college and the Brotherhood must give more liberally of their money to Home Missions, so that the small, weak churches may be capable of supporting full-time pastors.

As I Go On My Way

*My life shall touch a dozen lives before this day is done—
Leave countless marks, for good or ill ere sets this evening's sun.
Shall fair or foul its imprint prove, on those my life shall hail?
Shall benison my impress be, or shall a blight prevail?
When to the last great reckoning the lives I meet must go,
Shall this wee, fleeting touch of mine have added joy or woe?
Shall he who looks their records o'er—of name and time and place—
Says: "Here a blessed influence came," or "Here is evil's trace"?
From out each point of contact of my life with other lives
Flows ever that which helps the one who for the summit strives
The troubled souls encountered—does it sweeten with its touch?
Or does it more embitter those embittered overmuch?
Does love through every handclasp flow in sympathy's caress?
Do those that I have greeted know a new-born hopefulness?
Are tolerance and charity the keynote of my song,
As I go plodding onward with earth's eager anxious throng?*

*My life must touch a million lives in some way ere I go
From this dear world of struggle to the land I do not know.
So this the wish I always wish, the prayer I ever pray:
Let my life help the other lives it touches by the way!—Strickland Gillilan.*

MOTIVES OF CHARITY

What are the poor to whom we give but our carriers by whom we convey our goods from earth to heaven? Give then; thou art but giving to thy carrier; he carrieth what thou givest to heaven. How, sayest thou, does he carry it to heaven? What! hast thou forgotten, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, receive the kingdom; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat," and "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of mine, ye did it unto me"? If thou hast not despised the beggar that standeth before thee, consider to whom what thou gavest him hath come. "Inasmuch," saith he, "as ye did it unto the least of one of mine, ye did it unto me." He hath received it who gave thee wherewith to give. He hath received it who in the end will give his own self to thee.—S. Augustine.

JUNIOR ENDEVAOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for November 28)

Christian Endeavor Around the World. Phil. 2:4

On November 26, 1926, a band of Junior Christian Endeavorers met at their usual place in the basement of the church. I am not going to tell you what church it was that they met in, because I want you to see if you can recognize them. There were some little boys and some little girls in the group and the topic for the evening was, "Christian Endeavor Around the World."

Mary was the leader of the meeting. She had met with the Program Committee and the Superintendent and together they had planned the program for that particular evening. To open the meeting, Mary said, "Our Superintendent will lead us in prayer." All the Juniors bowed their heads and listened while prayer was made that they might be worthy Juniors and that they might help to spread Christian Endeavor all around the world.

"The topic for our meeting is 'Christian Endeavor Around the World' and we are going to try to think of the ways in which we can make our society one of the best anywhere around the world and also we want to see if we can think of any way that we can help to spread Christian Endeavor all around the earth. The Scripture lesson is, 'Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.' This means that if we are worthy Christian Endeavorers we will think of others and help others. We want to be the best kind of Juniors that could possibly live. Let's think of others first and ourselves afterwards."

When Mary sat down after making her little talk and reading the lesson she nodded her head to Edith. Then Edith came up in front and told a story about some Junior Christian Endeavorers who were always helping others and doing things for others. When Edith finished her story everyone felt like the thing that was most important in their lives and their work was to help others.

"We will now sing, 'Help Somebody Today,'" said Mary, and everyone meant just what they said when they sang that song.

After the song Lee arose and told the story of the "Good Samaritan." "The man who was kind and helped the sick man was the kind of man we Juniors want to be when we grow big. Let's begin now to help others so that we will grow into the right kind of men and women."

"There are other things that we must do if we want to be worthy Juniors besides helping others. We will have some Scripture verses that tell us some other things that we should do if we would be the right kind of Juniors."

"The Bible tells us that we must pray. In Ephesians we have a verse about prayer which I will read." This was Johnny's speech before he read the Bible verse:

"I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." This shows that we should love to go to church. If we are the right kind of Juniors we will always be loyal to our church and always enjoy going to it." This was the speech which Eleanor made and it was a good one, don't you think?

After all these good speeches, the Superintendent told her children that she was proud of their speeches and that she hoped that they would be able to be as good at doing all these things as they were at saying them. "Now as to the matter of spreading Christian Endeavor all over the world, if you Juniors will do your best to make your society very, very good, others will hear about you and try to do as well as you do. Let's try to set worthy examples for others to follow."

After singing some more songs the Juniors went home and all of them decided to try to live just the kinds of lives that they had talked about that evening.

Now Junior boys and girls, will you try to have as good a meeting as this on November 28?

First Impressions of the Work in the Kentucky Mountains

By Freeman Ankrum, Member Home Board and Kentucky Committee

It was a privilege to spend several days in the mountains of Kentucky the latter part of October visiting the work at Lost Creek and Krypton. Inasmuch as this was my first visit I went with various anticipations of what might be found. My impressions lead me to state that it is very difficult to realize the work that has been done there without being on the field to witness the marked and changed conditions brought about by the work at Lost Creek.

Faculty of Riverside Institute

Brother Early met me at Haddix with a hay burner which I proceeded to ride to the Institute. As we started out he remarked that I would soon realize why horse and mule back was the popular way of travel. His predictions were correct when it was noticed that there had been a separation between the floor of the bridge and the road. If the holes in the bridge get much larger a certain make of small car will be in danger of falling through into the river. The train was true to its record, so was late and when we reached the Institute darkness had wrapped the mountains in its cloak. Meal time was over in the dormitory and a bunch of busy girls were making the room ring with their songs and their work. There seemed to be plenty of provisions left, so Brother Early and I proceeded to satisfy the inner men. A splendid visit was had that night with the Drushals and the Earlys. I was splendidly entertained in the home of Brother Drushal the entire time at Lost Creek with the exception of a couple meals taken in the dormitory. It was indeed a pleasure to visit with the pioneer of the Kentucky work who modestly referred at times to the difficulties overcome in the establishing and maintaining of the work.

I found a splendid personnel represented in the faculty and the best of spirit present. Each seems to have but one idea and that the advancement of the work. Since Brother Early is the new financial secretary, perhaps a few words in regard to him would not be out of place. The Brethren church ought to feel highly complimented in that we have a person or persons like Brother and Sister Early who are sincere, conscientious, well qualified for their work, and who are making sacrifices to be there. Brother Early already has plans that with the minimum of expenditure will go a long way toward making the Institution self-supporting. The farm that has furnished little but its company can be made to furnish something more tangible. Two chapel talks were given, and an address on Wednesday night. There are some sixty people boarding at the Institution. These are nice looking and intelligent folks that speak well for the future of the part of the state where eventually they may have their homes. The only thing that they had lacked was an opportunity and Riverside is furnishing that. Also met young men who had graduated and were holding responsible positions which would not have been possible had there not been an Institution there.

The work that is being done is being done with a very meager equipment. There are various needs in the dormitories that must be taken care of, if we expect students to enroll in the Institution. Brother Early has been doing a lot of repair work that had been neglected and had become a necessity, and did it almost with the proverbial jack knife and hammer. He is working from fourteen to eighteen hours a day and is indeed a busy man.

The teaching is thoroughly sound and if there are any who go out as Modernists, it will not be because the present faculty has filled them with the teaching.

A night and a day was spent with Brother and Sister Kinzie at Krypton. Here they are working hard, teaching five days a week in the basement of the church, preaching at Krypton, and preaching and conducting Sunday schools at nearby stations. They are handling a very difficult work here. Though there is a free school nearby a short visit to it will soon show reasons why it is better to patronize the one in the basement of the church. There is an opportunity to build up a small and partly self-supporting school here teaching the lower grades. Personally I can see little immediate prospect for strong and self supporting churches as we are accustomed to in the North, either at Lost Creek or Krypton. Working through the school seems to be the best way for laying a foundation in the lives of the young people. In after years, a church that is well organized and self-supporting may be looked for. Conditions are entirely different there from what we find in the North, and we cannot expect to change the customs of generations in a few years. At the present time there is in the course of construction a road that will pass by the Institute at Lost Creek and near enough Krypton to later be connected there. This is going to have a marked influence on the work and will help in many ways.

I feel that with a splendid offering this Thanksgiving we will be enabled at a very minimum of expenditure to make additional improvements that will in themselves yield much. No man can measure successfully the work in the Kentucky mountains who uses the yard stick of an organized self supporting church to measure by. The terms are terms of human life, invisionated, inspired and filled with the desire for service. To read upon paper the record of the work done is insufficient, and full realization comes only after a personal visit to the field Oak Hill, West Virginia.

RIVERSIDE INSTITUTE, LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Miss Stoffer of Homeworth, Ohio, teaches the 7th and 8th grades. This is now her fifth year in that work, and she has established such a high standard of work and character that her room is usually full and overflowing. Mrs. M. D. Early of Los Angeles, California, is on her first year. She shows herself to be an efficient, consecrated worker. Miss Hooks of Kittanning, Pennsylvania, is on her 4th year, now teaching in the high school. She had taught one year in the grades, then left for a couple of years during which time she completed her college work at Berea College, Berea, Kentucky. She is well liked and doing efficient work. Mrs. Drushal teaches the Freshman Bible Class, cares for the home with three growing children in it, and also looks after the Junior Christian Endeavor work. Miss Ruth Hornsby of Little Marsh, Pennsylvania, is in the work for the first year. She is well liked, and her work shows efficiency in teaching. She teaches in the high school. Mrs. Addie M. Dye is also in the work for the first year. She is assistant matron and head cook. She is consecrated and well liked. Mrs. Srack of Long Beach, California, is now on her 3rd year. She teaches Bible entirely. Her work is very effective and uplifting. Her life has been a constant uplift and inspiration to all. Brother Early of Los Angeles, California, is also on his first year. He is full of energy, and whatsoever his hands find to do, is done with hearty good will and deep consecration. He teaches in the high school, and acts as financial secretary, and looks after the repair work. The writer is pastor, teaches in the high school, and coaches the athletic activities of the boys, and this year the girls also.

Mrs. Srack and her Bible Class

The above named persons are trying to do the work that is ordinarily done by more helpers. The problems press hard at times, and problems of such nature that not by man's strength but by the help of the Lord can they be overcome. But, he that putteth his hand to the plow and looketh backward, is not fit for the progress which our Lord has planned for all his work. This will of the Lord will be worked out, if we abide faithfully in his will, and give him the chance. But if self pushes in ahead of the Lord's leading, then trouble comes. We believe that all things which hinder the work of the Lord, shall be overcome by his leading, and thus we press on, knowing that the results will come in due time.

There are some visible results now, as follows: One foreign missionary, three local preachers, two of whom will do full time service for our Lord, and a great number of school teachers who owe their present efficiency largely to what they received at Riverside Institute. The work has now so established itself, that it is a going concern. More and more are we invited out to preach at other places, and as we go about, we hear such expressions of the work that it can only mean that it has found a large, deep place in the lives of the people of considerable distance around.

advances are usually met with "no funds," and hence the door of opportunity cannot be entered. This year we have had to turn away pupils. Also we have not been able to give all the work that should have been given, work which is fundamental in this kind of a work. How long shall the Board be circumscribed by the lack of funds? And how long shall we continue to let opportunities pass without profiting by them? May this Thanksgiving time see such an offering

The High School, Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, Kentucky

This also means that the work is only limited by the financial support which it may have. Time and time again do we see opportunities for advancement, but these that our God has called out to be done, not only at Lost Creek, but throughout the brotherhood, may be done with funds sufficient to do it. G. E. DRUSHAL.

REPORT OF THE THIRD BRETHREN CHURCH OF JOHNSTOWN

This is our first report of the work here since becoming pastor—April 1. We shall endeavor to give a brief summary of work accomplished without going into detail. Soon after we all got acquainted and received a good start the idea of building a new parsonage was the predominant item of business. After careful consideration the church and family moved into the new house. Every decided to build. On August 12, the pastor member of the church was and is just as proud of their new home as was the pastor and family.

On Saturday evening, October 9, Rev. Clarence Sickie presented the work of Argentina, South America. His singing for the people took well. There was a large crowd out to meet him, even though it was Saturday night. Every one enjoyed the illustrated lecture which he presented in a way which made you feel that Brother Sickie not only knew what he was talking about, but also had his heart and soul in the work.

October 10, Sunday, was Rally Day in connection with the Layman Movement. Not only was the attendance and offering good, but every one was agreeably surprised because of the unusual talent displayed among the laymen. The only preacher on the entire program was Brother Sickie.

The Moderator of the church, in order to express his profound appreciation for the wonderful efficient and untiring efforts put forth by the Building Committee and Church Board, decided to give a banquet. This event took place on Saturday night, October 16. There are not many times when the entire official board family gets together but when it does there is certainly an impressive sight. Especially is this true when seated around a common table. It will pay any church to try it. The S. M. M. served at this occasion "In-Pink-Tea-Apple-Pie-Order." The girls deserve much praise for the commendable way in which they strive, untiringly, to serve their church. This, by the way, is nothing new for the girls. They are always alive and doing things. After the meal all repaired to the auditorium where a splendid program was given. Rev. W. C. Benshoff was the speaker of the evening, and gave a stirring address. Brother John Conrad, Moderator, presided over the entire program. When Brother Elmer Keifer, the Moderator, decides to do things he usually "does it up brown." This is what he did this time. Congratulations, Moderator; that was fine.

The formal dedication of the new parsonage occurred on Sunday, October 24. The day was also observed as Homecoming Day. The pastor preached the sermon in the morning. Dinner was served at the church for any who cared to stay, by the Women's Bible Class. After we had partaken of the sumptuous and delicious dinner we knew then where our girls learned to cook and serve so well. What would we do without the women? The afternoon program began promptly at 2:30. The outside speakers were Rev. Dyoll Belote who made the prayer and charged the Trustees with the care of the new building. Rev. Charles Ashman preached the sermon of the occasion. The pastor presented the matter of finance. The evening service was a continuation of the spirit of the day, pastor again occupying the pulpit. While the day was one continual downpour of rain, every one expressed complete satisfaction with the results and the spirit that so beautifully pervaded the atmosphere. The entire amount of money raised was $6443.20. This more than covered the remaining debt of the parsonage but will be applied to the church debt.

We are now in the midst of evangelistic services, which began November 7 and will continue, at least, until November 21. Rev. H. E. Eppley is efficiently conducting the song services. The people are responding in a commendable way. The pastor is the evangelist and is greeted each night with large crowds. Grant that much good may result from these services and his name glorified. His Will be done. Pray for us.

J. L. GINGRICH.

IN A REVIVAL AT ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

The writer was called by H. H. Rowsey, pastor of the Roanoke, Virginia, church on October 12 for a three week revival meeting. I shall always regard my experience in Roanoke as a happy one. Brother Rowsey and his well known wife, who was formerly Miss Hattie Becknell, are to be congratulated for their luck in going into a field such as Roanoke. Roanoke is by no means an easy field, but it is not by any means the worst in the brotherhood. Roanoke has fine spirited people in the church, and people that are as loyal as any Brethren. All that is necessary for this church is a real vision and their possibilities shall be accomplished.

It was quite a pleasure to work with Brother Rowsey. We visited homes together and worked among factory men, and answered all calls that came to our notice. Rowsey's heart was in his work and he is anxious to see the work at Roanoke prosper. Brother Rowsey is only a young man in the ministry and like all young men needs encouragement. I say again I admire his pluck in going into his home community and shouldering the responsibility of a pastorate. By the time Reverend Rowsey is through with Roanoke he will be ready for any church.

My treatment while in Roanoke was splendid. I made myself at home with Brother and Sister F. L. Brumbaugh, not forgetting the other homes that entertained me during the day. It was splendid treatment by pastor and people. God bless them all.

B. F. OWEN.

GARWIN, IOWA

We have gotten permanently located by this time. After a hard struggle through rain and mud, we landed here September 9th, just one week late. When we arrived here we found that everything was in good condition, as that is the way Brother Helser leaves things.

We are very well pleased and eager to do the Lord's will where he has called us to labor. You would have to go outside the old U. S. A. to find a more congenial people with which to labor. A couple of weeks or more after we arrived, they gave us a shower, not the kind we were in on our trip here, however. By the time people quit coming our pig pen was occupied with pigs, the chicken house with chickens, the wood house filled with wood and the cellar with canned fruit and vegetables, and other articles. Brother pastors, if you ever get a call to come here, you need never worry but what you will be provided for.

Work here is in a splendid condition, and is moving along fine. We ask for the prayers of the brotherhood, as we are young in the ministry. Pray for us, brethren.

The Lord saw fit to call one of our dearly beloved brethren, Brother Harvey N. Richards. The funeral was held Sunday, October 31. He was one of our most influential members. He was a deacon and secretary-treasurer of the church for the past several years. He will be missed by all who knew him.

C. A. LANDIS, Pastor.

We must cultivate a sense of stewardship, which is the recognition of the ultimate fountain of our life; it is homage paid where homage is due.

There must be a method and a plan of campaign if we are to overcome the deadly attacks of the grim army of selfishness and meanness, and I am sure that part of this method must be the assignment of a certain proportion of our income to the ministries of beneficence. This must not be less than a tenth.

I would advise young people not to dribble their tenth away in small contributions, but occasionally go in for the giving of a large sum, for such will be like a fine drive at golf—a good send off—and the lesser strokes will come in its train.

And if you find the tenth exhausted, you may take a dash at your tithe and break all your records. You will do it just to prove that you are not the victim of your own rule. It will be like a plunge into deep, cold water, and you will emerge with a healthy glow.—J. H. Jowett.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Allentown, Pennsylvania for Ashland College

This church is located about fifty miles from Philadelphia and is in the midst of a large population. Allentown and Bethlehem are practically one city and Easton is only a few miles away. The largest silk mills in the world are located here, as well as the great Bethlehem steel mills.

There is no question, but what we have a large field to operate in here as a church. Due to several hindering causes the work has not gone forward as it should have done. There are however some very capable and faithful members of the Brethren church here and we trust that in the very near future an aggressive and united effort may put the church in the place that it should occupy.

They have a modest brick church and an excellent eight room parsonage free from indebtedness, besides this, the church has a neat building fund accumulated in looking forward to a building program.

I am satisfied that with the right leadership and a united membership a big work can be done in this field. IN MY JUDGMENT THE BIGGEST PIECE OF WORK FOR THE BRETHREN CHURCH AT THIS TIME IS TO BUILD UP WORK IN SUCH PLACES WHERE WE OWN CHURCH PROPERTY AND HAVE A LARGE NUCLEUS OF MEMBERS, RATHER THAN LAUNCH OUT IN PLACES TO BUILD UP A WORK WHERE WE HAVE PRACTICALLY NOTHING.

I found the membership in this place interested in the College and gave me all the help they were able to give.

The total gift of the church for the endowment was $700.00, which under the condition was good.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PITTSBURGH

About three months have passed since the Pittsburgh church has been heard from through these columns, and we shall therefore endeavor to give the readers of the "Evangelist" a retrospective view of happenings during that period of time.

The summer season, with its vacation periods, and resultant so-called "summer slump" is, of course, a thing of the past so far as the year 1926 is concerned, and we are preparing to launch into the program for the winter that is now before us.

The Pittsburgh church was represented at National Conference by our Pastor, Rev. A. L. Lynn, and his wife; Ira C. Wilcox; and Mr. and Mrs. V. C. Sternquist. The latter, while residing at Gary, Indiana, still retain their membership in the Pittsburgh church.

Early in September, at the regular monthly Sunday School Cabinet Meeting, the Annual Election of Sunday School officers was held. Some of the officers were re-elected; others were not. One important improvement was the election of a Superintendent of the Children's Division. This officer has complete jurisdiction over the three departments of the Children's Division.

Then again, on the last Sunday in September our School observed Rally Day. There was a very good attendance and we were extremely fortunate in having with us, as the speaker for the day, Mr. George W. Penniman, General Secretary of the Allegheny County Sabbath School Association.

For a period of three weeks, during September, we loaned the services of our pastor to conduct an evangelistic effort at Oak Hill, West Virginia. We understand this meeting was a success from an accession standpoint, and we were pleased to notice an account in a recent issue of the "Evangelist" from Rev. Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the Oak Hill church, in which account he speaks very highly of the oratorical ability of Rev. Lynn. The members of the church here at Pittsburgh are glad to learn that his services were so highly appreciated by the Oak Hill congregation.

On two of the Sundays Rev. Lynn was away at Oak Hill, the pulpit was supplied by Rev. A. L. DeLozier, of Ashland College and we are very grateful to Brother DeLozier for his services.

Early in September the Sunday evening services were resumed and the attendance at these services has been steadily increasing.

Unfortunately, it was not possible for a number of the membership to attend the Pennsylvania District Conference at Berlin, early in October, but we feel sure that those three who did attend were greatly benefited thereby and fully enjoyed the hospitality of the conference church.

On Sunday, October 10th, the Layman's Movement, as outlined at the National Conference, was placed before our people. Brother Harry F. E. O'Neill stressed this work in his usual efficient manner. Incidentally, Brother O'Neill brought with him his young daughter, Ruth, to be baptized and received into the church of her parents.

The Quarterly Church Business Meeting was held on October 13th when many important items of a business character were brought to the attention of the membership.

This brings us down to within the past two weeks. During that time we have engaged in an evangelistic campaign under the direction of Rev. W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the church at Berlin, Pennsylvania. Rev. Benshoff delivered some wonderful sermons during his sojourn in Pittsburgh. The meetings were fairly well attended and, while they perhaps did not measure up to what might be expected in the way of numerical additions to the church, we are sure that those who were privileged to listen to Rev. Benshoff during the deliverance of his powerful sermons, received much inspiration.

Last Sunday, the campaign was concluded, and on Sunday evening, 114 of the Pittsburgh Brethren found their places at the communion tables and once again engaged in and enjoyed those most sacred and solemn ordinances. During the afternoon the pastor and deacons administered communion to 5 sick and "shut-ins," thus making a total of 119 receiving the benefits of this service. At the close of the Communion service, Brother Benshoff brought a few well-chosen remarks—a resume of the work here and thanking the Pittsburgh Brethren for the kindness and hospitality which had been accorded him. Brother Benshoff seemed to be particularly impressed and pleased with the fact that there were so many Brethren present at the communion tables from points in and near Altoona, Johnstown, Bedford County and Somerset County with whom he was acquainted. In conclusion, Brother Benshoff very generously extended a hearty welcome to any of the Pittsburgh Brethren to enjoy the hospitality of the Somerset County Brethren at Berlin.

SEVERAL CITIES CONSIDERED AS PLACE FOR UNIVERSAL RELIGIOUS PEACE CONGRESS

From the Church Peace Union

Four continents are competing for the Universal Religious Peace Congress, according to a report of Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, who has just returned from Europe where he consulted religious leaders of the Old World concerning the plan to hold an international meeting at which all the great religions of the world will be represented. Dr. Atkinson is General Secretary of the Church Peace Union which first proposed this Congress two years ago and appointed a committee to make preparations. Several cities in the United States have invited the Congress to meet there. There are applicants from every continent, excepting South America and Australia. Among the Old World cities under consideration are Geneva, Switzerland; Cairo, Egypt, and Calcutta, India.

An international committee of 1000 is now being organized, to include representatives of the eleven great living religions of the world, namely, Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Confucian, Shintoists, Taoists, Hindoos, Parsees, Jains and Sikhs. These eleven religions will be assigned representation in the Committee of 1000 is now numerical proportion.

The purpose of the Congress, according to Dr. Atkinson's report, is to bring together adherents of the world's living religions to discuss the questions relating to international justice and good will, to make known the content of each religion relating to these questions, and to compare the ideals of human brotherhood and world peace. It will be based upon the principle that world peace can be established only through the recognition of Universal Brotherhood.

"We have now secured the tacit approval of leaders among the Mohammedans, Confucians and three of the religions of India. At Geneva I met Dr. K. T. Paul and Sahdu John Nelson and Lala Ram, men representative of the highest thought and best life of India. They are enthusiastic for a conference and have carried with them to India a letter explaining the plans of the conference and will undertake to form an "All India" Committee with Gandhi as Honorary Chairman. I find in discussing the question with representatives in Britain that Gandhi is now looked upon as the best hope for peace in the Far East. In Paris I had a conference with Cheikh Saad El Labbane, who is a representative in the West of a strong group of Mohemmedans centering in Cairo. In every conference I have had nothing but encouragement. The plans for the Conference are being perfected so that this great world enterprise will be widely representative and will expose the mind of all the religions and not be simply a conference imposed on the rest of the world by one Christian group."

The present plan is to hold the Congress during 1930.

(Editorial Note: It will be interesting and informing to have such a conference of the World Religions on Peace held for the sake of learning what the other religions may have to say on "peace." It may be they have assimilated enough of the spirit of Christianity to be able to speak convincingly on peace. And it is possible they may offer cooperation in an effort to attain world peace. But many Christians will find it hard to believe that an effective program for world peace can consistently claim the cooperation of the Christian except as it centers in the person and teachings of Jesus Christ. And that would exclude pagan participation.)

want to "cheap" it through. We might sleep in an old cart like "Rags and Bones" of London, before he was "twice-born"; or walk in bare feet and eliminate the cobbler's charge. No, No! Folks would give us the wrong position in society. May not God need to give us the lower position in his kingdom?

Money is indeed the crying need today in the homeland, and the only appeal we have to make is "CONSISTENCY."—honest consistency—in the use and expenditure of the funds of which the Lord makes us stewards.

Recently a young man was heard to remark, in reference to his use of cigarettes, "I average about one penny box of matches a day." One cent a day—$3.65 a year—for matches only, to light cigarettes—the most of the latter running to almost incalculable figures!

And the church asks a dollar or two a year per member for extension of the church at home and can't get it! Thrice shame on us! Can't we "buy" a "box of matches" a day for the Lord's work?

"THERE WAS A GREAT EARTHQUAKE"

Charles V. Vickrey

The city of Leniakan (formerly Alexandropol) which was the center of the recent destructive earthquake in Armenia is also the location of the great Near East Relief orphanage center, where more than 9,000 children are under the supervision and care of twenty-three American directors, teachers, doctors, nurses, etc. The buildings, formerly Russian army barracks, were so damaged they have to be abandoned, at least temporarily, and the children and the American personnel are sleeping out of doors, as are the people of the many destroyed villages in the adjoining districts.

The Chairman of the Armenian Government Relief Commission has stated: "Although we of the government are exerting the utmost energy to meet the situation, the disaster is so great that all help from any source is urgently needed and greatly appreciated."

After a survey of the devastated district the American relief workers have cabled to Near East Relief an urgent appeal for:

1. $125,000.00 for sheltering, feeding and clothing 1800 village children, ages two to twelve years November through June, either using present orphanage centers or establishing housing units in various villages.
2. $50,000.00 worth old clothes for distribution to villagers and children.
3. $50,000.00 to continue handling hospitalization and medical needs of Leninakan district, which work has fallen upon Near East Relief because the government medical building has been destroyed.
4. $23,000.00 worth blankets for distribution to villagers and townspeople.
5. $50,000.00 additional for various individual or special needs through the winter months."

The above emergency requirements are in addition to the $700,000 required for the normal expenses of the great orphanage of 9000 children and also exclusive of the normal requirements for orphanage work in Syria, Palestine, Greece, and Persia.

THE PATIENCE OF GOD

When I was in college, I went to hear Robert G. Ingersoll speak on "The Mistakes of Moses." He was a magnificent looking man. The God he blasphemed had given him a wonderful body and voice. He said in his address: "I hear people talk of the omnipotence of God. I will give God three minutes to strike me dead for what I have said of him on this platform. I dare him to do it."

Ingersoll held his watch in his hand during the tense silence of those three minutes. People shivered lest something terrible should happen. At the end he said, "There, you see there is nobody there."

I remember the comment on the scene made by a godly Christian: "Did the little man think that he could exhaust the patience of the eternal God in three minutes?"

Ingersoll's writings now are almost forgotten; while of the Book that he ridiculed 6,582,000 copies were sold in 1924. It will continue to sell. It owes its permanence and currency to the life that roots its fellowship in the living God.—Dean Charles R. Brown.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

JONES-WALKER—John M. Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. Theophilus Jones, and Miss Johnetta Marie Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burton Walker, were united in marriage Thursday evening, at five o'clock, October 28, by the Rev. Joseph L. Gingrich, pastor of the Third Brethren church, at the parsonage in Johnstown, Pa. These highly respected young people will make their home at Monessen, Pa., where the bridegroom is engaged in business as an insurance agent. The bride was, until recently, employed as saleslady in the company store at Bessemer, Pa. JOS. L. GINGRICH.

FARABAUGH-FOSTER—Frederick Farabaugh, son of J. C. and Anna Farabaugh, and Violet Foster, daughter of Harry and Mary Elizabeth Foster, both of near Johnstown, Pa., were married at the Third Brethren parsonage. The ceremony was performed, November 1, at 9:30 P. M. o'clock. Their attendants were Mr. Francis Minahan, Miss Alvarene Smith, Miss Evelyn Horner and Mr. John Lutze. The impressive ring ceremony was used.

JOS. L. GINGRICH.

IN THE SHADOW

RICHARDS—Harvey N. Richards, the son of Elisha and Mary Richards, was born in the Carleton neighborhood, near LeGrand, Iowa, July 18th, 1876, and with the exception of a year spent in Oregon in the interest of his health, lived all his life in the neighborhood. His farm joined the Carleton Brethren church on the south. On May 15th, 1899, he was united in marriage to Miss Della Haynes, who survives him. To this union were born two children, Mrs. Wayne Reed of Green Mountain, Iowa, and Belden, living at home. He is also survived by two brothers, C. E. Richards of near Garwin and A. W. Richards of near Marshalltown, and four sisters, Mrs. Perry Moore of Sheffield; Mrs. Joe Haynes of LeGrand; Mrs. Homer Harrison of Melbourne; and Mrs. Samuel Judge of Garwin.

Harvey with Mrs. Richards united with the Garwin Brethren church, June 26, 1899, and from that time on he has been a loyal and consistent member and worker. He was elected deacon about the year 1920, which position he has filled faithfully until the last. For several years he has been secretary-treasurer of the church.

Two weeks previous to his death he went to a hospital for an operation little thinking that he would not return, but septic poisoning set in and brought him to his death October 28, 1926. We anointed him at his own request soon after the operation.

We had just begun to know Harvey, but to know him was to love him. He was the closest member to the parsonage and he ever lived for those about him. He was a shining example of sacrifice and service. His life far better than words has already expressed his sterling worth. Funeral was held in the Carleton Brethren church of Garwin, with a brief service in the home, the writer officiating.

C. A. LANDIS.

COPP—Mollie Harrison Copp, eldest daughter of David E. and Julia F. Copp, went to her rest September 29th, 1926, after an operation, at the age of 48 years, 8 months and 26 days. The writer was called to preach her funeral in the Pike Valley Church of the Brethren near Maurertown, Virginia, assisted by Elder E. B. Shaver, who baptized her over 12 years ago. Her body was laid to rest in the cemetery of the same church, beside that of her mother who passed away 14 years ago. Her father had passed away on August 4th last, having been struck by an auto on the streets of Washington, D. C. Sister Copp lived in our home during the last two years and in all that time she showed a kind and loving disposition. She had proved herself an efficient clerk in the Landsburg big department store of this city, which firm sent a beautiful floral offering to her funeral as a token of respect. The text of the sermon was, "I am the resurrection and the life."

S. P. FOGLE.

WORKMAN—Hattie F. Rice Workman, wife of Delman S. Workman, was born in Brown Township, Knox County, Ohio, January 1, 1856, departed this life November 7, 1926.

This dear woman when living was a noble spirited woman and all who knew her loved her. She was never very strong physically. Her ill health would not permit her to do all she would like to. She suffered more over not being able to do all she would like to for others than over her affliction. Despite her ill health she did all in her power to help those in need. The many acts of kindness rendered by this dear sister in her quiet way, will be honored by her Lord when she meets him.

She united with the Brethren church at Buckeye City in 1898 and remained faithful to her calling until her Lord took her home.

She leaves her noble husband, D. S. Workman, five sisters, a number of relatives, and a host of friends. Services were conducted by the writer at the home formerly known as Buckeye City, but now both towns being called Danville. B. F. OWEN.

HOWELL—Mrs. Fannie Howell was born in Prairie City, Iowa, May 28, 1869, and departed this life October 28, 1926, at her home, seven miles northeast of Fort Scott, Kansas, at the age of 57 years, 5 months.

Mrs. Howell had been a resident of the county in which she died for 40 years. The cause of her death was cancer. She is survived by her husband, Mr. Frank Howell, and five children, the latter being, Mrs. Edith Mann, of Eads, Colorado; Harry E., of Dunlap, Iowa; Fred G., of Baxter Springs, Kansas; Clifton L., of Fort Scott, and Edgar A., of Dunlap, Iowa. Also by a sister, Mrs. Rebecca McDonald of Los Angeles, California. The funeral was conducted from the Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas, by the writer.

The church was filled with sympathizing friends and many beautiful floral offerings betokened the high esteem in which she was held. Interment was made in the Maple Grove cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

MEYERS—John Henry Meyers was born at Brunswick, Mo., January 18, 1871, and passed away very suddenly of paralysis, November 3, 1926, at the age of 55 years, 9 months and 15 days.

Mr. Meyers came to Fort Scott, Kansas, many years ago and was in the employ of the Frisco Railroad Company for a number of years, until his health failed.

He leaves a wife who was very ill with paralysis at the time of his death. Mr. Meyers was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, who furnished the pall bearers. Funeral was conducted by the writer, from the Cheney Undertaking parlors. The services were attended by a large number of friends and beautiful floral offerings were made. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Evergreen cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

PRESTON—William Allen Preston was born at Center Creek, Jasper County, Missouri, August 23, 1852 and died at the home of his youngest daughter, Mrs. C. P. Hagee, Fort Scott, Kansas, November 8th, 1926 at the age of 74 years, two months and fifteen days.

Mr. Preston was married to Miss Clarinda Dent on February 26, 1873, and to this union were born nine children, three of which preceded him in death. His wife also preceded him by 31 years. The children are Mrs. L. G. Wood, wife of the writer; Mrs. C. L. Burchell; Mrs. C. P. Hagee, and Robert A. Preston, all of Fort Scott, Kansas; Mrs. Herb Pond of Syracuse, Kansas, and Frank G. Preston of Tacoma, Washington. He also leaves six grandchildren, Gerald Wood, Clara and Margaret Preston and Warren Hagee of Fort Scott, and Robert and Harold Preston of Tacoma, Washington.

The funeral service was conducted from the Junior High School Auditorium, at the suggestion of the School Board with whom Mr. Preston had been associated for more than 30 years. Mr. Liston, the superintendent of schools, made a very affecting talk on the life and character of the deceased. Dr. George Parkinson, pastor of the First Methodist church conducted the service in a very fitting way, and was assisted by the writer, at the request of the deceased, who made his own funeral arrangements, two days before he died.

Many beautiful floral offerings were made and the body was laid to rest in the family lot at the Pleasant View cemetery.

ANNOUNCEMENTSTHIRD CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN

The third Brethren Church, Johnstown, will observe the Lord's Supper and Holy Communion on Sunday evening, November 21, at 7 o'clock. We are desirous that every member be present. All persons desiring to share these blessings with us are cordially invited to come and worship.

—Pastor JOS. L. GINGRICH.

THANKSGIVING OFFERING NOTICE

Special effort has been made to reach every Brethren church in our brotherhood, through the pastor, superintendent of Sunday school, or both, with a letter of appeal, containing tracts, offering envelopes, etc., calling attention to the Thanksgiving offering for Home Missions. If any church was omitted, will not the pastor or some representative, please write us at once and we shall fill the order promptly. Letters were doubtless sent to the members in most churches, by the pastor, inclosing a tract and offering envelope. If it will be impossible for any member to be present at the church when your offering is made, please see that your pastor receives your contribution, or if you prefer, you may send it direct to your General Secretary, William A. Gearhart, 1101 American Building, Dayton, Ohio. State your full name, address and the name of the congregation where you hold your membership, so we shall be able to give the proper church credit for the offering. SURELY WE SHOULD RECEIVE SOME CONTRIBUTION FROM EVERY MEMBER OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH. IF WE ARE THANKFUL FOR ALL THE GOOD LORD HAS DONE FOR US, LET US EXPRESS OUR SINCEREST GRATITUDE BY GIVING LIBERALLY AND CHEERFULLY TO OUR HOME MISSION WORK.

WILLIAM A. GEARHART,
Home Mission Secretary.

"Our Moral and Spiritual Life"

As we brought the President's Thanksgiving Proclamation to the attention of a friend the other day he remarked, "Thanksgiving proclamations are something like resolutions at our conference, the creatures of custom and of little importance." We do not agree that they are of little importance, but they may often be inspired by custom as much as by a deeply felt need of the expression of gratitude. But then it may be that the same observation might be made regarding Thanksgiving sermons and the meeting together in public worship on Thanksgiving Day. That does not necessarily argue against the sincerity of the writers of Thanksgiving proclamations, nor yet against the sincerity of the preacher nor the worshipful spirit of many who obey the custom. President Coolidge has written a splendid proclamation in most respects and he impresses us as one who has taken his task seriously, that out of a truly grateful heart he has called his fellow-countrymen to join in voicing their gratitude to Almighty God for his abundant blessings upon us. But in that proclamation he made one statement which seems not to be warranted by the facts, and which deals with one of the most vital phases of our national life. The statement we call in question is, "Our moral and spiritual life has kept measure with our material prosperity."

That is a high-sounding statement; it flows smoothly off the tongue; many will repeat it glibly and thoughtlessly. But those who are inclined to weigh their words will readily detect the self-flattery and call in question the accuracy of it. It does not become us to speak so highly about our own moral and spiritual attainment; it is not the attitude of one who is in shape to make further progress, nor to offer genuine thanksgiving. Dr. H. E. Luccock, Contributing Editor of The Western Christian Advocate, also takes exception to it and says, "Such a statement has rather too much of self-complacency. It is hardly a fit mood in which to approach the Thanksgiving anniversary—indeed it is a very dangerous mood for the future spiritual welfare both of individuals and of the nation. To tell ourselves that we have made just as remarkable advances in spiritual life as we have in material prosperity is to delude ourselves and to minister to the smug self-righteousness of the Pharisee rather than to that humility and repentance which were so commended by Jesus."

As we measure ourselves by the people of other countries, we may imagine ourselves quite virtuous, and it may be actually the case. We may be leaders of other nations in morale and religion, but if it be true, it does not become us, indeed, it is not good for us, to strengthen public consciousness on that point. The boaster never appears so comely to other eyes as to his own. Besides we have so many prominent and such widely advertised faults that it hardly behooves us to comment on our own goodness. And those who are best informed in morals and religion, those who know most about our liabilities and assets, would deny with vigor that we have made progress in the quality of our lives that is at all comparable to our material advancement.

Dean Walter S. Athearn, of the Boston University School of Religious Education, after making a nation-wide survey of the crime situation, made a report that does not indicate very appreciable advancement in morals and religion, certainly not to be measured with our material prosperity. He found that crime was increasing, that it had been computed the cost of crime had mounted to ten billion dollars annually, only two billions less than the entire amount of the Allied war debts to the United States. It is estimated by the National Surety Company of New York, whose business it is to insure shippers, bankers, and others against loss by theft, that on the basis of their losses during the past year, there will be $3,000,000,000 worth of property stolen in the United States during the next twelve months. There is a forged check cashed in the United States every three and one-half minutes, night and day. There is no lessening of the crime wave, declares Dr. Athearn, and there will be none so long as the present condition of things obtains. After a scientific observation of large groups of boys and girls reacting to normal situations, he concludes, "The results show that a surprisingly large percentage of the rising generation are potential liars and thieves."

Moreover the average age of the criminal is continually decreasing. In the ten years ending in 1923 the average age of the burglar decreased from 29 years to 21; for robbery, banditry and holdups the average decreased from 28 years to 21; for grand larceny from 29 years to 23; for bigamy and wife desertion from 32 years to 28.

Nor was his report on the religious situation any more encouraging. In fact, it was worse, for he found that the crime wave followed in the wake of religious indifference and ignorance. He declares there are in the United States 53,197,850 children and youth under twenty-five years of age. Of this number 36,878,950 receive no religious instruction from any agency, either Catholic, Protestant or Jewish; 16,318,900 children do receive some religious nurture. Nineteen out of every twenty Jewish children, three out of every four Catholic children, and two out of every three Protestant children receive no religious instruction. Or seven out of every ten children are untouched by any systematic moral or religious instruction, and without being enrolled in any Sunday school. These masses of children and youth who are growing up without any religious nurture are "the seed plot of immorality, crime, social unrest and anarchy."

This report should not be interpreted to mean that we are making no progress, for we are beginning slowly to turn our eyes towards the light of truth. But it does mean that we are by no means as nicely situated morally and spiritually as we are materially. Nor will we be until there is a more widespread and more thorough awakening to the importance of making religion a vital factor in everyday life, and religious instruction and character making influences indispensable to every child's future. Let us not deceive ourselves into thinking that our spiritual advancement has kept pace with our material. As Dr. Luccock remarks, "We have achieved in America a remarkable mastery of things. We have not achieved a mastery of life's values to anything like the same degree."

On Compulsory Military Training

It is encouraging to note more and more of our outstanding leaders approaching the Dunker position of opposition to war and to such training as tends to militarize the individual. Sometimes we find one who challenges the courage of even a member of one of the pacifist or non-resistant churches, and it helps to spur us to greater heroism in defense of the Gospel attitude toward war that we have long professed but too feebly defended. When Daniel L. Marsh became president of Boston University last spring, his first official act was to abolish compulsory military training from his university. On Armistice Day he made his first annual report to the board of trustees of that school, and he set forth his reasons for his policy in a forceful manner. He does leave his way open to bless war if it becomes "necessary," which provision is a fairly satisfactory second choice in the opinion of the war makers, if they cannot bring one to favor whole-hearted preparation for war. But Dr. Marsh's courage in abolishing military training as a compulsory course is commendable. He says:

"I am opposed to compulsory military drill:

"First. Because I am an American, and believe in America. I am opposed to Russianizing, Prussianizing or Europeanizing America. Compulsory military drill is foreign to the genius of America.

"Second. Because I stand shoulder to shoulder with all good Americans in their opposition to war. Some feel that a high state of military preparedness is the best guarantee against war. I do not agree with them. It seems to me that an accurate reading of history shows that military preparedness creates the will to war instead of the will to peace. Just because America is rich and powerful is all the more reason why she should be an example to the rest of the world. This does not mean that I would not go to war when necessary. I am not a 'pacifist' in the modern meaning of that term. If America's life or ideals should be imperilled, I would advocate the conscription of human life for their defense, and I would go further than that: I would insist upon the conscription of wealth and labor as the counterpart of the conscription of life.

"Third. Because I believe in Boston University. It was not founded to train men to fight. It was chartered to 'promote virtue and piety, and learning in the languages and the liberal arts and sciences.' It is set for an education that means unfolding of personality, the cultivation of ideals, the bestowal of vision, the clarifying of purpose, the strengthening of will, the development of power. Is it not an anomaly to require a young man to take two years of military drill before he can receive an academic degree from Boston University? In sticking to its business of education the university serves the nation best. Government by force has become a tragic failure. Men are tired of physical domination. They are in mood to try out the ideals of government by instruction.

"Fourth. I am opposed to compulsory military training because I try to be a Christian. I do not say that those who differ from me are not trying to be Christians. But I must make my actions square with my own best convictions. If I understand the spirit of Christianity, it is opposed to war, and the best interpreters of Christianity are opposed to a high state of military preparedness because, in the past, instead of guaranteeing peace it has only guaranteed war. The inspiration of our opposition to compulsory military drill does not come from the Russia of today—that it does is a charge too silly to be noticed. Our inspiration comes from the Palestine of long ago."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Prof J. A. Garber, president of the Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union, has a message for Endeavorers in this issue, calling their attention to the December emphasis—to think and act for others. Also Brother Orville D. Ullom, Stewardship Superintendent, urges societies to use their prayer meeting for December—to promote the ideal of Christian Stewardship. He also offers some suggestions for the program, and promises more to follow.

Sister Mary Pence, pastor of the church at Limestone, Tennessee, tells us of some of the events connected with her work. The church is in good condition, a very helpful communion service was held, and they enjoyed visits from Sister Slack during the summer, and from Brother Clarence Sickel just recently. Miss Pence is making good use of the teaching ministry. Regarding the writing of reports, we hope others will make the decision that Sister Pence did—decide to neglect no longer that overdue letter to the Evangelist.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports his visit to the Altoona congregation in Pennsylvania, where Dr. A. D. Gnagey, former editor of our church periodicals, is the faithful and efficient pastor. These splendid people showed their loyalty to Ashland College to the extent of $1143, which is considered good considering their number and financial strength. This added to the former total brings the grand total of the Endowment Campaign among the churches up to $78,070.39. Brother Gnagey was for many years a valued trustee of the college and naturally his interest in its progress is very keen, and Brother Bell was pleased with the encouragement received at his hands.

President Jacobs in his college news reports the progress of the local Endowment Campaign in Ashland City and county, where it is hoped the amount will reach $100,000. This is the largest thing the college community has ever done for the institution that has been serving it for nearly half a century. The city of Ashland has not appreciated what it means to have a college in its midst, but it is encouraging to note that its appreciation has greatly increased in recent years. But after all, as Dr. Jacobs suggests, the church can never depend on the people of Ashland to put their college on the map financially. It is first of all the church's task, and no one will relieve it of its responsibility.

The call has gone forth for participation in the Universal Week of Prayer during the first week in January. In addition there comes the suggestion that the Week of Prayer be combined with Watch Night and that a Ten Days Season of Prayer be begun December 31 and continued to January 9. It is urged that during this time the whole church give itself to the confession of sin, to "supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks for all men." "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:1-6). And should not the church go down on its knees before God in humble confession in prayer for purity and power and in persevering intercession as it enters upon the new year? Is it too much to ask the church to do that? If this suggested ten days of prayer should prove the key to pentecostal power, would it be too great a price to pay?

We have the unusual privilege this week of publishing contributions from the first and the last presidents of Ashland College. Dr. S. Z. Sharp of Fruita, Colorado, is past ninety years of age, but his mind is still vigorous and his pen active, and he has very generously supplied an interesting bit of additional history to our denominational life in writing the Early History of Ashland College. He and Mr. E. C. Packer of Flora, Indiana, are the only two persons living who had a part in the establishing of the college. Mr. Packer is past eighty-four years old, and is quite feeble, yet was able to furnish Elder Sharp with much data for the writing of this history. We are very grateful to these pioneers for their interest in preserving unto us and succeeding generations of Brethren people this valuable bit of history, and especially do we thank Elder Sharp for the work of recording it. We are wondering how many of our readers would like to have this History published in pamphlet form. It has been suggested that there might be a demand for it to be published in convenient form for preservation and distribution. It is something of interest to every friend of Ashland College. If pastors and other church leaders desire its publication as a pamphlet and want a supply for distribution, which would be appropos to the Endowment Campaign now being conducted by Dr. Bell, and will indicate their desire by post card, we will have it printed in that form. Kindly write promptly, if interested.

The next event in the general church calendar is the White Gift Offering to be taken at the Christmas season. The responsibility for this offering is placed on the Sunday schools of the brotherhood, and this fund is taken in charge by the National Sunday School Association, which uses it to promote missions in Kentucky, to aid in the support of the chair of Religious Education at Ashland College, and to promote the work of the Sunday schools and other religious educational agencies among the local churches. For a number of years the Sunday schools have been urged to foster the giving spirit on the part of the pupils, instead of the getting spirit, which used to be promoted by the very nature of the prevailing Christmas programs. But the "White Gift" idea has taken possession of our schools very largely of late years and is due to the fact that the giving ideal has been featured in our programs and so impressed upon the hearts and minds of the entire church constituency. All the way from beginners to old age this larger and finer conception of the Christmas spirit and purpose is taking hold. The little children are being weaned away from the spirit of getting, young people are discovering the unworthiness of it and are being gripped by the challenge of giving, and adults are beginning to realize the inconsistency of the old selfish Christmas of getting and exchanging with the spirit that gave birth to the event. The wonder of it is that we were so long in arriving at this truer meaning of Christmas, that we were so long seeing how selfish we really were in our celebration of this the most holy, most generous, most sacrificial gift of all history, the giving of God's Son to be the Savior of the world. There are still a few schools which find it hard to break away from Santa Claus and Christmas trees and exchanging of gifts. May the "White Gift" idea captivate even their minds at this coming Christmas time, that they may experience the higher meaning of Christmas, and that the Kingdom of God may be advanced by their gifts of self, service and substance.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Origin and Early History of Ashland College

By S. Z. Sharp A.M., LL.D.

In the mind of Ezra C. Packer originated the idea of establishing a college in Northeastern Ohio under the care of members of the Church of the Brethren which happened in this way: Elder Lewis Kimmel and Howard Miller were conducting the Plum Creek Normal School near Elderton, Pennsylvania, in a church building and a school building was needed. At the recommendation of Elder P. J. Brown of Congress, Ohio, Elder Kimmel wrote to E. C. Packer of Canton, Ohio, asking him to solicit funds in Ohio for a normal school building. Brother Packer responded and began to solicit, but every one approached wanted to know the kind of location where the building would be erected. Brother Packer could not tell, hence he took the cars for Kittanning, Pennsylvania, and wended his way to Elder Kimmel in the foothills of the Alleghany Mountains. It was evident to Brother Packer that no money could be raised in Ohio for a school in such a location and he so informed Elder Kimmel. Then Brother Packer suggested that he would try to see what could be done if Kimmel would come to Ohio and try to establish a college, as the idea of a normal school was pretty well worn out. Brother Kimmel could not really accept the idea of a college instead of a normal school, but finally agreed to come to Ohio or send Howard Miller to investigate the situation as soon as the present session of the normal closed.

Brother Packer returned home and began to look for a suitable location for a college and in consultation with Elders P. J. Brown and E. L. Yoder, it was decided that Ashland afforded the most suitable location. Brother Packer at once began to consult the Brethren in the vicinity of Ashland. He first called on D. N. Workman as he was one of the most prominent elders in the district. Elder Workman said he was not opposed to a college but thought it premature to try and establish a college now. The fact was he was not in favor of a college, many others consulted were in favor. In the summer of 1876, Elder Kimmel sent Howard Miller to Ohio to investigate the conditions and prospects for establishing a school for higher education. At the Maple Grove meeting house was held a meeting which was addressed by Howard Miller. He advocated the building of a normal school as it would cost a million dollars to build and equip a college properly. It was evident that Elder Kimmel was not available to head the proposed college and his name was dropped.

After Howard Miller left, a meeting was called and a temporary Board of Trustees was elected. Then the question arose, "Who could be obtained for president if a college were established?" At that time there were only three men in the Church of the Brethren who had obtained a college education. One was Lewis Kimmel, mentioned above; a second was O. W. Miller who was president of Salem College, Indiana at Bourbon. This was the first college in the Church of the Brethren. It was started in 1870 and authorized by the Northern District of Indiana. The third was S. Z. Sharp who was then teaching in Maryville College, Tennessee, a Presbyterian institution. Brother Packer proposed the name of S. Z. Sharp as a possible candidate for the presidency. Brother Packer was authorized to write to Brother Sharp and explain to him the proposition to establish a college at Ashland, Ohio, giving reference as to Brother Packer's relation to the proposed college and inviting Brother Sharp to become its president. Brother Sharp promised to come to Ohio in 1877 during the summer vacation of the college and investigate the conditions whether favorable to establish a college.

In the meantime during the fall and winter of 1876 and 1877, Brother Packer was busy soliciting funds for the proposed college in Northern Ohio, taking pledges upon the condition that a college would be built. More than ten thousand dollars were subscribed by Brethren in this way. Brother Packer also worked among the business men in the city of Ashland, explaining to them the proposition to build a college in their city. The business men became enthusiastic at the prospect of having a college.

As Brother Sharp was to come to Ohio during his vacation in the summer of 1877, arrangements were made to hold four love feasts in different parts of Northern Ohio which Brother Sharp could attend and the people could see what kind of a man was expected to be president of the proposed college. In June Brother Sharp came to the home of Brother Packer in Canton who conveyed him to the several love feasts and to all the meetings which he addressed.

An interesting incident occurred in one of those love feasts which was held in a large, old fashioned meeting house. A long table stood along one side, behind which sat twenty-one preachers from the surrounding churches, Brother Sharp, being the youngest, took his seat at the foot of the row. Services began at ten o'clock in the morning and the elder of the congregation said, "This morning we want German preaching. This evening it will all be English and there are some old sisters who can not understand English." There was another factor that prompted the elder to request German preaching. He was not in favor of a college and to have German preaching might prevent Brother Sharp from becoming so prominent before the congregation, but the elder's request acted as a boomerang and did the very thing he did not want. After the opening prayer the elder at the head of the table said, "I do not preach German," and pushed the Bible to his next neighbor who said the same, and pushed it on till it came to Brother Sharp who said, "The elder said there should be German preaching this morning and all the other preachers refused to do so, hence it falls to me to preach in German." He read his text in German, translated it into English and began to preach in German. The preachers were amazed, the old sisters smiled.

After the meeting was over, the elder's assistant minister asked Brother Sharp to take a little walk, and when alone he said, "Today something happened that astonished me above measure. If a thunder clap had come from a clear sky it could not have surprised me more than what happened in the church today. I did not think you could preach German and if you could, you would be too proud to do so." He then reached into his pocket and gave Brother Sharp two dollars and a half.

These love feasts answered the purpose well for which they were intended. They advertised Brother Sharp extensively over the district. Brother Packer conducted him to all of them and to all the other meetings where he was to speak. Brother Sharp was now satisfied that a college could be established in Northern Ohio and accepted the position of president. Among the meetings arranged was one in the opera house in the city of Ashland where Brother Sharp was to explain to the citizens of Ashland the purposes of the college and what its policy would be. A deep interest had been worked up by Brother Packer in the project before and the opera house was filled with both ladies and gentlemen. After explaining the purposes of the college, Brother Sharp stated that if the citizens of Ashland would subscribe ten thousand dollars the college would be located at Ashland. The citizens immediately formed an organization and appointed a committee to take subscriptions and asked for two weeks in which to raise the required sum. It was subscribed in two days. The subscription was headed by Jonas Freer who subscribed two thousand dollars. The members of the Brethren church now made their subscriptions permanent.

As the college now seemed an assured fact a permanent Board of Trustees was necessary. Those on the first board were Elders George Irvin, William Sadler, Josiah Keim, I. D. Parker, of Northern Ohio and A. J. Hixson of Southern Ohio. The laymen were H. K. Myers, Austin Moherman, Joseph Roop, John Shideler and Richard Arnold.

Brother Sharp returned to Maryville College, Tennessee, to teach another year while the college project was being worked up. Brother Packer was appointed general solicitor who entered upon his task with a vim and canvassed the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, then went as far east as Maryland and Pennsylvania to Philadelphia.

The next step was to erect a college building. None of the Trustees had any experience with a college and could not draw up a plan for such a building, but J. E. Stubbs, a Methodist minister who had a college and a university education and took a deep interest in the Ashland College project, gave valuable assistance in planning the form of the building, and to him belongs the credit of the convenient form it has. H. K. Myers contributed largely toward reducing the cost of the building. He was one of the prominent business men of the city. Besides owning a farm or two, he had an interest in a grist mill and owned a store and a saw-mill from which he could furnish dimension lumber at a reduced cost.

In 1878, S. H. Bashor came to Ashland for the purpose of starting a paper called The Gospel Preacher. He made arrangements to have it printed in the office of J. E. Stubbs who was publishing a weekly political paper. Mr. Stubbs demanded a guaranty of seventeen hundred dollars to indemnify him in case of any loss that might be sustained for lack of patronage. A number of the Trustees of Ashland College became surety for this amount and in this way the Gospel Preacher became associated with the college.

In 1878, Brother Sharp moved with his family to Ashland and began soliciting for the College in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan, sometimes in company with Brother Packer and sometimes alone. One important fact should be noticed in connection with the soliciting by S. Z. Sharp. While he was taking subscriptions around Lanark, Illinois, he aroused the interest of Elder M. S. Newcomer who reasoned thus: "Why should we send our children all the way to Ashland, Ohio to be educated when we could have a college near at home?" He began advocating establishing a college in Northern Illinois and succeeded in winning a large number of Brethren in favor of his project hence he bought Rock River Seminary for the nominal sum of $6,000. This seminary was the oldest educational institution in Northern Illinois, built in 1839 by the Methodist church. It was noted for having educated many eminent men for both church and state, but when the Methodist church established Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, all interest was centered in that institution and Rock River Seminary was standing idle and for sale at a nominal sum. It consisted of a large four-story stone building used for recitation rooms and boys' dormitory and known far and wide as the "Old Sandstone," besides a ladies' dormitory both together costing about $30,000 when building was cheap and the buildings were large enough to accommodate a large school. This shows at what a bargain the Brethren in Illinois obtained a college. Elder Newcomer associated with himself D. L. Miller, an expert financier and Prof. J. W. Stein, a well educated minister, lately come to the Brethren from the Baptist church. In this way it happened that the starting of Ashland College, Ohio, also started Mt. Morris College in Illinois which began about the same time and had an enrollment of one hundred forty-nine students the first year.

One outstanding fact should be mentioned in the starting of Ashland College, that at that time the Brethren had no experience in college work and not a few were even opposed to colleges. This made it extremely hard to secure the money necessary to establish a college and the subscriptions that could be obtained were generally only in small sums.

While the main college building was being erected, the question arose, "Where shall the students be accommodated with lodging and board?" A boarding hall seemed necessary and the Trustees borrowed $15,000 and erected a boarding hall. When college opened, the boarding hall was placed in charge of E. C. Packer and his wife. At the same time S. Z. Sharp assumed his work as president of the college, so that neither he nor Brother Packer did any more soliciting for money for the college. J. H. Worst solicited for a short time, but when he became office editor of the Gospel Preacher he also quit soliciting and the $15,000 debt remained a heavy burden on the college for a long time.

One of the most important as well as the most difficult tasks was to secure a competent faculty composed of members of the Church of the Brethren. At that time but few college graduates were found in this church. David Bailey, a graduate of a normal school was employed as professor of Mathematics, Jacob Keim, a graduate from Mount Union College, professor of science, Leonard Huber, a graduate of the University of Munich, Germany, professor of Latin and German; Professor Huber had taught in Wooster University and Hayesville Academy, but wished to be associated with the Church of the Brethren. He believed in trine immersion and was baptized by Brother Sharp. Professor Huber was by far the best educated member in the Church of the Brethren. He was master of six languages besides being educated as a lawyer. J. E. Stubbs was elected professor of Greek and higher mathematics? J. C. Ewing was instructor of music. S. Z. Sharp as president of the college was employed at a yearly salary of seven hundred fifty dollars. All the other teachers received a less salary.

College opened in September, 1879 with sixty students present the first day and closed the college year with one hundred two students. Every one pronounced the first term of the college a complete success and the school was advertised far and wide. Most of the students at that time had no high school education and much of the work of the college the first two years had to be of high school grade. However, two students, at the beginning of the first session entered the college course. They were Mr. Wiegand and Gilbert Hess. Of Mr. Wiegand the writer has lost all trace and can say nothing. Dr. Hess became so widely known that he needs only a short notice. He not only won a national reputation, but was known in foreign countries by his stock food products. His extensive factory in the city of Ashland, in which he associated with him as partner, J. L. Clark, a keen business man, is one of the important industries of the city. His relation to Ashland College was perpetuated by the financial contributions he has made to his alma mater up to the time of his death about two years ago.

When the college was being built, many members of the Church of the Brethren moved into the city of Ashland to send their children to school and to enjoy the literary and religious advantages afforded by a college so that quite a large membership of Brethren was in Ashland when the college opened. While S. Z. Sharp was out in the field canvassing, S. H. Bashor wrote a petition for District Conference asking that the members living in Ashland city be organized into a separate congregation. Most of the members in the city signed this petition and the District Conference granted this request and Ashland City Congregation was created. At the organization Joseph Roop and Elmer Worst were elected deacons and J. H. Worst, a student in the college, was called to the ministry and S. Z. Sharp was chosen as elder in charge of the congregation. A Sunday school was at once organized which held its sessions in the forenoon each Sunday and in the afternoon at 2:30 P. M., preaching services were held in the college chapel. Since there were no other religious services in the city at that time, many persons from the other churches attended these services.

In the summer of 1878, as Brother Sharp was canvassing for the college, in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan, he attended Sunday school each Sunday among the Brethren and was impressed with the fact that the Brethren had no Sunday school literature, but used the Bible in the Sunday school classes without notes or comments. At this time James Quinter published the Young Disciple at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania. Brother Sharp proposed to him that he would prepare the International Sunday school lessons, adapted to the use of our church, if Brother Quinter would publish them in the Young Disciple. Brother Quinter replied that he was favorable to the proposition, but did not think our church was prepared for such a step. This was in January, 1889, Brother Sharp then consulted with J. E. Stubbs who suggested publishing a Sunday school paper, embellished with beautiful pictures of Bible scenes such as Christ blessing little children or washing the disciples' feet. He stated that the M. E. church published a Sunday school paper in Cincinnati, Ohio, using cuts to illustrate Bible scenes and when these cuts were once used, they could be bought for a nominal sum to illustrate our paper and would be very appropriate.

On March 26, 1889, Brother Sharp issued the first Sunday school paper ever published in the Church of the Brethren. It was called Our Sunday School. It contained one set of notes for advanced classes in Sunday school and one set for primary classes, the remaining part of the paper was filled with interesting and instructive reading. In six weeks the paper had a circulation of thirty-six hundred and over seven thousand before the summer ended. When Brother Sharp went to Mt. Morris, the paper was taken to Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, and published by Brother Quinter. It continued to grow until it was published by the car load weekly. The historical part is that it was created in connection with the beginning of Ashland College and by the president of that institution. In 1880, President Stein of Mt. Morris College found it necessary to withdraw from that institution and resigned as president and insisted that M. S. Newcomer and D. L. Miller buy his interest in the college which they reluctantly did. As the college had to have a head, D. L. Miller was elected president, but as Miller did not have the education to perform the duties of president, Stein agreed to perform those duties to the end of the spring term in 1881, when he vanished and nothing was known of him for several years. When Stein resigned, M. S. Newcomer and D. L. Miller came to Ashland and made arrangements with S. Z. Sharp to take a professorship in Mount Morris College and perform the duties of president after Stein left in the summer of 1881.

When Sharp resigned, Elder R. H. Miller was elected president of Ashland College. He was considered the most influential elder in the Church of the Brethren and was chosen, not for any work he could do in the college and never did any, but exclusively for his personal influence. Prof. Stubbs was elected vice president and performed all the duties of president while R. H. Miller spent most of his time among the churches in evangelistic work.

When Brother Sharp quit soliciting money for the college and took up the work of president of the college and Brother Packer also quit and took charge of the boarding hall, there was no one left in the field to get any money for the college. The interest due on the money borrowed to build the boarding hall began to pinch the trustees and they conceived the idea that if the General Conference of the Church of the Brethren were held at Ashland and members from all over the brotherhood would come to Ashland and see the fine college buildings and the splendid location they would subscribe liberally for the college. Through the influence of R. H. Miller the Trustees succeeded in having the General Conference located on the college campus beginning June 6, 1881. Two large tents were erected and the college buildings were placed at the services of the Conference. The trustees were very much disappointed with the result. When the visitors found that a Methodist minister was practically at the head of the college, they would have nothing to do with it.

This Conference was in some respects the most eventful in the history of the Church of the Brethren as well as decisive in the destiny of Ashland College. For a number of years there were growing in the Church of the Brethren two elements of widely different and opposite character. One was the ultra conservative party which looked with strong disfavor upon the innovations which were entering the church, such as high schools and colleges, Sunday schools, protracted meetings and mission work. They were known as "The Old Order Brethren." The opposite party not only approved and advocated these innovations, but also in addition demanded that sisters have the liberty to dress more in harmony with the style of dress in vogue at that time. This class was known as

Education and Religion

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, M. S., Ph.D.

The claim has long been made that higher education at least in America is the offspring of the church. One can go back into history and find that the earliest colleges were founded by religious people and for the express purpose of teaching certain forms of Christian faith. For many years colleges were both founded and fostered by the various religious denominations and even today certain colleges bear names which bear eloquent testimony to the faith of their founders but which now no longer make any pretense of being Christian colleges more than in name.

The Christian college has had several things to struggle with. It has had to meet the results of scientific research. Since the founding of the first American denominational college, the theory of organic evolution with all that this entails, has been brought to men's attention. Since that time also, the whole field of Geology has been added to the list of sciences, as has Psychology, Sociology, and whole sections of Chemistry, Physics, Medicine, especially the germ theory of disease, Genetics including Mendelism, with its laws of inheritance, and Meteorology, to say nothing of lesser fields of discovery.

I say that the Christian college has had these to struggle with, for they had to find their way into our curricula and in so doing they had to fit into the religious scheme of things. One certainly can not take over such a new science as Geology, let us say, and not attempt to see how its teachings will fit into those formerly given on points now seen to be related to it. That has been done all too often, and a sorry plight it has brought us into in many cases. The same thing was done in Sociology. Comte set us going and many things which were proposed in an early day were taken hook, sinker, bobber, and all. Then later we had to turn around and readjust our thinking and in so doing we have left many a man's faith a wreck by the wayside.

If anyone thinks this team can be driven with one hand, try it and see. In order to keep anything like near to the middle of the road, one has to keep a firm grip on the reins. But the school making no direct attempt to "keep the faith" has a much smoother road. All one needs to do is to exploit the newest theory to one's heart's content. He need not reckon much with its effect upon the Christian faith, either of himself or of those whom he is expected to teach.

But along with this struggle, there has been another one, equally as severe. It relates to the general supervision and control which State agencies have increasingly exercised over all colleges and schools whose credits are supposed to be recognized. This control is not decreasing. It is increasing. The State authorities can come along at any given moment and pass you the word that if your courses, teachers, buildings, janitors, sanitary conditions, fire escapes, and salaries, do not meet the requirements which they have set up, you can go on teaching, sure enough, but your credits will not longer be recognized by the State offices.

That is death to any school.

More than this, it tends to take certain types of Christian colleges out of the field of education. If the various states by any means should reach the goal towards which there is now already a pronounced tendency, viz., that the state should train ALL of its own teachers, the problem of sustaining Christianity will be made very difficult. Supposing that all the teachers in any state, both grade and high school, would have to be graduated from state normal colleges and from state universities ONLY, then the influence of the denominational college will be dead as a door nail so far as the public schools are concerned.

We then will have reached the continental idea of education, viz., a machine of the State. Then our colleges will have a student body made up of those who want to enter business but want a smattering of college first, of ministers, missionaries, and pre-medicine, and pre-law. Nothing else. Those preparing to teach and come to a Christian college and there imbibe something of Christian ideals by which they might by chance infect the public schools, will they be there? No, not at all. They will be in state schools. If this were to take place, the outlook for Christianity in the next generation would be gloomy indeed. And that is exactly what is ahead of us unless THE CHURCH SCHOOLS MEET THE REQUIREMENTS. Just exactly.

If they do not meet state requirements, the state will naturally withdraw recognition, one by one, and the influence of the de-nominal Christian college will be wiped from the map. Maybe you think this would not be serious, but think for a moment just what it would mean if every teacher which your child had, from the day it first entered the grades until the day of graduation, twelve long years later, should never have been in contact with a pronouncedly Christian school. And they would not in the public schools at all, for they are not now. And so on we would go through all the steps of education and never touch the outer hem of Christianity in all our schooling.

Would the state be the loser? Yes and the gainer too, for it would lose the touch of Christianity on the one hand but would likely gain in the technique of teaching on the other. Which will the state choose? Answer that question yourself.

The immediate step to take now is to make the church school secure by properly maintaining it at as high a standard as the public agencies demand. This can not be

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Worthy Walk

By H. E. Eppley

In Paul's letter to the Ephesians he names and describes seven walks. The one chosen for this discussion is number three. The text is chapter four, verses one to three: "I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beseech you to walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Walking is a delightful exercise when taken with the proper company. It is a beneficial exercise when taken in the proper way.

Paul, the writer of the text, calls himself "the prisoner in the Lord." He is writing about a cause which he thinks is of such supreme character that it is worthy to be in prison for, yea, even to die for. No sacrifice is too great to be made for it. No suffering too trying to endure for the cause he now preaches from behind prison bars. Since his rating of the cause is so high he sends a beseeching message to his friends in the Ephesian church, and through this church to Christians of all time and lands. This message, in one phrase without explanation or elaboration is, "Walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called." On this Matthew Henry comments as follows: "That you walk worthily, agreeably, suitably, and congruously to those happy circumstances into which the grace of God has brought you, whom he has converted from heathenism to Christianity. Observe, Christians ought to accommodate themselves to the gospel by which they are called, and to the glory to which they are called; both are their vocation. We are called Christians; we must answer that name, and live like Christians. We are called to God's kingdom and glory; that kingdom and glory therefore we must mind, and walk as becomes the heirs of them."

A walk of such vast magnitude and height must have a standard. Fortunately we have it given to us. It should be the guiding star of every one who has been born into the kingdom and taken the name Christian. Hear it again: "The calling wherewith ye were called." Paul uses similar words in 1 Thess. 2:12: "To the end that ye should walk worthily of God, who calleth you into his kingdom and glory." Jesus said in connection with his promise of the Holy Spirit that the Spirit "will convict the world in respect of sin." These passages throw light on what is meant by "the calling wherewith ye were called." God, through the Holy Spirit, has called every Christian to leave the world of sin and join the ranks of the Christian forces. This calling is infinitely more than a mere invitation. It means being called by God, through the Holy Spirit of God, into all that Christ's conception of being his follower means. It is indeed the highest privilege offered to man and Paul with all the urgency of his great personality and life of suffering and sacrifice beseeches the Ephesian brethren to walk worthily of it.

If Christians are to walk worthily of such a high ideal a question will be asked,—namely, what is to be understood by the term walk? Perhaps the answer can best be given in the words of another. "The word 'walk' is of a very extensive signification. It includes all our inward and outward motions, all our thought, words, and actions. It takes in, not only everything we do, but everything we either speak or think." In plain, simple words the walk Paul urges means our inward as well as our outward manner of living. Our walk is our life. Our life, therefore, is to be lived worthily of this high calling in Christ Jesus.

Surely the apostle, in beseeching his people to pursue such a high standard of living would not leave it without describing it to some extent. He is not disappointing here. He proceeds at once. His first descriptive phrase is "walk . . . with all lowliness." All pomp is to be eliminated. "By lowliness we are to understand humility, entertaining mean thoughts of ourselves, which is opposed to pride." So explains Matthew Henry and another has this comment. "We are called to walk, first, with all lowliness, to have in us the mind which was also in Christ Jesus; not to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think; to be little, and poor, and mean, and vile in our own eyes; to know ourselves as also we are known by him to whom all hearts are opened; to be deeply sen-

His mercy flows on like a river;
His love is unmeasured and free
His grace is forever sufficient,
It reaches and purifies me.

—Chas. H. Gabriel.

WEDNESDAY

PRESERVE THEE CONTINUALLY—Heb. 13:5, 6.

He'll never leave me, nor yet forsake me here
While I live by faith and do his blessed will;
A wall of fire about me, I've nothing now to fear:
With his manna he my hungry soul shall fill.

—C. W. Fry.

THURSDAY

THE EVERLASTING ARMS—Deut. 33:26-29.

He hideth my soul in the cleft of the rock,
That shadows a dry, thirsty land;
He hideth my life in the depths of his love,
And covers me there with his hand.

—Fanny J. Crosby.

FRIDAY

SET APART FOR GOD—Psalm 4:1-5.

"O sweet will of God! thou hast girded me round
Like the deep moving currents that girdle the sea;
With omnipotent love is my poor nature bound,
And this bondage to love sets me perfectly free."

SATURDAY

PRESERVED FROM EVIL—Psalm 121:1-8.

I know my heavenly Father knows
The storms that do my way oppose;
But he can drive the clouds away,
And turn my darkness into day.

—S. M. I. Henry.

SUNDAY

Tenderly God watches o'er us,
Ever present, ever nigh;
He hath promised he will keep us
As the apple of his eye.

sible of our own unworthiness." According to Paul and these commentators to walk with all lowliness means to be opposite to being proud and haughty.

Next he adds "and meekness." Walk in meekness. What an admirable trait. By meekness we are to understand, "that excellent disposition of soul which makes men unwilling to provoke others, and not easily to be provoked or offended with their infirmities; and it is opposed to angry sentiments and peevishness." Another expresses it thus: "Being taught of him who teacheth as never man taught, to be meek as well as lowly in heart. This implies not only a power over anger, but over all violent, turbulent passions. It implies the having all our passions in due proportion; none of them either too strong or too weak, but all duly balanced with each other, all subordinate to reason, and reason directed by the Spirit of God." What more could be added—"all subordinate to reason, and reason directed by the Spirit of God?"

The next descriptive term is "with longsuffering." Perhaps he has not touched the sore spot for every one tries to avoid suffering of every kind. Yet he says we are to walk with long suffering. "Long suffering implies a patient bearing of injuries, without seeking revenge." "This is nearly related to meekness, but implies something more. It carries on the victory already gained over all your turbulent passions, notwithstanding all the powers of darkness, all the assaults of evil men or evil spirits. It is patiently triumphant over all opposition, and unmoved though all the waves and storms thereof go over you." The worthy walk is to be one of longsuffering.

But this walk must advance one step further according to the instruction of the writer. Following the longsuffering comes "forbearing one another in love." How much this reminds one of the admonition of Jesus "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." What does Paul mean? "The forbearing one another in love seems to mean, not only the not resenting anything, and the not avenging yourselves; not only the not injuring, hurting or grieving each other, either by word or deed, but also the bearing one another's burdens, yea, and lessening them by every means in our power. It implies the sympathizing, with them in their sorrows, afflictions, and infirmities; the bearing them up when, without our help, they would be liable to sink under their burdens."

This would seem to be the end but the apostle advances yet a little further and concludes his description of the walk with this injunction: "Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." "The first step towards unity is humility; without this there will be no meekness, no patience, or forbearance; and without these no unity. Pride and passion break the peace, and make all the mischief. Humility and meekness restore the peace, and keep it. Only by pride comes contention; only by humility comes love. The more lowly-minded the more like-mindedness. We do not walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called if we be not meek and lowly of heart: for he by whom we are called, was eminent for meekness and lowliness of heart, and has commanded us therein to learn of him." "I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beseech you to walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called."

"The Progressives." This divergent tendency in the church was supported and accelerated by the influence of two papers. The Old Order by the Vindicator, published by Samuel Kinsey who advocated adherence to the customs and usages of the church of many years ago. The Progressive Christian, published by H. R. Holsinger, just as strongly defended and advocated the invocations which were coming into the church. Both parties came before the Conference with their petitions. It was impossible to harmonize these two extremely opposite requests, nor was the great body of the church disposed to follow either course, hence there was nothing the Conference could do in this crisis of the church. The Old Order party held a meeting at the home of Brother Hess to consider what steps to take for the future. The Progressives also held a meeting in the office of Dr. Roop to consider what course to pursue next. Here on the Ashland College campus at the General Conference in 1881 the split in the Church of the Brethren, took place and so it forms part of the history of Ashland College.

Later each of these parties became a separate organized body, the one adopting the name, "The Old German Baptist Brethren" and the other, "The Brethren Church."

The trustees as well as the members of the church aligned themselves with these two church groups—the Conservatives and the Progressives. While the Conservatives had contributed more toward the building of the college, the Progressives had the majority on the Board of Trustees and voted to keep the college. (It became evident to both parties that the college could not be conducted successfully by both bodies working together and an adjustment had to be made of the interests in the college. The Conservatives already had two other colleges, one at Mt. Morris, Illinois and one at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, hence were not so anxious to keep Ashland College. The adjustment was made by the Conservatives taking a part of the campus which could be cut up into residence lots and sold and the Progressives kept the remainder of the campus on which were erected the college buildings.

A very important part of the history of Ashland College is the tremendous sacrifice made by some in order to get the college established. Brother Packer not only gave all his time for four years, but sacrificed his home and worked at a salary which barely kept his family alive, and with dogged perseverance kept on under the most trying circumstances. Some of the trustees also made great sacrifices and became bankrupt and lost their farms. It is said of infant colleges as of human infants that they are subject to certain ailments such as measles, smallpox, mumps and the like. Ashland College passed through the entire gauntlet of them. When the Conservatives withdrew their interest from the college they also withdrew their patronage and for years the college had a tremendous struggle to maintain even an existence. It may be said, "It came up through much tribulation."

This is the history of Ashland College, Ohio from its inception in 1878 to 1882 when it was taken over by the Progressives or Brethren church.

Ruth and Naomi

Scripture Lesson—Book of Ruth.

Devotional Reading—1 Cor. 13:1-11.

Golden Text—Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Ruth 1:16.

LESSON LIGHTS

The Book

The Book of Ruth comes into the history of wars and heroes as a most beautiful idyl, "which has done more to enable us to live over again in remote Hebrew antiquity than all the heroic achievements of Joshua and Judges together." Instead of wars and degeneracy, we see piety, love, consecration, happy family life, and domestic virtues. It enables us to see how the nation was on the whole growing better, since in the most degenerate times there was preserved underneath the troubled surface many a pure, loving, religious life.

The Story

The Story of Ruth is of special importance because it gives the ancestry of David, the ancestor of Jesus the Christ. It is of special interest also because of the prominence it thus gives to a Moabitess, in spite of the fact that, on account of their unkind treatment of the Israelites as they went up from Egypt to Canaan, Moabites to the tenth generation were forbidden to enter the Hebrew religious assemblies (Deut. 23: 3). Further it is of interest because it illustrates the duty of the nearest relative to marry the widow of a man who has died without male children.

But the beauty of the character of Ruth, the charm of her simple story, are enough in themselves to account for the popularity of this little book. It is the loveliest narrative in the Old Testament, which abounds in beautiful stories. Merely as a piece of literature it is priceless.

The Choice

"Ruth's choice cost her something—separation from her kindred, the sacrifice of her prospects of marriage, expatriation, poverty, and the consciousness that the course she was taking was unusual and would cause remark. She was a sensitive woman, and deeply felt the situation. However courageous she may have been, she was lonely and homesick. We have one or two pathetic glimpses into her soul: 'Seeing I am a foreigner' (Ruth 2:10); 'Though I be not as one of thine handmaidens' (Ruth 2:13). She had sufficient reasons, however, and these sustained her—her love for Naomi, Naomi's need of her, but, above all, her consciousness that Israel's God was worthy to be chosen. She chose deliberately, and not blindly; freely, and yet firmly."

"It has been said, there is no test of a man better than the friends he makes. It is as true to say, there is no better test of a man than the friends he breaks. A man comes to you and says he has had his lesson and means to make a new start. But does he go back to the old set? That is the question. 'Can two walk together except they be agreed?' If you wish your friendships to be like Ruth's, stepping-stones to heaven, let them be built like hers—on Naomi's God."

"We cannot hope to contribute to literature a sentence so exquisite and so thrilling as that into which Ruth poured the full measure of a noble heart, but we can imitate her in devotion—the brightest jewel in her crown."—William Jennings Bryan.

Devotion Rewarded

The Reward of Devotion to Duty and to God. The rest of the Book of Ruth tells the story of her recompense for her self-denying love, and giving up all to religion and to God. (1) She found a means of supporting her mother-in-law. (2) She won the respect and favor of the people among whom she lived. (3) She gained a most excellent husband and home. In Boaz we have a model for the character of a rich man in private life: we see one whose deep faith in God breaks out in every word of his lips, and every action of his life (Ruth 2:4, 11, 12; 3:10, 11, etc.); one attentive to his own business and diligent in the care of his own

Thanksgiving

Some may give thanks for heaps of wealth,
Others give thanks for abundant health;
Let us be thankful in our daily living
And prove we are thankful by our giving.

We should be thankful for daily bread,
Thankful for the roof that's o'er our head, Thankful we have what so many have sought,

Thankful for Liberty so dearly bought;

Thankful our nation from war now is free,
Thankful for peace, and for purity;
Thankful for the duty we're able to do,
Thankful for those who are good and true.

Thankful for treasures in deed and in thought,
Thankful for love that cannot be bought,
Thankful for all that we have, then we may Be thankful we're thankful on Thanksgiving property (Ruth 2:4; 3:2); kind and friendly to his dependents, and beloved by them (Ruth 2:4); liberal, generous, and courteous to the poor and friendless stranger (Ruth 2:8, 9, 14, 15, 16; 3:15); observing and appreciating virtue in others (Ruth 2:11, 12; 3:11), and practising it himself under trying circumstances (Ruth 3:8-13); respecting the rights of others even when they interfered with his own wishes (Ruth 3:12, 13; 4:4); observant of the laws of his country, though living in lawless times (Ruth 4:1-5, 9); mindful of his obligations to the living and the dead (Ruth 2:20; 4:10); alive to the ties of kindred, of country, and of religion (Ruth 4:3; 2:11, 12); and uniformly humble, quiet, and prudent in his conduct. (4) Ruth had the honor of including among her descendants the great kings David and Solomon, and above all, Jesus the Christ through his mother.

"If Boaz was rewarded it is nothing but what all men will be who give from a proper motive. Boaz parted with his barley, but to get good measure in return; and that is just what the Bible says: 'Give and it shall be given to you again, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, heaped up and running over shall men give into your bosom.'"

"It is not every story of faithful love and piety which mounts to so happy a close, at least in this world. But before we complain, as though our virtue had been passed over by our God, it will be well for us to ask ourselves whether our virtue can compare with that of Ruth."—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Missionary Message

Ruth was a Moabitess; that is, she belonged to the race which the Jews had been commanded to annihilate, a race whose corruption merited annihilation, and whose destruction in general would have been for the good of humanity. But to show that this harsh command rested upon the law of each nation, as of each individual, reaping what it sows, and was not a mere arbitrary decree, the Bible presents this picture of one member of that nation, who, because she rose above her inheritance and environment and sought paragon and protection at the hands of the God of all the earth, was providentially guided to the knowledge of the true God and at last was incorporated into the Chosen People. Ruth married a Hebrew immigrant, and through him learned to love the true God. Through her choice of the ideal of the Jews and her acceptance of the Jewish faith, Ruth was incorporated into the Jewish nation; and a Moabitess, the child of an outlawed nation, became the grandmother of the noblest king of Israel and the ancestress of the Lord. The brief story of Ruth, who in her sorrow turned to the God of the universe for comfort, is the inspired effort to teach the Jews that their God is no tribal divinity, but the God and Father of us all. The book of Ruth was inspired by the Holy Spirit to reveal the universal and missionary character of the Old Testament religion.—Bishop Bashford, in God's Missionary Plan for the World.

Oftentimes it is difficult to see how certain promises of God are to be realized. We have nothing to do with that whatever. God keeps our hands off his promises quite as surely as he keeps them off his stars. If he will not let us intermeddle with his planets, he will not ask us to have anything to do with the outworking and realization of his promises. He asks that their fulfillment be left to him, and afterwards he will challenge our own life as the witness, and answer, and confirmation of all that is gracious and all that is sure in the outworking of his words of promise.—Joseph Parker.

We must get back to the cross to know its ruggedness, its brutality, its blood baptism. It is only there that the heart finds the conscience cleansed.—G. Campbell Morgan.

Give thy heart's best treasures—from fair nature learn!

Give thy love—and ask not, wait not a return!

And the more thou spendest from thy little store,

With a double bounty God will give thee more.

Service for Others

By Prof. J. A. Garber, President

This is the December theme announced by the leaders of Endeavorers for all Endeavorers. It will strike the reader as being both timely and pertinent for the month in which we celebrate the birthday of our Lord. For he gave himself to a ministry for others.

For several years now Christian Endeavorers have been asked to promote Golden Rule Sunday. This is being observed this year on December the 5th. At that time Christian people will be asked to remember the needy ones of the lands known to us as the Near East.

With this as a point of departure we suggest the continuation of the stewardship emphasis during November. Through December we may continue to stress the Stewardship of Self, Substance and Service. This emphasis correlates nicely with the program of the church school that culminates with the White Gift Offering at Christmas.

In addition to the contribution in money that may be made to the several objects, we ought to have a contribution in life. That is a number of our young people should give themselves to the ministries of the church, such as teaching, preaching, and missionary work. Here is a fine opportunity to put across the Life Work appeal.

Service may be given to people of the local community. Christmas caroling for the sick and shut-ins tends to bring good cheer to such persons. In almost every community there are less fortunate families who may be be-friended with gifts that will contribute to their needs and comforts. Endeavorers will be helped by studying: "What Christian Endeavorers Can Do" by General Secretary, E. C. Gates. This booklet which costs twenty-five cents, may be secured from the United Society at Boston, or your state headquarters.

A Message for Every Christian Endeavor Member

By Orville D. Ullom, C. E. Stewardship Superintendent

Officers and members of every C. E.:

Our Goal

December 19th, 1926, when each society will conduct a Stewardship decision service, at which time the members of your respective societies will be encouraged to give of self, substance and service for the specific purpose of the extension of his kingdom in the hearts of men and women. This will take the place of the regular Christian Endeavor meeting coming on this evening. I encourage you one and all to read extensively and to seriously consider in the meantime this subject, Christian Stewardship, and by the way of helpfulness I suggest the following books for reading (consult your home librarian):

1. The Message of Stewardship—Ralph S. Cushman.
2. The Deeper Meaning of Stewardship—John M. Versteeg.

3. Money the Acid Test—David McConaughy.

4. (Pamphlet) Life Complete Through Stewardship. Rev. S. S. Hough.

(More suggestions will be given next week.)

Versteeg in the above book has said, "We find our best when we give our best." Let us one and all give our best in preparation for this decision service on December 19th.

The two following all inclusive principles of Stewardship we shall want to constantly keep in mind:

1. The recognition that all that I am and have has been given me by God, for my use and resultant happiness.

2. The whole souled purpose that I shall use all of these as a trust and shall devote a reasonable portion of them to the specific work of the extension of his kingdom.

Helpful Comments

"The Reasonableness of Christian Stewardship for the Young People of Today"

The law or the truth that reveals a true moral ideal seems always to condemn each youth who sees it. This is a tremendous thing, realizing that we have the ability to respond to this ideal. Take for example the rich young ruler who came to Jesus. He had kept all the commandments as far as he was able to see, but soon Jesus was to apply the acid test to his character and motives. Where then did Jesus touch him? In his amassing and hoarding of wealth; he had disobeyed what commandment? Thou shalt not covet. The moment he was brought into the presence of an ideal he went away sorrowful. He hereby signified that he would not respond to the ideal. Far off indeed was his attitude when compared with that of Benjamin Franklin who was so impressed with his responsibility to God that he was awed by the thought of it. Such

My Favorite Bible Story.

John 6:1-14

"Johnny and Joseph, it's time to go to bed," called their mother.

"All right, we are coming. Will you tell us a story?" said Johnny.

"Yes, please tell us a whole lot of stories," said Joseph as he started into the house with his wagon and a load of things that they had been playing with.

"If you will get ready for bed quickly I will tell you a story," their mother told them. So, they hurried very fast. First they put all of the things away that they had been playing with. Then their mother helped them to get washed and ready to get in bed. When each had gotten in his bed, mother said, "We are going to have a Bible story tonight. Which Bible story do you like best, Johnny?"

"I like those stories we had at Bible School."

"You mean the stories about the little boy who helped so many people by giving his lunch and about the little lost sheep and the others."

"Yes, mother, those are the ones."

"Well, I like the one about the Little Lost Sheep the very best," said Joseph. "Please tell that one." Then mother began,

"Once upon a time there was a shepherd who had a hundred sheep. This shepherd loved his sheep and he even had names for each one of them. Some of the sheep were big grown-up sheep but others were wee little baby sheep. When the wee little sheep would get tired and could hardly make their little wobbly legs go any more, then the shepherd would pick them up in his arms and carry them.

Each day the shepherd led the way and they would go out on the hills to hunt for a nice green place where the sheep could eat and be happy. The kind shepherd always tried to find a place that was not too far from some water where the sheep could drink.

One day, the shepherd was sitting on a little hill, watching his sheep. Most of the sheep were near to him. All the little lambs and their mothers stayed together eating close to the shepherd where the ground was smooth and the grass was easy to get. A few of the big sheep had climbed up over the steep part of the hill and were grazing up there. Everything was very peaceful and still but a little breeze began to stir. Then the shepherd noticed that the sky was getting all black with clouds and that a storm was coming. He called, "Come sheep, Come sheep," and soon the sheep were gathered around the shepherd and he started toward the shed which was the sheep's home.

By the time that the sheep were nearly to their fold it began to rain and storm. As the sheep went into their nice warm home, the shepherd counted them, "One, two, three ..." and on up till ninety-nine had passed through the door. Then he looked all around to see if the other one might be somewhere near, but he could not find it.

Then he put on his big coat and started forth. As he went he called and he kept thinking, "I wonder if it is one of the little lambs. He must be scared and cold and tired." Finally, after one of the shepherd's calls, there came a faint "Baa Baa." Soon he had one of the very tiniest of the lambs in his arms. The shepherd was tired and wet and cold himself by the time he had found the baby sheep, but he was happy to save it from getting sick, and the little sheep was Oh, so happy to be carried safely back to its mother in the fold.

Jesus up in heaven is a kind shepherd and all of us are his sheep. You little children are his little lambs and he is very glad to take care of all of his sheep. Let's follow our shepherd with care so we won't cause him any worry or trouble."

"We are to be good lambs," said Joseph as he closed his eyes and went to sleep.

The Coming New Era in Africa

A Fuller Report of the International Conference in Belgium. Briefly Reported in November 10th Issue.

By L. B. Moss, Asst. Secretary Foreign Mission Conference of North America

Never has Africa had light concentrated from so varied and representative an array of experts on its human, economic, political, moral, intellectual and spiritual concerns as in the week's Conference on the Christian Mission in Africa, under the chairmanship of Dr. Donald Fraser, that closed at Le Zoute, on the Belgian coast, on Monday night, September 20th, 1926.

Government administrators like Sir Frederick Lugard (with Lady Lugard), late Governor General of Nigeria, M. Louis Franc, late Secretary of State for the Colonies for Belgium, General de Moulemooster, ex-Governor of the Belgian Congo, Senor Albert d'Oliviera, Portuguese Minister in Belgium, Sir Edward Garraway, late Resident in Basutoland, Mr. Welch, Magistrate of the Transkei, the Hon. E. B. Denham, Colonial Secretary to Kenya Colony and Dr. Gilks of the Kenya Medical service, with Major Hanns Vischor, Secretary of the African Education Committee of the British Colonial Office, brought the aims of governments today in an authoritative way into the heart of the Conference. They revealed that the stage of development is now fully opened and Governments have come to see that central to the whole raison d'être and success of government is the development in health and body, and equipment of mind and in morale of the African himself, the real wealth of the Continent.

They were nanked by scholars, like Prof. Richter of Berlin, who has given a third of a century to the intensive study of Africa; Prof. Westermann of Berlin, the great philologist of African languages and Director of the International Institute of African Languages and Tribal Cultures; and the Rev. Edwin W. Smith, whose "Ila-speaking Peoples of Northern Rhodesia" is already an anthropological classic; who, alongside with education experts like Dr. J. T. Lorain, (Native Affairs Commissioner of the South African Union), Mr. James L. Sibley, (Education Advisor in Liberia), and Dr. Anson Phelps-Stokes, with Dr. Jesse Jones, famous for his leadership of the Phelps-Stokes Fund Commission of enquiry, that have published the epoch marking reports on "Education in Africa," brought the light of first-hand research to the deliberations.

Negro leadership from America, as well as Africa, was brilliantly represented in a large and varied group of men and women, educators and preachers, whose speeches, actual presence and personal talks throughout the Conference, kept the members face to face with living realities.

The missionaries themselves, and secretaries of Mission Boards, came from different areas of Africa, representing numerous communions and many European as well as Anglo-Saxon nations.

A fine group of specialist workers in the Moslem world, Bishop Gwynne of Egypt and the Sudan, Dr. Zwemer, and Miss Constance Padwick, Secretary of the Christian Literature Council for Moslem Lands brought valuable light on the great vital religion that is penetrating Africa from so many directions.

The officers of the International Missionary Council, under whose auspices, with Mr. J. H. Oldham's leadership, the Conference was organized, were responsible for the magnificent preparations which brought all the delegates there informed on the problems that were raised, and made all the life of the Conference extraordinarily intimate and happy. To this end the brilliant sunshine over the sea and the sand throughout the Conference largely contributed.

The presentation of diversified subject matter seemed at the outset to bid fair to reduce the mind to chaos. As the Conference considered race-relationships in Africa, or evangelism, or the present condition and the future of education, or land, or labor, men rose one after another and presented a bewildering range of pictures, that revealed "infinite variety" that is Africa.

Windows opened through which we caught glimpses here of a cocoa plantation in West Africa, there of the deafening glamour of gold-mining in Rhodesia; yonder into the smoky huts of a central African village, or here again, labor on a Boer farm. The Conference saw the inadequately trained African teacher doing his best in his mud and wattle church school; the student in the new African college with its modern equipment and technique; the aeroplane, the steamer and the railway invading the primeval fastnesses of the Congo; the flood of new wealth pouring into the Baganda or the West Coast Africans in payment for cotton or cocoa; white civilization in the south fearing for its future in face of the Bantu and the Indian; the Negro wishing to grow to a truly African manhood, and not in mimicry of European civilization; the pagan customs of pubertal initiation woven into the very warp and woof of tribal life in some areas, confronting the Christian ideal of youth; the growth of an industrialized landless proletariat without rights in South Africa, and the menace that lay within it; the primitive mother and child in their still inviolate animism; the adolescent son drawn away to the compounds of Johannesburg and coming back a sceptic of the spirits and the tribal law, and a disintegrator of the clan. So the long fascinating moving panorama of the life, the need, the opportunity, the marvelous capacities of Africa passed before the eyes of the Conference, with side glimpses of the parallel yet widely differing Negro scene in the United States of America and in Brazil.

What unity of practice or aim; what co-operation in method or policy men wondered can be possible in so vast an area, so diverse in its ways, languages and governments and in the types of pressure from without that are transforming it.

Gradually and with increasing clearness, however, there came into view the outline of some great movements and demands affecting all workers everywhere. It became clear for instance, from the invaluable evidence of the different governments that all the European powers ruling in Africa have discovered that the time has passed away when they need only occupy themselves with securing conditions of peace and order and facilities of transport and some revenue. The human wealth of Africa is seen to be the primary concern of government; some see it from the angle of self-interest, others with a larger element of the spirit of trusteeship. As Sir Frederick Lugard put it, the increasing acceptance of the principle underlying the League of Nations Mandate conception will bring as great a change as was the abolition of slavery. One immediate effect of this is that everywhere Governments are entering the field of the education of the African which has been the almost exclusive field of missions, which are today responsible for over 90 per cent of the education of Africans. When however the Gold Coast Government which a few years ago voted some £40,000 a year for education (Mostly missionary) this year gives £100,000 and within a decade will give £350,000, and other governments are following suit, the trend is clear.

Missions must reshape their policy to meet that new situation. The cooperation of missions with government in this sphere is most clearly exemplified in the formation by the British Colonial Office of its Permanent Advisory Committee on African Education. Both within and beyond the range of education the Conference saw the fields also of Health (where clearly Christianity and Government have equal interest) as they do also in relation to right conditions of Labor, the just tenure of land, the development of the Motherhood and Home Life, the preservation and purification of the Tribal social structure (where possible), and elsewhere the growth of a right race-relationship within the new civilization intruded from without.

We dare not be tempted into the impossible task of quoting the speeches in which the Conference began to see and to express these gathering elements of a policy for the ideal forces working in all Africa. The Conference came to see Africa as—so to speak—varied laboratory of experiment towards a life in which the Gospel in itself and in all its implications would create through human effort an order nearer to the Divine Idea. The alternative of the conversion of the individual or the tribe was seen not to be an alternative of "either—or" but of "both—and."

The same was true of the question shall the native be African or belong to Western civilization,—both elements must integrate in the new Africa. Shall he take a European Christianity or an African? Neither and both—he takes the Gospel through Western and through African hands from Christ. Shall we stand for differentiation of races or identity?—differentiation of method and order of life, identity of ideal and of communion with the Eternal, to adopt Dr. Jesse Jones' distinction.

In the same spirit the Conference found in its periods of devotion a fellowship in prayer that saturated the fellowship in thought. It also discovered in the opportunities for meeting men and women of different but parallel experience from other parts of Africa, and indeed of the world, a way of sharing experience and gleaned new ideas of priceless value.

If the value of all these discussions, is not, however, to evaporate, it must be conserved in some clear positive crystallization of aim and method. In a word, the Conference must define with the greatest attainable precision the conclusions to which its spiritual and intellectual fellowship has led it. This was secured in a remarkable way in a series of pregnant resolutions.

Resolutions are often, and not wrongly, objects of cynical scepticism. The resolutions of "Le Zoute" however, arising directly from the discussions in the sectional groups, threshed out carefully by men and women, responsible in the field and in the home boards for working them in practice have this unique value. They present in outline, for the first time in the history of Africa, a coherent practical policy of action, which if pursued by the forces represented at Le Zoute, can in time profoundly influence for good the destinies of that Continent and its peoples.

They will be immediately communicated to the Mission Boards in Europe, America, Britain and Africa for their discussion, decision and action.

The resolutions cover the great areas of influence in the life of the Africa of today and tomorrow — evangelism, education, health and native welfare, land, labor, women, language and literature. Any summary must fail to convey the force and penetration of these resolutions which can only be gauged from a careful study of their entire text.

The resolution on education envisages native education in Africa as a cooperative undertaking, in which Government missions, natives and the commercial community are concerned. After defining the sphere of Government authority, and recommending a scheme of visiting teachers of the Jeanes type who have effected such wonderful progress in America, in the Southern States, the resolution outlines the respective places of Government and missions in the development of the higher and lower grades both of actual education and the training of teachers, and recommends a revenue policy adequate to the elementary education of all native children. It proposed a curriculum related to the total life of the community, with character development based on religion covering all, and especially health, the building of a sound home life, and an informed use of recreation, and concludes with a strong plea for a specifically religious education of the highest efficiency, including religious knowledge, its translation into ethical practice, and its relation to worship.

In order that all this should be pursued in practice with that maximum speed and efficiency a commission is proposed to survey the whole field of religious education in Africa to advise the societies thereon.

It is impossible here even to outline the resolutions on Language and Literature, with its emphasis on the development and the indigenous authorship of books, a closer use of vernaculars, a policy of publication facing at once Islam, Animism and the whole need of the policy of education already outlined and cooperation with the new International Institute of Language and Cultures; on Labor, with its emphasis on the well-being of the native population as the central reservoir for all the development of Africa, and its cooperation with the International Labor Office at Geneva; on work among Women, on Evangelism and the Church; on Health and Native Welfare; and on Land with its emphasis on the fact that inter-racial peace and goodwill is only possible when the Native peoples hold secure tenure of adequate land.

These resolutions of the Conference were all passed under a clear conviction that the development that they envisage is so enormous in its range, and so profound in its implication, that human resources are totally inadequate. The members of the Conference saw clearly that throughout the whole range of the missions and the churches a new calling upon the adequate power of Almighty God can alone carry through the tasks to which he has called them in Africa.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

Doubtless we owe it to each other to write oftener to the Evangelist than we do. It is a thing that can be put off until tomorrow, so we put it off. But how we do like to read what the other fellow did not put off writing. In these latter days it is a good thing for God's children to maintain fellowship in every way opened to us, because Satan tries to break fellowship in the church, and to discourage, and to cry failure. To know of each other is a source of strength. As for the failure of the church it is the only thing that will not fail. Every other institution will fail. To be a true member of the Body of Christ means eternal victory. All the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church.

We have felt some of the latter day satanic missiles down here the past few years but we are still on the map. Sister Srack found us here in July and gave us some splendid Bible talks for about eight days. She has a warm place in our hearts here.

Brother Clarence Sickel also found us here November 12th, and gave us a fine lecture on South America. The only thing wrong about his coming was his going. He did not stay long enough to taste properly of real Southern hospitality, nor to tell us all he knew.

The next evening after his lecture we held a Communion. This is the first service of this kind we ever undertook alone. As the Lord conducted the first one we laid the responsibility on him to conduct this one, and he surely did. From the beginning of the preparation to the end I think we never experienced such order and quietness. There was a good crowd of spectators but how quiet they were. The members, young and old, with the officials rendered able and willing service. And the Lord just seemed to be present with us.

One reason doubtless for so spiritual a feast was the prayers back of it especially for personal cleansing. Two preliminary services were held in which we directed our minds to two main things—ourselves and our Lord. The sad part of it all was that a few absented themselves because of sin unconfessed and unforsaken. These we are praying for and talking with.

Our regular services are of about the usual order. Some of the members are not growing as they should, while others are gaining in spiritual strength. Our prayer meeting though not largely attended is a place of real inspiration. In Bible class after we have completed book seven of the Torrey Course we plan to study Daniel.

Once each month for four months we have been giving some Bible instruction at a Union Sunday school, about six miles from us. The leaders there want us to continue the appointments. So many false teachers have made the place a target and some are confused as to what is the truth. It is lamentable that so many of God's professing children do not know enough of the plain Word to detect seducing spirits and the doctrine of demons. But we can thank God that in all the confusion in the religious world everywhere we go there are those who cannot be moved, and that any of us can take our stand on Jesus Christ and the Word and refuse to be moved. May we stand until Jesus comes and takes us up and out of it all. "He that is faithful to the end shall be saved."

"COLLEGE CORNER BRETHREN CHURCH"

The College Corner Brethren church is about 10 miles from Wabash, Indiana. It is small in size, but large in spirituality and in its activities.

The Rev. C. A. Stewart of Loree has been the pastor for the past three years and was called again to serve another year.

A two weeks' revival meeting was held recently by the pastor, he being assisted by Harley Zumbaugh of Tiosa, who is an efficient evangelistic singer. We all feel we have had a very good meeting. Seven were led to Christ and the community as well as the members have benefited because of it. The attendance and interest were very good.

We have a live Sunday school. We did not experience the so-called "summer slump." Our attendance has been unusually high for a rural school. But with such a staff of teachers, as we have, it is as we would expect. For they not only teach Christianity, but they live it.

We also boast a live Christian Endeavor and Woman's Missionary Society.

Oh, yes, on the 17th of October the church celebrated its thirty-ninth anniversary. This was combined with our Homecoming. Prof. Raymond Schutz of North Manchester College gave the address, which was very interesting.

We believe College Corner is accomplishing much. JOHN KNEE, Supt.

Rt. 7, Wabash, Indiana.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE The Campaign

I have been so busy with the campaign here that I did not have time to write the usual news of the college now for several weeks past. The campaign is not over yet, for we still have two fields to complete, viz., the county and the non-resident alumni.

The former we are reaching by local committees. Every township has been organized and worked by members of the faculty but it is slow work and with the bad weather it will still take us several weeks to complete this part of the canvass.

The non-resident alumni which will not be reached by Brother Bell we are mailing pledges to and a series of follow-up letters. At first it looked as if our appeal here would be of small effect but with the third set of letters we are getting what I suppose is a normal response. I am encouraged at this writing with the response. Mr. Nish, the president of the Alumni Association, Rev. Barnard, vice president, and Mrs. Loren Black, secretary, had a meeting here recently and have volunteered to send out the next series of letters. Also the Alumni Association will publish an issue of the Collegian soon in which a strong appeal will be made. So that by the middle of the year, I feel confident we will have had a very good response.

I want to quote from a letter received from a girl who was here only in the summer and who now is in Hiram College, (Ohio). It ought to put to shame some of our long course graduates. She is not a member of our church:

"I realize I owe a great deal to Ashland College and would like to make a bigger pledge. However, I am borrowing money in order to attend school this winter and am unable to pledge more than thirty dollars. Then, too, I have two colleges to which I owe much. I am making the same pledge to both."

M. A. L.

If we had that spirit in any large way, this part of the campaign would be both easy and over the top. Think what 800 alumni could do on this basis!

The total amount will reach somewhat over $100,000 if we get what now seems evident. Considering everything, this amount represents a real achievement. But the brunt of the burden, just as I said to the ministers at our recent conference, must fall upon the various churches. Therefore I renew my prayers in behalf of the work of Dr. Bell, who is soon to finish up his canvass in Pennsylvania.

Also, right in the middle of the campaign, I had a long conference with certain state officials who demand very far reaching changes for the coming year and the Trustees will have to grapple with this situation at their next meeting, likely in March. It is a case of sink or swim and yet some of our richest alumni give nothing or next to nothing. This proposition can not be put over with five dollar bills. If these statements seem harsh, they are no harsher than the situation demands. I am encouraged by the fine response by many, many, friends both here and among the alumni and in the churches, but this must be one desperate struggle for the ends which have been set up, namely qualification for entrance into the North Central Association.

The other affairs of the College have been going on as usual. The Football team has been unusually successful and has gained wide attention by their fine playing.

The Saturday courses are full and interesting, about 65 being enrolled.

We close for the Thanksgiving vacation. The Christmas recess will begin Friday, December 17 and school will be resumed Tuesday, January 4.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Altoona, Pa. Church Boosts Endowment

This church is located in a prosperous city in which the Pennsylvania Railroad has centered its machine and car shops and has a population of little less than 100,000.

Our people have a neat brick house of worship and a fine parsonage. The membership is not large nor rich. They are loyal to the interests of the church and anxious to build up a work in their city and to contribute to a larger Brethren church.

This city is a strategic point, as naturally the younger people who have membership in some of our country adjacent churches are continually locating here for employment, but I observe as in many many places of like instances, that our people moving from outside places do not bring their membership and place it in the church. THIS IS A MISTAKE, as usually the case is, they very seldom go to church from whence they came, and in time they drift away and are lost to the church. WE NEED TO GIVE MORE ATTENTION TO THIS LEAKAGE. THERE SHOULD BE SOME PREACHING AND ADVISING ALONG THIS LINE and some plan worked among our preachers for trying to avert the inevitable loss of members.

Our dear Brother Gnagey and his good wife are serving their second pastorate here and are dearly loved by the people. It was a pleasure to be in their home and he gave me every assistance. Brother Gnagey has given his life to the best interests of the church and his service reaches over many years, but he is yet a young man in spirit and his love for the church still burns with the old time fire.

The church here has lost heavily in the past few years in losing by death some of its best leaders, but others are taking their places and the future has promise of even bigger things.

The total gift of the church to the Endowment was $1143.00

is the attitude of the real Christian Steward to his God. Is Jesus condemning us today even as he did the young man?

What is my responsibility today to my God? God has said, "Here is the task I want you to accomplish." I cannot evade it, and would not for the world. It is the motive power for my efforts even as the engine furnishes the necessary power to propel the carriage. Yes, I am awed in the face of such a task, but cannot escape it, for he has selected me as his servant. Take Jacob for example, serving in the fields of Laban in Haran for seven years for Rachel, Laban's daughter. The task of seven long years of labor confronted him, but he doesn't desire to escape the responsibility, because he sees a great objective ahead. As he ponders and meditates over this he feels that his first and greatest duty is to fulfill the demands placed upon him, the requirements as it were.

Have you ever paused to ask yourself this question, "What am I here for? What purpose has God for me?" Now we know that God has a purpose for the lilies of the field and the birds of the air, for we are reaping their rich contributions daily, especially in the balmy air and enticing sunshine of the spring days, and still he says we are of much more value than they. Then he must have soul stirring purposes in mind for us, do you not think? Therefore, young people of today, if you will discover this, his very purpose for your life, isn't it true that your first and greatest duty is to fulfill it? And in the course of the fulfillment, your very life will be filled full, because Jesus said, "I came that they might have life and have it more abundantly." Jacob knew Laban's requirement. His primal obligation was to fulfill this. Likewise are we not our own, because we have been chosen as stewards, but ours is not for any specified length of time, but a voluntarily giving of all because it was first given to us. Then shall we not say, "On the 19th of December with the tread of a victor and the note of a master, I will consecrate my life and time and substance to Christian service, and constantly endeavor to seek out God's purpose for my life and assist others in the same, as far as it lieth in me to do so." He is saying to thee now, young man and young woman, "What is that in thy hand? Awake! That which thou holdest is precious. Gold you possess and you know it not. Invest your capital of personality and possessions for him who stood forth as the representative of men."

But you being full of creative energies suddenly and quickly ask, "What shall be my remuneration or what shall be the result of my becoming a steward?" Let us be cautious that we do not judge the Christian Steward of today in terms of worldly success and failure or by the standards of the world, even as the pagan people of Philippi did when Paul was thrown in prison. When this act occurred in Paul's life, some who heretofore were his loyal supporters, now forsook him and declared his gospel to be false. Why? They argued thus, "If his God is the loving and powerful God such as he claims, he would help him out of prison." These people were judging after the standards of men and not those of God. Rather shall we again take into consideration Jacob's experience after he had served seven years for Rachel. He not only had received as his remuneration the coveted prize, Rachel, but listening to what he says, "And these seven years seemed unto me but a few days." Why? Because of the love he had for her. We discover that he also found that enthusiasm for his work which always brings that tremendous overpowering joy and masterful life, because he constantly was visualizing his purpose or objective. What could be more tremendously appealing? Happy is that individual that finds his or her God-given purpose in life and fulfills it by filling it full of content and purpose. Seven years will be as seven days, because of the attachment for the one we serve. So we conclude that we find our best when we give our best, and only can we give our best when we become willing to recognize our utter dependence upon HIM who has given to us all things, both great and small. This is difficult for us in the midst of all the enthusiasms and passions of life, but nevertheless it is our task. Shall we not give ourselves willingly and whole-heartedly?

The Christmas Seal

By Mrs. J. W. Freeland

(Written upon request of Ohio Public Health Association) Text-Air—"Hark The Herald Angels Sing" (Melody—Felix Mendelssohn).

Hark! The Christmas bells will ring
Joy to all the world will bring,

Brotherhood of man reveal
Through the magic Christmas Seal;
Bring a smile to chase the tear,
Banish sickness, cold and fear,
Every Seal some good will do,
And a blessing bring to you.
(Buy a Merry Christmas Seal,
(In your heart, God's love will steal.

Hark! Our voices raise on high
Every one that hears, may buy,
Christmas Seals are in the air
Christmas Seals, are everywhere;
This our "Slogan" every year
"Christmas Seals, good health, and cheer"
Christmas Seals are now on sale
Victory! We cannot fail.

"In your heart, God's love will steal."

THE PRESIDENT'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

(Editor's Note: This Proclamation should have been published in last week's paper, but was overlooked in the midst of our Home Mission propaganda. We hope our pastors succeeded in getting a copy of daily papers or other publications for use in Thanksgiving Day services).

As a nation and as individuals, we have passed another twelve months in the favor of the Almighty. He has smiled upon our fields and they have brought forth plentifully; business has prospered; industries have flourished, and labor has been well employed. While sections of our country have been visited by disaster, we have been spared any great national calamity or pestilential visitation. We are blessed among the nations of the earth.

Our moral and spiritual life has kept measure with our material prosperity. We are not unmindful of the gratitude we owe to God for his watchful care which has pointed out to us the ways of peace and happiness; we should not fail in our acknowledgment of his divine favor which has bestowed upon us so many blessings. Neither should we be forgetful of those among us who, through stress of circumstances, are less fortunately placed, but by deeds of charity make our acknowledgment more acceptable in his sight.

Wherefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby set aside Thursday, the twenty-fifth of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and I recommend that on that day the people shall cease from their daily work and, in their homes or in their accustomed places of worship, devoutly give thanks to the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received, and seek his guidance that through good deeds and brotherly love they may deserve a continuance of his favor.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the United States.

Done at the City of Washington, this thirtieth day of October, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-six, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and fifty-first.

Calvin Coolidge.

A man who had been a great sinner once told how he was saved. "I crept to the feet of Jesus," he said, "and to my astonishment, he did not scold me, for he knew that I had been scolded enough; and he did not pity me, nor did he give me advice, for he knew that I already had enough. But he put his arms around me and loved me; and when morning came, I was a new man!"—James I. Vance.

THE GOLDEN DAY

(December 5, 1926)

By Arthur Wallace Peach

The guns of war are silent,
The bugles' lips are still,
And hands across the world unite
To banish hate and ill,
To join all lands and nations
In trust that shall not cease,
To make one day the golden day—
The Golden Day of Peace!

No more do homes burn redly
In battle's after-glow,
But little children wait in vain
A mother's greeting low.
The world's great heart must succor
Frail hands that blindly grope,
And make of childhood's darkened day
A Golden Day of Hope!

The years with tender meaning
Shall hide old griefs away,
And new dawns light the distant hills
And bring a nobler day;
And this shall be the promise
And prophecy thereof,
This day of open hearts and hands—
A Golden Day of Love!

Arthur Wallace Peach, who tied with Mary Carolyn Davies of Portland, Oregon, as winner of the poetry prize in the Morgenthau Thousand Dollar poetry-poster-slogan Contest to promote the observance of International Golden Rule Sunday through Near East Relief, is a Vermonter by birth, heritage and residence. MEETING THE PROBLEM OF CHEAP THOUGH HEALTHFUL COOKING

By Helena Lorenz Williams

Expensive food is not necessarily healthful food, nor is it always the most palatable. Careful marketing and preparation can produce a good dinner just as inexpensive cloth and good sewing can produce an attractive gown.

First in the rules for economical cooking comes "plenty of milk." One often hears it said that milk is an expensive food, but this is not true. Although its initial cost may seem high, its liberal use will prevent many a doctor's and dentist's bill, especially for the children, or the occasional loss of a day's pay through illness. A pint of milk per person per day regardless of cost is a good housekeeping motto.

Cereals are an economical food. They provide energy and are the cheapest food of this kind. The more money the housewife wishes to save, the more cereal of the cooked variety she should give her family. Of these, oatmeal, wheatena, rice, graham or wholewheat are cheapest and best. Package cereals which require no cooking, are far more expensive in relation to their food value.

Milk, cereal, vegetables and fruit constitute the cheapest healthful diet. Speaking of vegetables, potatoes are perhaps the most economical, and they provide more energy than the popular polished rice and macaroni we so frequently substitute for them. While the latter are also energy foods, they require the use of vegetables to supplement their lack of vitamins or mineral elements. But potatoes provide these. It is safe to say that all vegetables are healthful to a person in normally good health. Whether they are economical or not, however, depends a good deal on the distance they have to travel to reach the consumer, and whether one tries to buy them in or out of season. Beets, carrots, parsnips, onions, turnips are all good, but the same ones should not be served over a long period. Green vegetables are not luxuries even though they seem too expensive for the family purse. They should be served at least three or four times a week. They provide the necessary roughage for the system, prevent constipation, and thus keep the bodily functions in good working order. Among the green vegetables which can be easily and tastefully prepared are dandelion greens, Brussels sprouts, beat tops, lettuce, turnip greens, spinach, asparagus, cabbage, escarole and chard.

Meat is undoubtedly the most expensive article of food. The greatest economy in diet may be practised by reducing the amount of meat in the average home, provided plenty of proper substitutes such as milk, cheese, beans, peas, lentils, nuts and fish are used in its place, with vegetables. Meat should never be eaten regularly more than once a day, and then not in very large quantities. Small amounts of meat with generous quantities of vegetables may be made into very appetizing dishes. Of these, stuffed peppers and stuffed cabbage are good examples. Eggs are an excellent article of diet and are so far superior to meat, that even when they are expensive it is much better economy to omit meat from the diet.

Desserts are a real luxury, not only because of their immediate cost, but also in future cost in indigestion and other stomach ailments. Pastries and puddings are tempting to the appetite, but they add little or nothing to our general well being. Miss Lucy H. Gillett in her book "Food for Health's Sake," says this about them: "Dainties are the items which increase food costs. A delicacy that costs but ten cents more than another, added to one meal each day will increase the cost of food for the family $36.50 a year. Three such dainties a day mean an expenditure of $109.50 a year. The housewife should decide, therefore, whether the pleasure of these dainties is worth this expenditure and whether the family budget can stand it."

Good food is necessary to good health. Malnutrition, which is the result of unsuitable food as much as insufficient food, is one of the chief causes of tuberculosis. The National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated organizations spend large sums every year to help teach the American public how to eat healthfully. The eighteenth annual Christmas seal sale which furnishes funds for this work will be held throughout the country during December.

There are 67,438 Indian children enrolled in schools in the United States.

watching them, but I never saw her off the nest (although she must have been), nor him bring her anything to eat. However, a great change took place when the birdies were hatched.

She did not seem like the same bird, she was on the go every moment, with a note of her voice which seemed to say, "hurry, quick! hurry quick" as though she was fearing they could not get food enough for those little open mouths. Her mate was very attentive and helpful, but he acted as though he thought such haste unnecessary.

Neltje Blanchan; Author of "Birds Worth Knowing", says, "No bird that we have has so varied a repertoire as Sir Robin; and few people can recognize him by every one of his calls and songs." I am sure I can't, and that is why I was so surprised one morning by being wakened with such harsh cries, that I never thought a robin could make.

I felt sure it was some other bird after my robin, and could hardly believe my eyes when I saw it was the mother robin, with ruffled feathers and outspread wings, terribly agitated, and squawking as loudly as she could. I noticed the young birds were safe, though; then something must have happened to father robin, and was more surprised than ever to see him not far from the nest, huddled up in a little ball, and apparently unconscious of any trouble.

I watched him very closely and soon saw that he was not as unaware as he pretended; that "female of the species" never stopped her clack clacking, and the young birds were adding their share, with all the power they had; it surely was worth seeing, better than any movie I ever attended. Watching both sides of the performance made it so fascinating; especially Mr. Robin's actions. He seemed to be trying to keep out of the trouble by keeping still. He would almost withdraw his head, then back it would go under his feathers, until finally his patience gave out, he made a quick dart toward her, but she kept out of his way, darting first one way then another; they were so angry they did not look like robins, with their feathers on end, and hissing at each other, with apparently no idea of stopping.

But like a flash that saucy little female flew up beside the nest, and called with several little cooing notes to him to come and make up. He looked so surprised, but responded very quickly flying up beside her, and then how lovely it sounded to hear them making up.

After which Sir Robin flew higher up in the tree, and gave a glorious delightful song of rejoicing; then away they flew together after the birdies' breakfast, with which they soon returned.

And now I never will know what caused the trouble, unless it was that she wanted help with getting breakfast.

I had noticed there had been no early morning songs since the birdies were hatched; so I decided that Mr. Robin thought if he couldn't sing he wouldn't work.—Selected.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

The Robin's Quarrel

I never pay much attention to others' affairs, nor have I ever been called a gossip; but I think I will risk my reputation for once, as I want to tell you the story of a quarrel I witnessed between some neighbors who built near me this spring.

It seems almost a shame to talk about them, as they were so unconscious of my observations, and apparently happy and peaceably inclined, but that in a way, makes it all the more interesting, for it shows a phase of bird life very unusual and new to me.

Mr. and Mrs. Robin arrived earlier than usual, but were in no haste about starting their nest building; finally though, they selected a site in a big old tree near my bedroom window, from which I had a wonderfully good view of all the proceedings.

I was wakened many mornings with their early songs, and considered it a rare treat to hear the first "softly warbled salute to the sunrise," and continuing in a joyous rapturous melody of love making.

It was very interesting and fascinating to watch them; they were so busy and seemingly happy, that I could not help wondering why we human beings had to quarrel and disagree about matters that were of no more importance to us than the birds' affairs are to them.

The nest building proceeded rapidly, and soon was finished, then when there were four eggs in it the mother bird began the brooding period; they were now both so quiet, he was never far away with his subdued, tranquil love song. I spent hours

Tired to Death of Idealism?

"The people are tired to death of idealism. They want realists in politics." Thus wrote a "moist" editor in a recent press dispatch while seeking to forward the presidential boom of a certain frankly wet politician and office holder. That would be a sad state of affairs, if it were really true. But it is obviously greatly exaggerated, as is the way of our wet propagandists. Even so, there is enough truth in it to make us concerned. However, the recent elections by no means pointed to universal weariness concerning the ideal of restricting and disciplining the appetites of men. We were being told before the elections that the rank and file of the people were experiencing a change of heart and that a strong demand for a relaxing of our grip on the temperance ideal was getting under way. Those who were misled by that sort of propaganda are happily disillusioned by this time. The shrewd leaders of politics and public life never were deceived, but were fully aware that the heart of America was strongly set on the ideal. So widely recognized is this fact that it would be hard to find a man seeking office, with any chance of success, without appealing to the dry sentiment, except in a few populous centers where foreigners largely predominate. If sentiment in this particular were changing, it would soon be manifest in the personnel of Congress. That body is still so overwhelmingly dry that the only possible chance of a modification of the Volstead law is a sharpening of its teeth.

An interesting confirmation of the lively sentiment that is still extant in favor of prohibition comes from the state of South Dakota, where two colleges refused to allow their debating teams to argue in favor of amending the Volstead law to permit the sale of light wines and beer. The Phi Kappa Delta, a national debating society, had chosen as the year's subject the question: Resolved that the Volstead law be amended to permit the sale of light wine and beer. It is said that the Dakota Wesleyan University, through its president, protested against the subject and declared that no Wesleyan debater would support the affirmative, but offered to present a team to uphold the negative of this "unethical" question to all comers. The Northern State Teachers' College took the same position, declaring that the subject "Verges on repudiation of the Constitution", and asserting that "this college stands for law enforcement." A correspondent in The Methodist Protestant, reporting this situation, remarks, "If there is as much nullification sentiment in the country as the 'wets' would have us believe, it would seem that this would be the popular side of the subject."

In another particular, also, it appears that idealism is not quite so out of date as our opportunist politicians have apparently believed. Honesty and integrity have been flaunted in a few instances (all too numerous at that) and when the exposure was made, there was rolled up a public sentiment against these individuals that put an end to their political careers. Current examples of men who have lost their political heads, to say nothing of what else they may have lost, or may yet lose, are Albert B. Fall and

Harry M. Dougherty. Truman H. Newberry's way into the Senate was paved with gold, but the clatter of dollars so grated on the ears of an idealistically inclined American citizenship that he could not withstand the storm of protest. Not only so, but many of the senators, who for political reasons supported Newberry's claim to a seat in the Senate have been punished by retirement. The way of Senators-elect Vare of Pennsylvania and Smith of Illinois, whose campaign expenditures made Newberry's look like "pocket change", promises to be very rough and uncertain. The people are aroused because their ideals of honesty and honor seem to have been so shamefully traduced, and their disapproval is likely to be registered in no uncertain manner. These and many other illustrations that might be cited tend to confirm us in our belief that the people are not "tired to death of idealism."

We are not deceived into thinking, however, that Christian idealism is so widely and fully accepted that there is no truth in the statement and that there is nothing to be concerned about. When people are faced with outstanding examples of evil, they turn in large majorities to higher and finer ways of conduct. But when not aroused by extraordinary situations they follow in vast numbers their devious materialistic ways, and shun the idealism of the Gospel as impracticable. In their personal lives they do not measure up to the highest and noblest standards. And professedly Christian people must face this charge as well as those of the world. If this were not so, the standards of the world, the commonly accepted standards, would be higher. But great numbers of church members do not have the courage to defend or pursue really Christian ideals. There is the common impression that business success requires yielding somewhat to questionable methods, that being accepted in social circles necessitates indulgences that are not the noblest, that the winning of position and places of preferment in various organizations and political groups demands compromises with integrity. In these and many other ways people, Christian people, are continually making exceptions to what conscience approves, lowering the accepted standards and then seeking to justify themselves in it, till the idealism that was once cherished seems to them decidedly ethereal and impractical. The trouble however is not in the ideal, but in the will of the people. There is needed more courage of convictions in matters of conduct, stricter adherence to right standards, stronger determination to hold fast the high ideals. There is too much cowardice among church people to go against the thing that is popular with the world, too much fear of being dubbed puritanical and narrow, too much willingness to compromise, and so idealism breaks down in all too large a measure.

We have slipped in our idealism as a nation in our attitude toward international problems and relations. We have talked a great deal about world peace and what we could do to promote it, but we have drifted onto a low plane of approach to the problem. We have lost the idealism of Wilson, and some men are boasting about it and some are being recommended for the presidency of their reactionary, selfish-nationalistic attitude. We have lost the ideal of sacrifice and service in a large measure, which would prove our strongest national defense and the mightiest factor for world peace. We have allowed politics to blind our eyes to a fine idealism. Any and all proposals for world peace we have approached from the standpoint of self-interest. "This was the mood in which we timidly and cautiously approached the World Court," said Dr. M. Ashby Jones of St. Louis in a speech at the World Alliance conference at Pittsburgh, early in November. "We began the consideration of the question with the slogan, 'Safety First.' The whole discussion ranged around the provisions for the safeguarding of the rights of the United States, and there was kept constantly in the minds of the people, the fear of sacrificing our sovereignty, and the danger of being imposed upon by unfriendly nations. So when we did finally make our application for entrance, it was so hedged about with conditions that it amounted to little more than an uncertain gesture, made with reservations. It never gripped the conscience or quickened the heart beat of this nation. It aroused no sense of sacrifice. It held no call to a crusade, and there was no dare of danger. We can never mobilize the righteous enthusiasm of our people behind a negative proposition."

And Dr. Jones is right. The spirit of sacrifice, the challenge of a big and adventurous task for the sake of others, the appeal to an unselfish and courageous service are necessary to the mobilizing of the manhood and resources of our nation to the great cause of peace. We must view our course from a high plane, we must be motivated by a fine idealism, or we shall never be moved with passionate enthusiasm for the peace and welfare of the world, nor be made willing to risk our own rights and to dare the danger of enemies for its realization.

It is folly to deprecate idealism; that holds the key to the noblest life and power. In that way lies national safety and perpetuity. We are not "tired to death of idealism," at least, not intentionally and determinedly so, not when a challenging situation awakens the heroic and sacrificial in our natures. But we have quite widely and largely allowed ourselves to drift into the easier course. We have become morally indolent and indifferent. Materialism has gripped the hearts of the masses almost without their knowing it, and a lofty idealism seems impracticable and unessential.

The Work of Rehabilitation

About the middle of September the State Department of Education of Ohio gave out a news item, which of course is no longer news, but is still of interest because of its spiritual application. It dealt with the Civilian Rehabilitation Service, the job of making over citizens disabled by accident or disease and giving them such training as will fit them for gainful employment. During the past year 551 handicapped Ohioans were given training and returned to employment, and 455 are in the process of rehabilitation. Director of Education Riegel remarks that "Ohio is still maintaining her leadership among the states of the Union in this field of work, and is restoring adults to useful service at the lowest per capita cost of any state." We are informed that over 5000 cases have been handled since the establishment of the service five years ago. The average cost of rehabilitation has decreased from $209.11 per case in 1922 to $119.00 per case in 1926, a decrease of nearly 45 per cent. For every dollar invested in rehabilitation, the return to society amounts to $47.71 in the form of increased earning capacity. These people were fitted for a great variety of activities, 219 different vocations being undertaken by the 551 persons rehabilitated during the past year and the lowest average weekly wage of any rehabilitant was $7.00 and the highest was $75.00. It is a great work the state is doing for its disabled citizens, great not only because of the increased happiness, prosperity, self-reliance that is thereby made possible to the unfortunate, but also because society is enriched both financially and morally by this means. The transfer of the disabled from the column of liabilities to that of assets makes it a profitable undertaking financially, and the moral effect of this benevolent work is enriching to the public conscience.

Now the church has a task which offers an interesting parallel, and to which much attention is being given at this season of the year. It is that of rehabilitating the spiritually disabled, which is widely recognized as having a large part in every evangelistic campaign. The church is greatly hindered by the number of those on its membership roll who have fallen by the way and are no longer to be counted on for witnessing and service. We sometimes speak of them as "backsliders", "dead wood", "hypocrites", and our minds are dominated with a wish that we might get rid of them. They are a cumbrance to the ground and we feel like rooting them out. And from the standpoint of their deserts and seeming worth to the church they might well be dealt with summarily; strict justice doubtless points that way. And yet we are wondering if our own efforts in their behalf warrant our taking such measures! Did we do what we could to keep them from falling? Have we done what we could to restore them and to build them up in the Christian graces? Many of them have not had a chance. They have not had encouragement. They have been victims of bad environment, of hereditary weaknesses, of lack of Christian helpfulness, and deserve our sympathy more than our blame. We are all objects of divine mercy, living witnesses of God's grace, not a soul of us could stand before his judgment bar uncondemned. It behooves us then to maintain an attitude of consideration and helpfulness, and to give serious attention to reclaiming the lost and to rehabilitating their wasted energies. These fruitless branches in the church should neither be allowed to drag on their useless existence to the end undisturbed, nor should they be cut off without mercy. The church labors under a terrible handicap by allowing the former, and suffers a great loss by the latter course. They should be given the most thoughtful care and earnest prayer that they may be revived and reempowered. They should be digged about and given a chance to take new root in the soil of grace, to show forth new and more vigorous life and to manifest real fruit-bearing power. Such a policy is both wise and consistently Christian.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We are glad to hear from Sister Mary A. Snyder, the longtime and ever-faithful friend of the Evangelist. After an unusual trip across the continent, she is now back at Glover Gap, West Virginia.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie, in charge of the mission station at Krypton, Kentucky, tells of a number of highly appreciated visits to that field, also of his attendance at a distant Christian Endeavor convention at another mission station in the mountains. Two recent baptisms are reported, the work is growing and the outlook is brightening.

Brother C. F. Yoder writes an interesting letter from South America, telling of a missionary journey he made to some of our own mission points, and also to the Mennonites for whom he conducted an evangelistic campaign resulting in fifty-two confessions. Brother T. K. Hershey, in charge of this mission, is to give Rio Cuarto a meeting in exchange.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports a splendid addition to the Endowment Fund from the Martinsburg and McKee churches in Pennsylvania, where Brother James S. Cook is the loyal pastor. The $2235.67 from this church added to the $78,070.39 previously reported makes a grand total to date of $80,306.06. May it continue to climb. The church cannot do too big a thing for its college. Some really large gifts would help the present situation wonderfully.

We have an interesting letter from the Uniontown church in Pennsylvania, where brother E. F. Byers is the faithful pastor. These good people have arisen above the discouragements with which they were surrounded because of the destruction of their church house, and are taking on new life and resolving to build bigger and better. All departments of the work seem to be in good shape and the people are giving their pastor a splendid type of loyalty and cooperation. Sixteen souls have been added to the church roll since Brother Byers took charge.

A good report comes from Roanoke, Virginia, where Brother H. H. Rowsey is pastor, under whose leadership the work is going forward in a promising way. Eight have been added to the membership since last report, some of which came as a result of the recent evangelistic campaign conducted by Brother B. F. Owen, whose services were highly appreciated. Repairs and improvements have been added to the church and parsonage, but pastor and people are talking and beginning to work towards a new church plant, which is said to be necessary to the continued progress of the congregation.

Brother H. M. Oberholtzer writes from his new field of labor at Fostoria, Ohio, where he is putting forth commendable effort at building up a Brethren work that has been repeatedly despaired of. The success that has attended his efforts speaks of the consecration that is characteristic of his ministry. Five additions (one of which was the present pastor, Rev. R. E. Gotschall) to the Columbus work was a pleasing close to a very devoted ministry of four years and during which his organization and equipping of the Sunday school and his work among the children were outstanding features. Brother Oberholtzer reports four conversions and three additions to the church at Fostoria.

A CORRECTION

A typographical error in the editorial of last week resulted in the omission of a significant statement of statistics gleaned from Dr. Walter S. Athearn's little booklet on "Crime Preventing," published by "The Tabloid Press" at Elgin, Illinois. After we had said that seven out of every ten children are untouched by any systematic moral or religious instruction, we made the following statement which failed to get into type: "There are 7,413,240 nominally Protestant children under ten years of age growing up in non-church homes, without hearing grace at table, family prayer, or receiving similar religious instruction," (here it continued as printed) and without being enrolled in any Sunday school. This widespread lack of religious instruction and training in the home is a matter to be deplored, and because no other institution can adequately do the work of the home, we must give more serious attention to the revival of home religion.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Making the White Gift Offering Bigger and Better

By Dr. William H. Beachler, President National Sunday School Association

Time rushes on, and we try to keep up. We are almost startled at the thought that another Christmas season is right at our door. It seems but yesterday that our last beautiful Christmas became history. And thus the years glide swiftly and we all move most certainly and unceasingly toward the end of life's little journey. But we are not forgetting that it is a mark of God's great rich mercy that we are still among the living and have the privilege to think about and plan for another White Gift offering. Let us thank God for this.

Applying the Offering to Worthy Causes

It is no longer necessary to dwell upon the worthwhileness of the causes which receive support from our White Gift Offerings—at least not for our older readers. Through our many years of White Gift history we have become well schooled on this point. I am bold to voice my confidence that YOUR Sunday School Association, and YOUR Chair of Religious Education in Ashland College, and YOUR work at Lost Creek have made unto themselves a good record, and enjoy your full confidence. And it is to these splendid deserving interests that YOUR White Gift offering goes. I repeat that it is not necessary to tell our older readers this; but I am sure it is wise and important that year after year we should keep clearly before the minds of the boys and girls, and young people of our Church Schools, and the new additions to our churches, just how and where our White Gift Offerings are spent. We ought always to encourage enlightened giving.

Let Us Aim at a Bigger Offering this Year

There seemed to be a pretty general agreement at our last General Conference that in our slogan for our Church Schools for this year we would place the word "BIGGER." All right. We want to be consistent. And so, we propose that from now on, in each and everyone of our Church Schools as we plan and talk about the coming White Gift Offering we shall give the word "BIGGER" a prominent place. Why not? Saint Paul said, "I press toward the mark." Our total offering last year was $4,657.08. If it is the same this year, or even less, that is not pressing toward the mark. That is just standing still or moving in a circle. Again, I ask, why not? Has not your school a larger membership than it had a year ago? And more, have you not been teaching in every department of your school during the year the importance of stewardship and Christian giving? If so, and if your teaching has gotten home into the hearts and lives of your school membership, why should it not be perfectly natural that the coming offering would be bigger? And after all the secret is very simple. Challenge the last pupil in your school to have a part in this offering, and challenge the last pupil to do better than he or she did last year, and there is your secret: Let us move forward to a "BIGGER" offering.

Let Us Aim at a Better Offering this Year

You will recall that the other word in our slogan for the year was, "BETTER," "BIGGER AND BETTER." If you ask, how can we make our offering "BETTER?" I will answer: If we refuse to allow the coming White Gift offering to be a mere incident of secondary importance in our Christmas thinking and planning; if we view the whole matter as a privilege rather than a respectable duty; if we give as unto the Lord Jesus Christ; if we put sacrifice and denial into our offering; and if we make sacred our gift by sending up prayer that God may more greatly bless and use the causes to which our offering is applied, then I am very sure our White Gift offering will be both "BETTER" and "WHITER." If it is desirable that our coming offering shall be "BIGGER," it is even more desirable that it shall be "BETTER—WHITER." We must believe that our ever adorable Lord and King looks first at the spirit in which we bring him our gift, and if the spirit and motive is not "white" we may doubt if he looks at the gift at all. Let us make this a truly "BETTER, WHITER, offering."

It Must Be Sold to the School

Finally, this thing cannot succeed in your school of itself. White Gift enthusiasm cannot rise higher in any school than the enthusiasm of the pastor, superintendent, and teaching force of the school. In a very large measure, the amount of the offering in any given school, the spirit in which the offering is given, and the reflex influence and blessing upon the school from giving the offering, is determined by the pastor, superintendent, and teachers of that school. The attitude, vision, and life of the leadership of a school is reflected in the school in a hundred different ways—including the White Gift Offering. And so, I beg of the last leader in our schools, take advantage of the coming White Gift Offering as a rare opportunity for the teaching and specific exercise of Christian giving in your school. Our schools all need just such opportunities.

We will send your school an ample supply of envelopes again as we did last year. Get these envelopes into the hands of your last pupil. Do it. And mail out envelopes to your non-resident members. Turn every stone. Fully develop your field. Harvest your resources carefully. And what will be the result? A "BIGGER and BETTER" White Gift Offering this year, and a rich, lasting blessing to your school. Let's do it!

"Bigger and Better"

Make that the Slogan for white Gift Offering

The White Gift Offering

By Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, National Treasurer

CHRISTMAS, 1926!!! What dozens of ideas that brings to us! Are you thinking now of visits, reunions, shopping, church programs, vacations, hustle, fun, presents—and are you thinking of the Christ Child? Does this magic word—Christmas—suggest even a tiny bit that there should be gifts to our King?

Lately I have asked myself a number of questions about that famous Christmas slogan—"It is more blessed to give than to receive." Several things have been responsible for this consideration. First, I have been so thankful for several wonderfully fine gifts that have come in past past Christmas seasons that I am positive that it makes one very happy to receive gifts. Second, in this time I have seen some miserably small and meager and poor gifts offered by some folks especially to Christian work so that I am sure in those cases giving must not have brought much happiness to the giver.

And yet there is no one who will read these words who will not agree that some of the happiest moments ever experienced have been those when we have given a gift to some one and have received a look, a smile, a word of sincere gratitude. Yes, truly, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

So it is that we give gifts to others on Christmas and recall the Gift of God on that first Christmas day. But for years the idea never occurred to anyone to give gifts to him whose real birthday it is. So some time ago there was suggested a plan for a Christmas service which had a more or less elaborate program. Some time after this the leaders of our church decided that the idea of giving gifts to our King at Christmas time was exactly the right idea even though they felt that the original program need not always be carried out. Out of this adoption has grown our custom of taking up a "White Gift" offering in the Sunday schools of our denomination at Christmas time.

I have before me a copy of the Treasurer's report of this offering last year. It was printed in the September number of the Educator and I wish you would hunt it up and refer to it as you read the rest of this article. It is a very interesting and a very good report and I wish you would notice several things with me as we look it over.

Do you notice that last year one school in our brotherhood gave over two hundred dollars? Thirteen other schools gave over a hundred dollars a piece. That's fine, isn't it? But now notice that fifteen or more schools gave less than ten dollars apiece. Do you notice that altogether there are only one hundred thirty-seven gifts reported and that at least fifteen of these are from individuals? The statistician tells us that there are a few more than twenty thousand Brethren. If that is true, then we gave last year an average offering of about twenty-five cents apiece as a BIRTHDAY OFFERING FOR THE KING!

Yet "It is more blessed to give than to receive." How it must cheer Jesus to know that we received a twenty-five cent blessing last year by giving him a twenty-five cent birthday present!

I know a Sunday school that has a separate department for its boys and girls of the ages of 10-18 which department has an average attendance of about 30. Last year this department alone gave over sixteen dollars as a Birthday Offering to Jesus, yet very few of the members were "wage earners." At the same time this congregation was having "dollar days," church-building-fund offerings, and collections for song books, new equipment and what not.

In the face of this response dare any group of wage earners incorporated as a Brethren church and send in a birthday offering for Jesus of less than ten dollars?

Now, Brethren, our White Gift for the King this year ought easily to reach the TEN THOUSAND DOLLAR MARK. Now before you open your mouth to protest just count a hundred and whistle three times and by that time you will come to your senses enough to realize that you would not have to give sixty per cent of your next month's salary if that figure would be reached. It would simply mean fifty cents a piece from every one of us. There isn't a child in our Sunday schools that if he were invited to a birthday party of even a little playmate would not want to take a fifty-cent handkerchief, tie, book, or other present. How can you fail to show them that just as truly they may come to Jesus and offer him a birthday present not of toys a playmate might use but of money that he may direct to further his Kingdom?

Ten thousand dollars!!!! But your officers have only set a budget for the coming year of a little less than five thousand dollars! One reason this is unusually small is that they are not planning to have a field secretary do full time work. They are afraid the offering may not justify them adding this expense this year because other pressing needs must be satisfied. But if we should exceed their fondest hopes and put some money in the treasury this year, then they will be able to make plans for the field work again which is so necessary and important.

Religious Education Association, Ashland College

The items of this year's budget follow:

Light plant at Lost Creek, $500.

This is a new item. The White Gift Offering has always been shared with our Kentucky Home Mission project. Some time ago it was made possible for them to have a light plant, but mechanical things like that will wear out, you know, and now comes the imperative call for help.

The Ashland College Library Book Fund, $500.

This fund was primarily intended to buy books for the Seminary but it has been increased and is to be used to buy some books for all departments so everyone in College will benefit.

Ashland College Chair of Religious Education, $1500.

Since Ashland College was the first college in the State of Ohio to establish a department of Religious Education it appeals to the church to help maintain this worthy department which Prof. J. A. Garber so ably is developing. This item is always found on the budget.

Kentucky Missions, $1000.

This is another item which is always found on this budget and one which needs almost no discussion. How glorious if we could make it $2000 this year. If we spend our money to secure one person like Hattie Cope (formerly) from among the mountaineers we are doing well indeed. International Sunday School Association, $100.

To insure our cooperation with other evangelical bodies in the work of Christian Education. Educator, $300.

We need twice this sum to make this magazine what it should be, but we hope with $300 to make it a real help for Brethren teachers.

Secretarial Work, $112.50.

Miss Elsie Ball of Waterloo, Iowa, a Freshman at Ashland College this year is the Secretary for Professor Garber and assists in preparing and mailing and tabulating the various and multitudinous correspondence incidental to our national work.

Promotional Work, $500.

There will be some field work done and some institute work and the general national program extended as far as possible.

Envelopes will be mailed in a few weeks and your nation-officers will be glad to make suggestions as to programs and detailed plans for taking a White Gift offering.

IT IS MORE BLESSED TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE!!

Is it? It is? IS IT?

Will you answer "YES" by sending in your school's offering promptly to M. P. Puterbaugh, Ashland, Ohio.

Remember the King's Birthday.

The Women and the Church

By Mrs. F. C. Vanator

When we form a mental picture of a congregation it contains a large percent of women. Woman gave birth to our Lord. Woman followed him to the tomb. Woman met him at the resurrection. It was John Wesley's mother who persuaded him not to oppose the layman preaching. It was Mrs. Booth who visualized the Salvation Army and brought it to an efficient organization. It was the invalid wife of Wendel Phillips who spurred him on to his great success. And, were it not for the Christian women today many churches would fail.

Woman has not held the place that she should in organization work. Church boards largely exclude her. Building Committees find no place for her. The ministry bars her. The Mission Boards rarely use her. Her only tasks have been the ones allotted her by her ruling brothers, and these she has done gladly and well. But times are changing.

John T. Rose in a recent letter to the editor of a prominent religious journal says, "We know that in the church life of today, if it were not for the noble Christian women, it would be difficult for the church to 'carry on.' In the parish the usual question is, What do the women want? and it is the exception if the rector does not try to meet their wishes.

No, the church needs the women. We depend on them, and if the women communicants of the church desire any legislation without any approach to unity it will be granted to them we confidently assume."

This quotation shows that in some churches, at least, there is a changing attitude toward women and the work of the Master. We see this trend developing in our own fraternity, and justly so, for the women of the Brethren church have proven themselves capable of all these things by their efforts in the Woman's Missionary Society.

Under this well-adopted name the entire work of the women and girls of our church has been correlated. An efficient and far-seeing organization—we have carefully laid and worked out plans for future efforts and have never retrenched.

Throughout these past years we have supported the chair of Theology at Ashland and have met every advance which the Board has asked and have even urged greater advance when we felt that the Board were too conservative in their plans.

The Home and Foreign work have both received assistance from the earliest dates of their work and the women have done what has been asked gladly.

With this new year comes new plans and advances. The women have taken over Bassai Station and are supporting it from funds raised in the past year. Their policy has ever been to provide the money for the future need. Coordinate with this plan of the women the Girls of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha have started a fund for the education of our missionaries' children. This is a cause which has given the Foreign Board some concern in the past and one which we are sure will make an appeal for a rapidly growing fund, since it is one that touches the heart-strings of every parent.

The newest forward-looking plan instituted this year is the inception of our Children's Missionary Circle. The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, both Junior and Senior, has well taken care of the girls from nine years on, but the younger children have been neglected. The experience of all other denominations has been that the missionary spirit has been implanted before the age of nine. Therefore, after making a study of the question for a year, Miss Ethel Myers brought to us her findings with the result that an organization is being launched to care for both boys and girls up to the Junior Sisterhood age. This organization is not in full blossom but we are presenting to the brotherhood the "Bud" which will gradually unfold into the beautiful rose of a missionary-filled child life. We appeal to you for a careful study of this problem and a consecration to the task if God should call you to the leadership of this group.

This problem having been properly met will form a connecting link with our adult mission study classes which have in the past been so helpful in bringing our women into touch with the vital problems of the mission field. In these classes we have touched in a great measure only the women and girls of our churches, but our prayer is that we may some way interest the men and boys, for our Foreign work is showing the effect of this effort.

The Missionary Herald says, "Nearly one-third of the missionaries of the American Board are the children of foreign missionaries." Did these missionary mothers have any part in this condition?

The applicants for our own fields are very largely from our women and girls, not because our men and boys are not as consecrated; not as courageous; not as self-sacrificing; but, because they are not as well informed; have not seen the need. The thought that "To see a need and recognize it as a need is a call to service" is our reason for this appeal for more missionary instruction. Just gladden the heart of your local W. M. S. president by asking her to provide a teacher for a men's and boys' study class or arrange her regular study class at an hour when the men and boys can come.

In the larger denominations there are various organizations to meet the many-sided avenues of service for the women of their churches. But in our own brotherhood we have confined it to one organization and have attempted to meet all the needs as they have arisen. Starting out as a Ladies' Aid when every church was struggling to get on its feet, she did her part loyally and well. And when the time was ripe for a definite step in the direction of missions she took that step, not only in aims, but in name also. Now when everywhere we turn there seems to be something to undermine the spiritual life of our homes, she is devoting herself to programs and special plans to counter this evil. The social life which has become such an integral part in our complicated lives is being satisfied also through the meetings of these Christian women. This organization has proven to be just another feeder for the church.

The type of organization which we have has permitted us freedom enough to meet the individual need of the local community. The pastor or church board which has neglected to use this piece of machinery in the caring for the field has failed to use the "first fruits" of our Lord's ministry here on this earth.

Our slogan for this year is "Our Children for Christ." What would be the result if every Christian mother should win her children for Christ? Most of us pride ourselves on the fact that we can get our children to do what we wish if we use the correct methods. Therefore let us turn our every effort to this task and check that ever-present leak in our own brotherhood.

About Minstrels

Written for "The Evangelist" by a Correspondent Interested in Public Health.

Minstrels were an order of men in the Middle Ages who subsisted by the arts of poetry and music, and sang to the harp verses composed by themselves and others.

They wandered from castle to castle, and in exchange for their entertainment often were presented with gifts of great value.

Those called mummers were a type of minstrel who dressed themselves in various highly colored garments, and often masqueraded at Christmas time. Usually they were recruited from the poor people of the district, and by this means were able to obtain, at the hands of the rich, Christmas gifts denied them by poverty.

During the Middle Ages in every country the Minstrel of England had a counterpart.

Often they were accompanied by "histriones and glee-men." During a period of English history they sometimes helped at divine service, but as they gradually acquired the arts of juggling and sleight-of-hand and became the central attractions at Fairs, May Day festivals and country weddings, in the end they degenerated into a type of vagabond that at last came under the ban of royal edict.

The troubadours of France, particularly in Provence, were men of honor and often wealth. They celebrated remarkable events, heroic acts and carried news—often scandal—from castle to castle. The word "Troubadour" originally meant "inventor." They spoke the Romance-Latin of Southern France, and during the twelfth century rose to a high estate as poets, winning the acclaim of the great. Often they employed singers to repeat the verses in the summer that they wrote during the winter, and shared emoluments with them. Richard Coeur de Lion was a troubadour, and Folquet of Marseilles, son of a merchant of means, ultimately elevated himself to a bishopric.

Emma Calve, the grand opera singer, once had an ambition to restore the genius of the old Provencal language by endowing a theatre at her birthplace, Nimes, Provence.

In connection with her aims along this line, she once said of troubadours: "The contagious influence of their generous gaiety made them welcome in those courtly castles which too often were the abodes of semi-barbarous cruelty and rapine. Their gentle art, devoted to the cultivation of sentiment and blitheness, practiced at its best in no spirit of self-seeking, but with ideal and chivalrous aims could charm the most unguarded moments of private life. And so, in the course of a century or two, it was enabled to influence public opinion at a time when printed literature did not exist, nor the dramatic stage exert its power."

The minstrels, mummers and troubadours of those days all dressed after the fashion shown by the figures on the Christmas Seal for 1926.

Everywhere in Europe they took the place both of the theatre and library, and invariably made no charge for their services, but were given pay at the pleasure of their hosts, in such measure as he deemed them worthy.

So it is in keeping with the spirit of the Christmas seal, that its three troubadours should bring a message of health and happiness into the homes of twentieth century Americans, and ask no fee at all except that willingly given by those who receive them, according as the song they sing may relax the strings of heart and purse.

HUNGRY FOR THE GOSPEL

The hearts of men are hungry for the truth about God and salvation. Never before has the subject of personal religion been so generally the theme of conversation everywhere. Speak to the next man you meet on religion, and in all probability you will find an interested listener. Deep down in the human heart there is a conviction that we have sinned against God and need his power to save us. Strong and earnest preaching on the subject of sin and God's way of salvation must be the remedy. We need today men with the courage of John the Baptist, who cried out: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Christian Observer.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Possessing the Unsearchable Riches of Christ

By H. W. Koontz

(Closing Sermon of the Pennsylvania District Conference, at Berlin, October 8, 1926)

TEXT—Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, was this grace given, to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.—Ephesians 3:8.

Few men have possessed a greater desire to proclaim the riches of Christ than Paul. He had learned to know his Savior, and had tasted of these riches, and to him they were unsearchable. If the whole world would partake of the riches in Christ; the height, the depth, and the breadth of them would not be reached.

The great Apostle always possessed a deep, ever sustaining joy and peace in his Christian experience. Such a peace and joy abided with him throughout his many trials and tribulations. After receiving a severe beating with rods, and being placed in an inner prison in stocks Silas and Paul began to pray and sing hymns. His many sufferings were not only physical but he endured much mental agony. He tells us about them in his second epistle to the Corinthians. "Besides those things that are from without, there is that which presseth upon me daily, anxiety for all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is caused to stumble and I burn not?" After going through such a life of physical and mental agony, and at the end confined in the chilly and damp cell of a Roman prison waiting for martyrdom, we find his faith unwavering and there remains that same joy and peace that he always found in his Christian life. The secret of Paul's abiding joy and peace is quite simple; he had tasted of the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Many Christians do not experience sufficient happiness and peace from their religion to make them continually rejoice that they are now sons of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. A revival may bring a season of Christian joy, and then we are really glad that we are Christians. A Conference like the one we are now attending also brings to us a season of joy and peace; but there is a tendency for many Christians to have a spiritual relapse. The period of rejoicing passes about as quickly as it comes and being Christians again spells for many, drudgery. Church attendance again becomes more a duty than a desire; prayer meeting attendance is more work than a blessed privilege; Sunday school teaching takes so much time in preparation and teaching that it becomes a thing to be avoided if possible; personal work is now an utter impossibility; Bible reading loses its charm, and prayer is an empty mockery. Yet, I am sure we all want to get some value out of our Christianity, for otherwise Christianity becomes to us but a hollow form, something without power or value. If we will only go to Paul he will give us the secret of his abiding joy and peace. He was commissioned to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, and that means to us. If partaking of the riches of Christ gave to Paul such continual happiness that he was a Christian, certainly our tasting of them should give us the same joy and peace.

If we would possess the inheritance belonging to Christians as did Paul we should do at least three things; first, present ourselves to Christ; second, take Christ at his word; third, accept Christ's atoning work on the Cross as the complete propitiation for our sins.

We must first present ourselves to Christ. Paul writes to the Romans, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. And be not fashioned according to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." (Romans 12:1, 2). If we really desire to present ourselves to God, we must first be emptied of self. This means that we must empty ourselves of our desires for self-glory, personal-aggrandizement or anything else that will exalt self and give to God a subordinate place.

MONDAY

TEMPTATION—1 Cor. 10:12, 13.

"Every time that we yield to temptation
It is easier for us to do wrong;
Every time we resist temptation,
It is easier for us to be strong."

TUESDAY

WATCH AND PRAY—Matt. 26:36-41.

In seasons of distress and grief
My soul has often found relief,
And oft escaped the tempter's snare,
By thy return, sweet hour of prayer.

—W. W. Walford.

WEDNESDAY

TO GOD THROUGH CHRIST—John 14:6-10.

O thou, by whom we come to God,
The Life, the Truth, the Way,
The path of prayer thyself hast trod:
Lord, teach us how to pray!

—James Montgomery.

THURSDAY

PRAYER AND EFFORT—James 2:14-18.

If all the things came so easy, Bill, they wouldn't

FRIDAY

THY KINGDOM COME—Phil. 2:5-11.

Empires, temples, scepters, thrones—
May they all for God be won!
And, in every human heart,
Father, let thy kingdom come!

—John Page Hoppe.

SATURDAY

UNSELFISH PRAYER—Col. 1:3, 4, 9-12.

Scarcely have I asked in prayer
That which others might not share.

—Whittier.

SUNDAY

DAILY PROVISION—Matt. 6:11, 31-33.

"I thank thee, Lord, for strength of arm
To win my bread,
And that beyond my need is meat
For friend unfed.
I thank thee much for bread to live;
I thank thee more for bread to give."

(Prepared by G. S. B.)

We must also empty ourselves of self-righteousness. When we contemplate Christ and his absolute righteousness, and then contrast our own weak and sinful selves, we see that all the righteousness that is ours is imputed to us by the only Righteous One. We must empty ourselves of sin. We may live before the world a clean and moral life, but have concealed in the darkest crevices of our hearts in that God only recognizes. Loving and holding on to those secret sins makes it impossible for us to completely present ourselves to God. Have we taken this first step in presenting ourselves to God? Is the vessel empty? If it is, we are now ready for the second step. We are now ready to let Christ fill us with himself, so that we can say with Paul, "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me." When we are in Christ we will begin to partake of his unsearchable riches for we will then have the dynamic power to overcome evil. No one can be happy in having a religion that does not give to him the power to conquer sin. We will become, instead of negative Christians, positive Christians in that we shall be living examples to help others reach the Christian goal, in that we shall be a help rather than a hindrance in the great work God has for his children to do. No task for the Lord will be too big or too little; too hard or too easy for us to joyfully accept. He will do the leading and we will follow. When we have presented ourselves to God to gain the power to overcome sin, to be positive instead of negative Christians, and to do any task for God, we shall begin to taste of the unsearchable riches of Christ and our lives will be happier, and we will get a new joy and peace out of our Christianity.

The second thing that we must do is to take Christ at his word. We find it quite easy to accept the words of our friends; at par value. We will ask and take advice of them. But when we turn to Christ we depreciate his words and fail to take him at par value. Man fails and we continue to go to him; Christ never fails us but his words do not carry full weight and value.

To illustrate let me tell you of a trip through a mine. I want to go through this mine situated two hundred feet beneath the surface of the earth. I know it is a dangerous trip and especially so if I haven't a guide, so I procure one in whom I have implicit faith. We leave the sunlight and swiftly drop into the mine pit. We reach the bottom of the pit; the elevator ascends and we are alone, far beneath the surface of the earth. The light from our lamps dimly reveals the dark walls, supporting timbers, and low ceilings. Suddenly many doubts and fears come into my mind; suppose the mighty air circulating fan would stop, leaving us to suffocate; suppose our open lights would ignite escaping gas, or we would be caught in a mine "fall." I become somewhat fearful of following my guide through the mine. We have been in it hundreds of times before, knows every danger spot and reassures me that all is well. We begin our exploration of the place, and before I realize it my fears are gone and I find myself enjoying the extremely interesting things that he points out to me as we go from passage way to passage way. I had trusted my life to a failing mortal—one who could not know for a certainty whether all would be safe or not.

Now let us see if we have been trusting Christ as much as we would trust the mine guide. We felt our own inability to safely travel life's highway, so we accepted Christ as our guide. He promised to safely bring us through life, and to share with us the glories that God has prepared for those who belong to him. Yet we haven't taken him at his word. Instead of following him we are trying to work out our own salvation, after accepting Christ as a Personal Savior.

Christ as our guide through life made us the promise of Power, the power of the Holy Spirit. (Acts 1:8.) Christ, the Son of God, makes this promise many times, but we don't take him at his word. We refrain from speaking to that lost soul who lives next door because we don't have the ability to talk, or because we become nervous, forgetting that Christ has given us the offer of Power. He has made us the promise of answered prayer. (John 15:16). We read similar promises throughout God's word; we daily pray to him. Yet many of us do not even believe that the prayers will be answered. We don't take him at his word. He made us the promise of his second coming which might take place at any minute, and yet many of us do not believe that he will come as he promised and the way he promised, and sometimes go so far as to dismiss from our minds altogether the probability of his appearing, being deceived in believing that he is now here as much as he will ever be.

How can we be happy Christians if we don't hold him to his promises? By implicitly taking him as our guide we can partake more deeply of the Unsearchable Riches of Christ with the happy results that one finds in the life of the Apostle Paul.

The third thing we must do is to accept the atoning work of Christ on the Cross as the complete Propitiation for our sins. Before we were Christians we realized that we were sinners, and as sinners we were worthy only of death. We accepted Christ as our Personal Savior, and now we are spending our days trying our best to pile up sufficient good works to pay our entrance fees into heaven, all the time fearing that life may be cut short before we have done sufficient work to merit our admission. We must accept Christ's atoning work as complete. We cannot add anything to what he has already finished. Why should we not accept the Calvary plan of salvation, and as born again children of the Kingdom, children who are saved by the Blood of the Lamb, spend the remainder of our existence happily and joyfully working for our Lord? What a glad anticipation of tasks finished, and new ones appointed by the Master, is felt by the Christian who realizes this blessed truth.

This our Conference has given us unlimited spiritual uplift, and a far deeper realization of our Christian heritage than we ever had before. Let us guard this joy in our religion earnestly, and take back to our congregations the appeal to live more intensely the Christian life, to experience the Unsearchable Riches of Christ.

Masontown, Pennsylvania.

ON GROWING OLD

Don't grow old and dull in spirit. The best receipt for keeping young is to keep your interest as keen and alert at fifty, sixty, seventy, and to the end of your life as it is possible to keep it. Do not let life grow monotonous and narrow; there are world-wide interests for us all. Do not let your range of emotions grow less and less until you can neither be interested in nor sympathetic nor sensitive to the joys and sorrows of others. Keeness, zeal, enthusiasm—these are the yeast of life. I came across a splendid example of this lively interest in things only the other day. Volunteers were sought for a stage crowd in a fifteenth-century pageant play, and among those who offered themselves was a charming old cottage widow of seventy. "O," she said, "I shall just delight in it and in being dressed in the beautiful fashion of four hundred years ago! Fancy me in a wimple!"—Exchange.

LESSON LIGHTS

Conditions of the Times

In order to understand the life and work of Samuel, and especially his boyhood as described in this lesson, it is necessary to realize the moral, religious, and political conditions of the times.

1. It was toward the close of the period of the Judges, during which the people had been trained by rewards of obedience and the punishment of disobedience, by religious institutions and the love of God and righteousness in family life, and by the promises of God.

2. During these centuries the people were under a government called a Theocracy, that is a condition where God only is king; and while there were leaders and rulers there was no political unity except that of the laws and religion of God. There was little compulsory virtue. This was a state of things where true religious and moral life was especially needful for success.

3. Although little is said of it in the desultory stories of the Judges, yet from brief references in Joshua, Ruth, and Samuel, we are assured that there were religious influences among the people, and on the whole there was a real progress. The ark, the Tabernacle, and the central place of worship were at Shiloh, 18 or 20 miles north of Jerusalem. Hither the people came up to the great feasts, and at other times to worship and to sacrifice.

4. At the same time the people were without permanent leaders to enable them to withstand the moral and material inroads of the surrounding nations. If they had been true to their God and to the religious teachings of Moses, they might have gone on as they were. But many of them were going astray. Even Eli's sons were cheating those who made offerings in the Tabernacle, and were immoral in their lives. The Philistines were invading the country. It was time for a change.

5. The chosen people were approaching a crisis "second in importance only to the Exodus," and there was needed a leader second only to Moses, a counsellor to whom all could turn for advice "amid the wreck of the ancient institutions and the rise and growth of the new."

6. The Israelites needed precisely the two great institutions which Samuel was ordained to give them. The first was an order of prophets, through whom God could reveal his will to the people, and who would be the teachers and inspirers of the people. The second was a permanent organized government, and rulers with authority, leaders for defense against enemies, for the punishment of crimes, and the protection and prosperity of the good. Samuel was called of God in the way given in this lesson to become the first of the prophets and the leader who should prepare the people for the new sort of government. His training from the beginning was exactly in these lines.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Samuel's Call

The Hebrew word translated "child" in the text is applied in the Bible to an infant and also to a man of forty. Josephus says that Samuel had just completed his twelfth year when the word of the Lord came to him. If so, then he had reached the age that Jesus had when he dedicated himself to the Lord's business. Samuel helped Eli in the service of the temple, and seems to have been the special attendant of the aged man whose eyes had begun to grow dim.—Tarbell.

Continuous Growth of Character

The continuous growth of a character, from a child serving God, and to old age walking in the same path, is the great lesson which the story of Samuel teaches us. "The child is father of the man, and all his long days are 'bound each to each' by true

The Struggle

*Purge me, oh God,
With thy refining fires!
Nor heavy rest thy blame,
When flesh shrinks from the flame.*

*Sweep my soul clean
By cleansing winds!
Nor let me fret at storm and stress,
Whose purpose is to bless!*

*Give me a task too big,
Too hard for human hands.
Then I shall come at length
To lean on thee,
And saying, find my strength!*
—Wilbur Humphrey Fowler, religion. Pardon cleanses sin, and even turns the memory of it into an ally of holiness; but traces are left on character, and, at the best, years have been squandered which do not return. Samuel is the pattern of child religion and service. How beautifully his double obedience is expressed in the simple words! His service was "unto the Lord" and it was "before Eli"; that is to say, he learned his work from the old man, and in obeying him he served God. The child's religion is largely obedience to human guides, and he serves God best by doing what he is bid—a lesson needed in our days by both parents and children.—Dr. Alexander MacLaren.

Home Influence

It has been said that next to Moses, Samuel was the greatest man of the Old Testament. Like Moses he had a splendid parentage and the finest of home influence. "He was the child of his mother's prayers", and only God can know how much of what he became he owed to the silent but incomparable influence of that mother's love and prayer. "For weal or woe a mother's influence is infinitely great. We are not surprised to learn that Byron's mother was proud, ill-tempered, and violent; or that Nero's mother was a murderess. On the other hand, we need not be astonished that Sir Walter Scott's was a lover of poetry; or those of Wesley, Augustine, Chrysostom, Basil, and others, remarkable for their intelligence and goodness. Like mother, like child. This is what led the good Lord Shaftesbury to exclaim, 'Give me a generation of Christian mothers and I will undertake to change the face of society in twelve months.'

Bring Children to Christ and the Church

"Bring your little children to the Savior. Place them in his arms. Devote them to his service. Born in his camp, let them wear from the first his colors. Taking advantage of timely opportunities, and with all tenderness of spirit, seek to endear them to the Friend of sinners, the Good Shepherd of the lambs, the loving Guardian of the little children. And not only teach them, but govern them. And in order to govern them, govern yourselves."—James Hamilton.

"Children can begin very early to minister to the Lord. They do this when they live obediently and sweetly at home, doing the tasks that are there given to them. In most churches there are mission bands where boys and girls may learn to do things for Christ. They can minister also by bringing to the Sunday school other children who do not attend. Then even the least and most commonplace kindnesses done in Christ's name are ministries, just as beautiful and as acceptable as the largest and finest things that great people can do."—J. R. Miller.

The Church and the Neglected Child

The fact we have to face is that there is a vast mass of adolescent life in our midst, fast coming to maturity, which is wholly ignorant of the profound religious faiths which created American citizenship, very imperfectly impregnated with moral ideals, and wholly unfitted to face the extraordinary temptations to lawlessness and moral laxity which characterize our times. Girl-bandits, boy murderers, hold-ups conducted by youths in their teens—these are familiar figures and stories in the daily record of the national life. How are we to deal with this great and growing peril? Obviously we must begin with the child. It is preventive rather than redemptive wisdom which is needed. It is a great thing to bring prodigals back from the far country, but it is a greater thing to protect a child from its evil lure, and to teach him that true happiness is found only in the Father's house of love and obedience. "Suffer the little children to come unto me" is the wise word of Jesus. He who spoke that word knew its meaning in his own experience, for was not his first public appearance in the temple at Jerusalem, where he astonished all his hearers by the spiritual wisdom of his words? I do honestly believe that the supreme task of the church today is the religious instruction of the child. And this task is made all the more imperative by the general lack of religious instruction in the home, by the absence of definite religious instruction in the schools, by the enormous growth of books perilous to the young, by the careless cynicism of much of our popular journalism, and by the debasement of many of our forms of popular amusement.—Dr. J. W. Dawson.

Plans for the Committees

Something Simple and just a Little Different. Try these Plans

By Rev. Robert P. Anderson in Junior C. E. World

Letters Abroad; For Missionary Committees

Interest in missions, with the personal touch, will be increased by writing letters to the mission field. One way to do this is to find from your denominational board where an orphan may be supported on the mission field, and what this will cost. The society should then undertake the support of that orphan and write at least two, perhaps more, letters a year to her or him. The missionaries will read your letters to the orphans named, and will write you replies. These replies should be read in the meeting. If the expense of supporting an orphan is too great, find from your missionary board what it will cost to give an orphan an outfit of new clothes, and supply that amount of money. In this case, too, letters will be written and received.

Christian Endeavor Education; For Prayer-Meeting Committees

The prayer meeting committee may arrange for a ten-minute period in the meeting every week for six weeks or two months "for instruction in Christian Endeavor." A member of the Senior society should be the instructor, or some other person who understands Christian Endeavor principles and methods. "The Junior Text-Book" may be used (sold by the United Society of Christian Endeavor for 50 cents, paper cover; 75 cents, cloth), and each night a quiz should be held on the material gone over the previous week. Take up the duties of the officers and committees, and suggest plans for work. Junior Efficiency Leaflets explaining the work of officers and committees may be got at about a cent apiece from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Massachusetts. The members may take these home and study them. These leaflets are the chapters in "The Junior Text-Book" printed separately. The Secretary's List; For Junior Secretaries

The Junior secretary should keep a card catalogue of the members' names and addresses. Start such a catalogue with the help of the superintendent or the secretary of the Senior society. The card for each name should contain the member's name and address, date of birth, date when he joined the society, the offices he has held, date when he leads a meeting. The cards are easily kept in alphabetical order, and when a member leaves town his new address is added to the card, and also the name of the new society he joins; and the card is then removed from the active list to a group called "former members." A separate set of cards with the names and addresses of members only may be made out for use in calling the roll. These cards can be arranged easily in any desired order for the purpose of the roll-call.

Say It with Flowers; For Social Committees

At different times during the year the flower committee may honor the members of the various committees by giving to them a small posy. One month it may be the lookout committee that is to be honored. The flower committee will have ready a posy for each of the members of the lookout committee, and in presenting the flowers may tell of some of the things that the lookout committee has done. Another month the social committee may be honored in the same way, and so on with the different committees. The pianist should not be forgotten.

A Birthday Cake; For Social Committees

At your society's birthday social have a birthday cake, and sell the slices, the money to go to the society treasury. The ladies of the church may donate the cake. The Juniors will know beforehand that slices may be bought, and will come prepared to buy them. The social should honor all Juniors who have birthdays in the same month as the society. For instance, give them special Christian Endeavor rosettes. Other features of the social may be shadow pictures, made in this way: A white sheet is hung in a doorway. The society is divided into two sides. One side remains in the room; the other goes into the other room, behind the sheet. There the members put on hats, scarfs, and so on, belonging to one another, and they pose in profile behind the screen. Their room will be brightly lighted, and the other room in darkness, so that the shadow pictures may show on the screen. The members outside will try to guess the names of the persons whose shadows are thrown on the screen. Then positions are

Paul, Who Carried the Torch to Other Lands. Acts 16:9, 10

Once upon a time, there lived a man who had all the qualities necessary to make a very bright torch, but instead of burning his torch for Jesus, he helped the enemies of Jesus. This man was Paul. Do you remember the story of Paul? For several years after Jesus, the Light of the World, had gone to his home up in heaven, Paul worked very hard with the people who did not want Jesus to rule over men's hearts. But Paul did not know that he was doing wrong for he did not understand that Jesus was really the Light of the World.

One day as Paul was going along a big highway, he was very much surprised. A great light shone all around him and suddenly he heard the voice of Jesus asking him, "Why are you persecuting me?"

Then Paul listened and was told that he should go to a certain place and there he should talk to one of the followers of Jesus. Paul went and talked to Jesus' follower. Soon he understood that Jesus was the Savior of the world. How unhappy he must have felt when he realized that Jesus loved everyone and that he loved people so well that he had given his life for them. Just think of having persecuted and been unkind to someone and then finding out that the person loved you and had been trying to help you. Well that is the way that Paul must have felt.

Immediately, he started burning his torch for Jesus. And even though Paul had worked against Jesus for several years, he soon was doing big things for Jesus. There were so many things that Paul did and he had so many good qualities that his torch grew brighter and brighter.

One time after Paul had preached many years and had taught many people to believe in Jesus, he was taken prisoner because some people did not want him to preach. Isn't that terrible? He was put in prison just because he was telling people about Jesus, the Light of the World. Then he asked if he might be tried in Rome. Rome was a very great city and Paul wanted to go there to tell more people about the Savior. It was decided that he should be allowed to go. Now in order to get to Rome he had to ride on a ship and it was winter time. Riding on ships in those days was much more dangerous than it is today but Paul was not afraid for he knew that God would take care of him.

One time while they were on their trip, the ship was in a safe harbor and Paul realized that there was to be a storm soon so he told the captain of the ship that he did not think that they ought to set sail again until the storm was over. That did not suit the captain, he thought that he knew more than Paul did, and he did not realize that God was guiding Paul. And so they sailed.

Soon a storm did come up. The wind blew and the ship tossed first one way then another. The men could not even guide the ship and so they just let it blow about any way that it wanted to go. My but those people were scared. They thought that they would never see land and be able to put their feet on the ground where they could walk about with tumbling first one way and then another.

Finally, everyone gave up all hope. They said, "There is no hope for us. We cannot possibly be saved."

Then Paul arose. Remember that Paul was only a prisoner on the ship. However, Paul showed his qualities of courage and faith in God for he said, "God is going to take care of us. Not a man on this ship is to lose his life. We will lose the ship but we will all be safe."

Then Paul told the sailors what they were to do and sure enough things happened just like Paul promised. The ship was wrecked next morning but it was near a shore and all of the people reached the land and not one lost his life.

Paul with God's help saved a whole shipload of people. And so the torch of Paul shone ever brighter and brighter for Jesus.

Under the Southern Cross

Having just returned from a visit of sixteen days among several churches I will report a little about it. On October 11, accompanied by Mrs. Yoder and Robert, Sister Nielsen and Brother Zeche, I first visited Alejandro. Here we found Brother Reina and family contented with the progress of their work, as new people are becoming interested. There are four lay workers here who are able to lead meetings and preach when needed and this enables Brother Reina to give part of his time to other places also.

After a brief visit here we drove on to Gallini. Here several members from Rio Cuarto now live and a prominent family is sympathetic with our work. We formerly had a Sunday school in this place and a day school, conducted by Brother Barrio, but he was not faithful and we could not continue. Now Brother Reina is arranging to begin regular meetings again. However, there is only one school in this town and the teacher receives weekly visits from the priest in Carlota, and any child who comes to our meetings or receives our literature is mistreated in school, so that they fear to come. This is just a sample of the spirit of the Catholic church wherever it has a chance to manifest itself.

From Gallini the rest drove back to Rio Cuarto while I, with Brother Reina, went on to Carlota, where I preached one evening to a good crowd, for that place. There are several candidates for baptism here whom I hope to baptize when I return. Brother Reina preaches regularly in Carlota on Monday evenings.

From Carlota I went on to Buenos Aires and preached three evenings, twice in our own rented hall and once in the mission conducted by Brother Robles in Liniers. A cold rain interfered somewhat but there was encouraging interest and it is my conviction that we should as soon as possible send one of our strongest men to help in the work in Buenos Aires.

From Buenos Aires I went two hundred miles to the southwest to the Mennonite mission in Pehuajo, with Brother T. K. Hershey in charge. Here I preached twice a day for ten days—once on prophecies and once an evangelistic sermon. Great preparation had been made and the beautiful new church was filled every night with about 200 in attendance. As there are only 71 members there was a good number to try to convert, and fifty-two in all made public profession of conversion. These will be organized in small groups and cared for by the workers in preparation for baptism. One of the encouraging features of the work here is that people of the upper social class are beginning to be converted, although it costs them a struggle, for there is a caste system of wealth in this country which forms a barrier almost as great as the caste system in India.

One day we drove eighty miles over to Tres Lomas where a nice church and parsonage is being erected. The town is only a few years old but already has over 3000 inhabitants, and as there is no priest or Roman church to oppose the truth, the work of the Gospel is going forward very rapidly. It was also my privilege to meet nearly all the Mennonite workers from their other mission stations. To some of them I am distantly related. Altogether my visit was very pleasant and profitable and I returned to our work in Rio Cuarto with new enthusiasm. We are having special meetings this week to prepare a number of candidates for baptism, but it is rather difficult, as I am at the same time fighting an attack of the gripe.

A New Word for "Christian"

By Donald A. Lowrie, Y. M. C. A. Student Secretary at Prague

A new word has appeared in the languages of Central Europe, a word with a significance which makes some of those who helped introduce it wonder if they can live up to the standard it sets. The long familiar initials of the Young Men's Christian Association have become a word, written simply "Ymca and pronounced "Imka." And flattering as it may be to have the name of your favorite organization thus turned into a household term, there are other sides to the matter.

For instance there is the student group in the Academy of Mines, in a town near Prague. For several years they have chafed under their connection with one of the local youth movements, their chief complaint being that the program of this organization was not distinctly enough Christian. Now the word "Christian" has different meanings in different places. For most people in Central Europe it is synonymous with clericalism and with the various unpopular forms of its expression in the Catholic church.

Calling themselves simply a student Christian movement, the Academy of Mines group felt, would be impractical. How could they find a name for their organization which would indicate its Christian purpose and also avoid the prejudice crusted about the word? The solution of their dilemma was found, and recently some of us went to Pribram and attended the official inauguration of the Student Ymca.

Not the Student Y M C A, but the Student Ymca. As one student leader expressed it: "Everyone knows the Ymca stands for Christianity and a Christian program, but they also know what kind of Christianity that means. We shall not have to spend half our time explaining that we are not Christian, in the sense that we make pilgrimages to the holy mountain." His reference was to a famous shrine in Pribram, visited each year by thousands of peasant pilgrims from all over the Republic.

Later twelve leaders of this student group met for an all-day study of their new situation and the year's program of work. Their discussions gave us pause. Take for example the statements of Marianovic, a junior, and one of two delegates from his school to the International Leaders' Conference held in Bulgaria last spring:

"From now on we have to be a new kind of men. We have to live our principles. We must study what the Ymca expects from every man and carry that out in every phase of our living. One thing we need is for

In my absence the work here was well cared for by Sister Nielsen and Brother Albert of the Plymouth Brethren, who did the preaching. He is cashier of the Provincial Bank but has fifteen years' practice in preaching. The people like him very much and his good wife is also a very good helper in our work. We have to have Brother Hershey and also the Bible Coach with us for our evangelistic campaign in January. Help us with your prayers.

C. F. YODER.

every man to get used to the Bible, to know what it says. We must get rid of the idea that it is a book only for a chosen few. Everyone of us ought to study it and use it in every-day life. The Ymca insists on this for every active member . . . Some people think the Ymca is anti-Catholic. It has no time to be anti anything. We invite every student here, Catholic, Protestant, or Orthodox, to come in and work for something."

Some people at home have been concerned about the eliminating of the periods from Y M C A. What significance could there be in such a title as Ymca? The students have given the answer.

This ought to be suggestive to Christian professors in America. Are we by our lives winning favor for the name "Christian" and filling it with meaning, or are we causing men to turn from it by the emptiness and unguineness of our professions? Do we bring discredit upon the name of Christ?

Some Great Prayers

"O Lord give me souls or take away my soul."—George Whitefield, the famous English Evangelist.

"Here let me burn out for God."—Henry Martyn, missionary, kneeling on India's coral strands.

"Lord, to thee I dedicate myself. O accept of me and let me be thine for ever. Lord, I desire nothing else, I desire nothing more."—David Brainerd, missionary to the North American Indians 1718-1747.

"Give me what thou wilt, and how much thou wilt, and when thou wilt. Set me where thou wilt and deal with me in all things just as thou wilt."—Thomas a Kempis, 1379-1471.

"Use me then, my Savior, for whatever purpose and in whatever way thou mayest require. Here is my poor heart, an empty vessel; fill it with thy grace."—Dwight L. Moody.

"Do thou, my God, do thou, God, stand by me against all the world's wisdom and reason. Oh, do it. Thou must do it. Stand by me, thou true eternal God."—Martin Luther, when called before the Diet of Worms.

"O Lord, send me to the darkest spot on earth."—John Kenneth McKenzie. Prayer as a young missionary candidate.

"Lord, save Fiji, save Fiji. Save these people. O Lord, have mercy upon Fiji; Save Fiji."—John Hunt, missionary to the Fiji Islands, when dying.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Martinsburg and McKee Churches Give $2235.00 to Endowment

These two churches are served by one pastor and are about twelve miles apart. The pastor, Brother James S. Cook, an Ashland student, lives at Martinsburg where the parsonage is located.

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania

Th's is a characteristic Pennsylvania town of about 2500, made up of a fine class of people and is about 35 miles from Altoona. The church here is a frame structure and a comfortable parsonage is located next to it. They are considering plans on enlarging and improving the present church building. I found the people here deeply interested in the college and willing to give their aid to the campaign. Two families who have no dependent heirs told me they expected to leave their property to the interests of the church when their earthly work was done AND THIS IS RIGHT. WHY SHOULD CHRISTIANS LEAVE THE SAVINGS OF THEIR LIFE TIME TO THOSE WHO HAVE PLENTY AND WHO HAVE NO INTERESTS IN THE LIFE TIME TO THOSE WHO HAVE PLENTY AND WHO HAVE NO INTERESTS IN THE KINGDOM, TO QUARREL AND FIGHT OVER? "HONOR THE LORD WITH THY SUBSTANCE" IS AS MUCH OF A COMMAND AS TO BE BAPTIZED.

This church has a small membership, but is doing a big work. Brother Cook and his wife are held in high esteem by both churches and they are ardent supporters of our school and did all they could to help me. The total gift of this church was $1420.67.

McKee Church

The McKee church is a country church w'th several little hamlets to draw from. They have a good Sunday school and many young people. Unfortunately the church is located off the main highway on a bad road, which is a handicap. Both nights I was here we were rained out, but met most of the members in their homes. This field has a future and our church is doing a real service in the community. Many of the people work in Hollidaysburg and Altoona and some very nice homes are being built in the vicinity, with every indication that more will be erected in the future. This is the home church of Prof. DeLozier and I found people of that name very numerous in this locality. Their total gift was $815.00.

REPORT FROM UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Hello Brethren! This is Station F. B. C., Uniontown, Pennsylvania, broadcasting through the "Brethren Evangelist." We have been doing some things over here and we thought perhaps the folks over the brotherhood would like to listen in.

A little more than a year ago we lost our pastor, Rev. Belote, who resigned his work here and took charge of the Second Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Things looked mighty blue for the Uniontown church. Our building was in ruins. Our parsonage had been sold and part of the receipts had gone to pay the balance on the improvements placed on the church building which had been completed only a short time before its total destruction. With these conditions facing us and our pastor gone it looked as if what had once been a flourishing Brethren church would pass into history and all that would be left of it a melancholy memory. But we continued our services in the Craig school building, where we had been worshipping for some time. We succeeded in getting Rev. Byers from Louisville, Ohio, to come in on Sunday and preach for us and in November we extended him a call to become our pastor. He accepted the call and moved his family here in December. Needless to say he was handicapped in his work, living almost two miles from the church, or on the other side of the city, and teaching school three days a week, and then to make matters still worse, his faithful wife became ill and was compelled to undergo an operation at the City Hospital. But the Brethren rallied to his support and during the year were enabled by the help of God to do more than we had even hoped for.

The first thing we had to do was to get a parsonage and stop the $60.00 a month rent which we had been paying and which was getting to be a financial drain upon the church. In July the opportunity came our way and we purchased the Weaver property on the corner of Highland Avenue and Union Street Ext., for $13,000.00. This was $5,000.00 less than we had been asked for the same property six months before and we feel that we were fortunate in being able to get the location.

The new site is just one square from the old one and is considered by all who have seen it as being the most beautiful spot in the city. The former pastor, Rev. Belote, has also placed his stamp of approval on same by telling Father at Conference this year, that it was the best thing the church ever did. The property consists of two lots and two houses. It fronts 80 feet on Highland Avenue and 140 feet on Union St. Ext. Both streets are paved and all improvements are in. It is open from front, side and rear. The house fronting on Highland Avenue is large and is being used for a parsonage. It has every convenience and is finished in solid oak. The one on the rear is a four room house facing on Union Street, and rents for $20.00 per month.

Our finance is not in the shape we would like it to be in, but with what we have paid and what is in the bank today along with the old church lot will leave only about two or perhaps three thousand dollars to be raised in the next two or three years. While we hope to do this, yet it is not compulsory, so we are at that, on easy street, so to speak. As stated before, we are nicely located in the Craig school building. But it is not a church and we do not hope to stay there. With the pledges we already have and what we receive in gifts, etc., in the meantime, we hope to be able to begin work on our new building by the spring of 1928. We received promise of another nice pledge this week from some of our Mt. Pleasant Brethren. We are hoping and praying that we may succeed, and as the women say: "Prayer releases power" and they know, and they are helping to put this "over the top."

The last quarter has been most marked in the way of increase. Every auxiliary of the church has shown an increase in numbers and in spirit. The Christian Endeavor is pushing on with renewed interest and are planning on bringing back from the conventions some of the county Banners. They are working hard on all their goals and if they don't succeed it won't be because the President, Mr. Umbel, is not on the job. The Superintendent of the Quiet Hour, Mr. Solomon, informed us at the last meeting that he had about 95 per cent of the members signed up and that he would have the rest before we get together again.

A large delegation of the W. M. S. greeted our National Secretary, Miss Leedy, at the meeting on last week. Twenty-seven were present, there were five visitors. Miss Leedy expressed herself as being "delighted" at the splendid Society and at the work they have done, and last but not least, their program for the year just ahead.

As to the Sunday school, every department has increased and reported new members in the last month including the Cradle Roll and Home Departments. Every class has increased from the beginners to the grandfathers and grandmothers. This fact was brought to view at the board meeting Monday evening. Both Sundays in this month show an attendance above the total enrollment, and last Sunday the attendance exceeded the total enrollment by 25 percent. There were thirty-seven visitors present and the happy thought about this is that by next Sunday these, or most of them at least, will become members of the Sunday school. Last Sunday was the high water mark of our Sunday school sessions and tied our "Rally Day" attendance.

The same spirit is also manifest in the church. The first Sunday in this month our pastor spoke at the County Home. A fine delegation of the Brethren united with them in the service and needless to say the small chapel was filled to its capacity. Our church is also being recognized among the other churches of the city, this is proven by the fact that our pastor's sermon on the same Sunday morning was published in the "Morning Herald" and also the afternoon edition of the "Genius" on Monday.

The spiritual interest in the church is also increasing. This is evidenced by the fact that without any apparent evangelistic effort we have received into membership in the last month sixteen members. These came in during our regular church services and the three evenings we had service prior to our Communion on last Sunday evening. Our pastor also informs me that he has several more to receive baptism in the near future which will put it over the twenty mark.

Our Pre-Communion services were conducted on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings. Rev. Koontz of Masontown, spoke on Thursday evening, and Rev. Benshoff of Berlin, was the speaker on Friday evening.

In addition to the above mentioned as uniting with the church, we have also a family which moved here from Windber. While these folks are not of our faith exactly, they have united with us as associate members at present. They are also tithers and have volunteered to divide their tithe and give half back home and half to our local work. Thank God for these good folks.

On last Sunday morning we had the largest audience we have had at any time. The school auditorium was comfortably filled. The sermon of the morning was on the Triple Ordinance of our Communion service and needless to say, our pastor defended the faith "Once delivered to the saints" in a worthy manner. In the evening we had our communion service and this also exceeded our expectations, for which we wish to praise God.

At the last business meeting of the church, our pastor was unanimously called for another year and is already planning his program for the year's work which we hope will be a good one.

As the prophet of old has said: "The people have a mind to work," and as a result we are moving forward. Pray for the Uniontown work that it may continue to grow in the name of Jesus and that our visions and dreams of a new, bigger and better Uniontown church may soon be realized.

CHAS. THOMPSON, Clerk.

FOSTORIA, OHIO

After four years of patient and strenuous effort we closed our work with the Brethren church of Columbus, Ohio, on the Sunday preceding our General Conference. As we review our labors now we realize that mistakes were made, but God was with us and blessed our efforts and we rejoice in the thought that we labored not in vain. Many souls were born into the Kingdom during those four years and the church was edified through our feeble administration. Much we would like to have accomplished that we seemed unable to accomplish, but by the help of the Lord we achieved some things that were worth while and for which we praise his name. Our work was brought to a very pleasing and joyful close by a goodly attendance at the closing services and the addition of five to the church. Rev. R. E. Gotchall, his wife and two daughters came by letter from the Church of the Brethren. They had located in Columbus, having come from Indiana, and there being no church of their denomination in Columbus, they decided to place their membership with the Brethren. Another, a girl from our Sunday school, publicly accepted Christ in the closing service and I baptized her and received her into the church early Monday morning before leaving for Conference. This gave a fine climax to our work in Columbus, for which we thank God. Brother Gotschall and his family were heartily welcomed in the church and found an immediate opportunity to use their gifts for the glory of God. Upon the request of the church and the Ohio Mission Board Brother Gotschall carried forward the preaching services so that there was not the least break, which service he is very capable of doing. He is an interesting and forceful preacher and has a very pleasing personality. I consider him a very valuable addition to the ministerial force of the Brethren church. He has had several years of experience and has been very successful both as a pastor and as an evangelist. I feel sure that if the Columbus Brethren will cooperate with him he will be able, by God's help, to lead them forward to splendid achievements in the Lord. I am glad to turn the work over to such a worthy successor and pray God's richest blessings upon the church and its pastor in Columbus.

After the General Conference we took up our work in Fostoria where we had been called by the small group of Brethren in this place. Ever since the successful revival effort in which I was engaged with these people last February, when fifteen souls were converted and added to the church, they had urged me to take pastoral charge of the work. At first this seemed impossible, for the membership is small and very weak financially, so that they are unable to give adequate support to a pastor, but they kept praying and urging and God kept leading and directing until he clearly revealed that it was his will that I should respond to the call trusting him to carry us through. So, I submitted, and so, we are here. Some, perhaps, who do not understand, will say that I am a fool, but I am willing to be called a fool for Christ's sake. The Mission Board has graciously consented to postpone indefinitely the sale of the property and give us a chance. We have courageously launched out upon a "no debt" policy. God has very clearly manifested his presence with us and his favor upon us. Although we have attempted no special revival effort as yet, four souls have been converted. One was a young man upon his deathbed, who was too feeble to be baptized, but who gave the very clearest evidence of conversion. The other three have been baptized and received into the church. Others seem almost ready to heed the call of God. The attendance at our services is not large, but gradually the interest is increasing and confidence is being renewed and we are hopeful that much good may soon be accomplished. We are not boasting of what we have done nor of what we expect to do, but simply doing with our might what our hands find to do and rejoicing in the Lord when he crowns our efforts with success.

Soon after we were located in our new home, quite a number of these good and faithful brethren and sisters assembled themselves in our home one evening to demonstrate their appreciation of our coming among them and to extend to us a hearty welcome. Together with their good cheer and many expressions of appreciation they brought with them gifts of good things to eat which helped to supply our physical needs for some time. For these practical tokens of appreciation and good will and the friendliness and brotherly love that prompted the same we were truly grateful and hope to be always worthy. It is a joy to serve where your efforts are appreciated.

This is in some respects a hard field. Of one thing I am quite certain, that no fellow minister is casting envious glances toward me now. But every field has its hardships, if not in one way, then in another. The devil will not have it otherwise if he can help it. We know that many are wondering and waiting to see what will happen in Fostoria. We urge that doubts be dispelled as far as possible and that earnest prayer be offered everywhere for this work of the Lord.

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

Since last writing you we have had several little seasons of refreshing incidents, if they may be so simply named.

The one thing which certainly was not an "incident" was a baptismal scene, a scene not as common as in Apostolic days, for indeed people are not crying out these days, "What must I do to be saved?" We do not baptize until at least some tarrying and instruction has been given, so that in this particular instance we felt that the applicants were not entering into a covenant of which they knew nothing. One was a produce of our school, who might not otherwise have been reached. The other was a Sunday school girl.

In October we had the pleasure of presenting the work personally to Brother Freeman Ankrum, a member of the Home

Board who paid his first visit to this section of the brotherhood. As voiced in his article, he found that this field could not be understood adequately except by personal observation and experience.

Brother and Sister M. D. Early, new workers at Riverside, paid us their first visit November 7, the occasion of our fall love feast: Brother Early brought us the Sunday morning message, accompanied the writer afoot to Napfor and return in the P. M., and assisted in the evening services, after which, by an extremely swift movement of the lower extremities and holding of an L. & N. "night express" for a fraction of a moment, they made their return trip, reaching home about 10 P. M., in order to take care of their work on Monday morning. Few will appreciate what this trip means after night in bad weather.

The last bit of refreshing (and it was a real refreshing) was the presence of Brother Sickie. Having no electricity here in Krypton, he could give only his lecture the first night, but the second night we (including several of the Krypton folks) went to Napfor where, in the show house (where Sunday school is held each Sunday), his pictures were shown to a large and appreciative audience. Brother Sickie had the pleasurable experience of riding a jolting, swaying, noisy, halting mine motor a part of this distance.

One matter which we had aimed to mention in our last letter, but which was overlooked, was a trip our Krypton and Napfor Endeavorers made to Wootons Creek, about 20 miles from here—10 miles railroad and 10 miles wagon road (so-called) over two mountains. Now, away over these rocks and rills, so far from lines of communication is a mission work, a community center, with splend'd community house, hospital and other buildings, which makes the eyes smart, considering all things. It is one of the many dozen enterprises of the Presbyterian church. The occasion of our presence was a district Christian Endeavor Convention, and despite the out-of-the-way place, an excellent representation was gathered together from the several mountain counties affected.

This calls to our attention the subject often suggested: How does the Brethren efforts compare with those of our friends of the Presbyterian faith, upon a pro rata basis? In their year book, on a map, showing all their "Southern Mountaineer" work, there are shown over 200 centers of work. One hundred and ninety-two workers are named, but it is evident this does not include all who are on the field under Presbyterian support, for we know of some workers whose names, for some reason, do not appear in this booklet. Their membership will run, in round figures, about eighty times greater than ours, and taking all things into consideration we are undertaking no greater efforts than they. Furthermore, this denomination is doing an extensive work amongst the foreigners in America, the American Indian, the Negro in America, lumber camps, Mormons, besides an enormous foreign mission program.

May we not become fearful that we do more than our share, but rather take the attitude which we desire to see in our domestic hired servants—to want to do a little more than is actually required of us.

In closing, will say the school work at this place is growing nicely, and some of the long-time closed mines are opening, all of which is an encouraging feature. We are also glad to report that the brotherhood is showing excellent interest in this its child, by various tokens in divers manners, from many points of the compass. But, above everything else, Brethren, pray for us that we might faithfully hold up the risen Redeemer, the only hope of the lost.

FRED V. KINZIE.

The way of peace is the way of truth. Truthfulness is even more important than peacefulness. Indeed, lying is the mother of violence. A truthful man cannot long remain violent. He will perceive in the course of his search that there is no need to be violent, and he will further discover that so long as there is the slightest trace of violence in him he will fail to find the truth.—Mahatmi Gandhi.

GLOVER GAP, WEST VIRGINIA

Once more back to Glover Gap with my dear friend the Brethren Evangelist making its first visit, and I have read it through.

This round trip across the continent was the most wonderful trip of my life and every day there was something to praise the Lord for and everywhere in the house of mourning I could still praise him that I was permitted to be there and with my presence comfort the bereaved.

One strong impression I got with a surprise was the universal expectation of the immediate coming of our Lord among the Christians of California, more than here in the East. At Long Beach it seemed every one was on eager suspense as the days come and he does not appear. The great crowds that come to hear Brother Bauman, show how interested people are in that, to some, an unknown theme.

Along with all our joys and happiness come disappointments and one of these was missing Brother Nielsen whom I had known for more than 40 years, yet hoped to meet him.

I spent one Sunday in Bakersfield and was attracted to a tabernacle with this sign, "The Whole Gospel Tabernacle," so I went in and enjoyed it to the limit during the study period. In the absence of the regular teacher I taught the class which I found larger than many congregations back here. In this tabernacle was discussion, praise, prayer, tongues, anointing, preaching, teaching, etc., etc.

If any one in the brotherhood doubts the substantial status of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it would pay them to attend a National Convention once and be forever convinced of its great strength and powerful speakers.

How good once more to read the Evangelist and I believe firmly if we could find some way to get Brethren to read their own church literature we would forever solve the problem of losing our members. One is appalled at the number of Brethren scattered among other denominations and yet in some places the name Brethren is as strange as sinergophobia.

I am thankful and praying for the greatest Thank Offering.

MARY A. SNYDER.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

We are tardy with the report from Roanoke, Virginia, but not because there isn't anything worthy of being reported. Since our last report every organization connected with the church as well as the church itself has made some progressive steps, some of which we expect to be far-reaching. At the present time every organization seems to be intensely interested in our Building Fund.

Despite the fact that a faithful few bear the financial burdens, and the pastor is being paid more than ever before in the history of the church, every worthy cause has received a liberal response from Roanoke. Since the last report a number of repairs have been made on the parsonage and church, both buildings have been painted on the outside and all woodwork in the church has been shellacked or varnished.

In recent weeks we have had in our pulpit Dr. E. A. Rowsey of Toledo; Mrs. Hortense Ropp, well known lecturer; Brother Clarence Sickel, our returned missionary; The Billy Sunday Men's Club of Roanoke; and Brother A. L. Lynn of Pittsburgh. We appreciate the inspiration these friends brought. Brother Lynn in addition to filling the pulpit on a Sunday, made a personal sacrifice and cut short a visit with his parents in order to bring a revival preparatory sermon during the week preceding our fall revival.

Our fall revival was conducted for three weeks in October under the leadership of Brother B. F. Owen, pastor of Williamstown and Glenford, Ohio. As Song Director we had Rev. I. M. Ellis, Director of the Glee Club at Roanoke College. Much preparatory work was done preceding the meeting and the workers were anticipating a great revival. We had heard some good things about Owen, but his oratory and fearlessness went beyond our fondest expectations. Hardly had the first service closed before many were enthusiastically predicting the greatest revival in the history of Roanoke. Brother Owen was fearless in voicing his convictions and in pointing out and condemning sin. In addition to the regular services of the campaign he spoke at a number of noon-day shop meetings. He was tireless in visitation upon inactive members and non-church persons. He seemed happiest when on the go all the time. A man of less physical vigor would have broken down long before the end of the meeting.

From the viewpoint of visible results the meetings might not be classed as a big success. But the success of this meeting cannot be judged by visible results. The meetings were a success if for no other reason than that they put lasting enthusiasm, inspiration and encouragement into the hearts of the membership here. The visible results of the meeting were many reconsecrations and two confessions, one of whom has been received into the church by baptism. This makes a total of six received into the church since our last report. Two other persons baptized a few years ago but never enrolled as members have been enrolled thus making a total gain in membership of eight since our last report.

Recently the writer visited and tried to encourage the churches at Buena Vista, Garden City and Mt. Airy, North Carolina. Have also visited Radford, Virginia, in the interest of the mission board.

The Roanoke work has some discouraging features about it, but I firmly believe there is a large future ahead of the Brethren here. We are hoping, and praying and planning for that future. As I wrote in the beginning of my first year here, I will write again in the early part of my second year: "The greatest need of the church here is a new building." Personally I do not believe that the church here can expect to do really effective work until we have a new plant. Many of our members are getting a vision of what the Lord would have them do in this regard and I hope to have a more definite report of a building program when I write again. We ask for the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of the work here.

A Wheelright Contest; For Lookout Committees

A wheelright is a man that makes wheels. In this contest the society is divided into two sides, and each side is expected to make a wheel. In this way: Get two large sheets of paper, one sheet for each side. On each sheet draw a large circle to represent the rim of a wheel. Now draw in the hub in the center, and outline the spokes. Have more spokes than there are Juniors on the side. In the meeting, when a Junior is present, his name is written or printed on one of the spokes. If he is absent one night, one letter of his name is erased. If he is present the next night, or another night, the erased letter is replaced. When a Junior brings a visitor, the visitor's name is also written on one of the empty spokes. (If the society is large, and there is not room on the chart for enough spokes to go around, a separate chart for each side may be used for visitors). Ten points are counted for every spoke with a member's name on it. Twenty points are counted for every spoke with a visitor's name on it. Five points are deducted for every erased letter. Five points are deducted for every letter erased from a visitor's name, too. This contest will stimulate attendance, both of members and visitors; and, if desired, the losing side may give a social to the winners.

The Motive and Manner of Giving

Regardless of the church calendar, Christmas time is the giving time. We are wont to offer special inducements to giving and to urge special types and kinds of giving, but before the "White Gift" phrase was ever invented and before the National Sunday School Association ever dreamed of offerings and goals, Christmas time was the time of all the year for giving. Everybody likes to be generous at Christmas time and he who is not, is ashamed of himself. Generosity is the atmosphere of the season and it is impossible to get through it without breathing it to some extent.

Now while the giving spirit is so universal at the Christmas season, yet people differ vastly in the manner and motive of their giving. Some giving is inspired by pride, some by the hope of gain, some by a sense of duty and some by love. Some giving is done reluctantly, some measuredly, some gladly, some freely and generously. And among discerning people, the value of the gift is largely determined by the motive and manner of the giving, which are usually betrayed by some incident or expression connected therewith. How much more then ought we to be sure that God values our gifts according to why and how we give, and that we cannot conceal from him the motive or manner.

There are doubtless many acceptable motives for giving to God. We would not presume to name them all or to stand in God's stead to evaluate them comparatively. But we cannot think of anything that would inspire nobler and more sacrificial giving than the remembrance of what the Almighty Father has done for humankind. It is such contemplation that fills the heart with gratitude, that kindles the flame of love and moves the hand to give and to serve. Nothing pulls so strongly on the heart-strings as love. Paul recognized this and made effective appeal to the motive of love, the love of Christ toward us and his incomparable sacrifice in our behalf, when encouraging the Corinthian church in giving. He counted on that appeal to bring an acceptable offering, and it did.

He first spoke of the lesser gifts and then mentioned God's supreme Gift, and he knew that in the face of such abounding love unworthy motives could not stand. There could be no selfish or stinted giving on the part of God's people if they would dwell long and reverently on the immeasurable loving kindness of him who is the Author of all life and the Giver of all good that we enjoy. Some one has said, "He made the whole world on a plan of cheerful and bountiful giving. The sun pours out the light without reservation. The moon receives a generous portion and turns it all back again. The rivers pour their floods into the sea, only to be drawn up by the sun and poured out upon the earth again. The extravagant growth of vegetation in past ages was buried in the earth to be turned out to us in coal. The clay and the charcoal of the past have become the diamonds and precious stones of the present." Another has said, "There is nothing in this world but lives by giving except a covetous man, and such a man is a piece of grit in the machinery." There is too much grit in the church machinery for smooth running and rapid progress.

A certain church had urgent need of a new house of worship and the people met to pray that God would somehow open the way for the realizing of their desires. In that group of suppliants there were three men of wealth, any one of whom could have built the new church alone without feeling a strain. Those men never offered to help God answer their prayers, and they never got their new church, for God never does for men what they can do for themselves, nor does such penuriousness ever receive the divine blessing. Heaven is not pleased with the covetous heart, nor with the gift that comes grudgingly.

But if love is stirred within the heart by a consideration of the goodness of God as seen in nature and life, it is made to flame forth into its purest and keenest expression when we contemplate his "unspeakable gift" in the person of his only begotten Son. Language fails us when we attempt to tell of the value of that wonderful Gift, of all that it means to us, or to express the depth of the love and the purity of the divine sympathy that inspired it. That is why it is called "the unspeakable gift." Plutarch tells of an ancient king who made a gift of a large sum of money to one of his friends. He was taken to task for his liberality, whereupon he exclaimed in astonishment, "What! would you not have me be liberal? Let the world know that when the king gives, he gives generously, like a king." Then he proceeded to make a second gift to the same party of equal value. God's gift in the person of his Son is such as to amaze us; and yet when we stop to think who it is that is making the gift, why should we be so astonished? A missionary to Jamaica preached on the love of God. After the service he asked an old black woman what she thought of the wonderful love of God. "Think, massa!" she replied, "me think it is just like him." Sir Walter Raleigh once said that if all the pictures and descriptions of a merciless prince were lost to the world, they might all be painted and restored out of the life of Henry VIII. On the other hand the Jews had such a high opinion of Esdras, that if mercy, love and knowledge had put out their candle, at his brain they might light it again. But far greater than Esdras is the Lord Jesus Christ. "He brought love, he bought love, he exercised love, he bequeathed love, he died in love, he was all love." And love as we see it in him is such an "unspeakable gift" that we cannot contemplate it without being moved to the depths of our souls with loving devotion that is beyond words and will not halt at unmeasured gifts of self, service and substance in his name.

It is such a reverent consideration of the remarkable goodness of God, and especially his supreme Gift, that we need most of all, as we face the challenge to make an offering fit to honor the King of kings on this, his birthday. Such an operation of the mind and heart will absolutely preclude giving grudgingly or of necessity, but will move to generous and cheerful giving, such as delights the heart of God. The goodness and mercy of God not only "leadeth thee to repentance", but also to love and gratitude. Contemplate it and it will move the heart to worship and the hand to giving that will produce the keenest and purest joy.

"If Salt Have Lost Its Savor"

There is a group of denominations known as "plain people", to which the Brethren church historically belongs. We have a special feeling of friendship and concern for the churches of this group, not only because of our relationship thereto, but also because we believe the world still needs their influence and message. If ever there was a time when humility of life, plainness and respectability of dress, separation from worldliness of many kinds and loyal adherence to the teachings of the Word of God were needed, that time is now. But it seems that the salt of Gospel simplicity as represented by these church groups has largely lost or is rapidly losing its savor. "Sweeping our own dooryard first," let us frankly confess that we have lost all semblance of "plainness" and our witness to this virtue has been nollied in practically all particulars. The places where this is not true are the exceptions. Others of the progressive groups of the "plain people" are following hard after us, and possibly some have outrun us.

On the other hand, there are certain of the sects and settlements belonging to this group of churches which have been steadily veering to the other extreme, that of fanaticism and utter aloofness from the modern world. They having forfeited their leadership of the simple life ideal, lost their influence by refusing to keep pace with progress and education, and made themselves ridiculous by their tenacious adherence to trivialities of garb and custom. Having eyes only for the "order" and other outward marks of plainness, they are blind to the day of their opportunity and unaware of the larger meaning and responsibility of their mission and message. Having ears only for the traditions of their elders, they have been deaf to the voice of God calling them to the service of the sinful, suffering world. Crime prevention, world evangelism and the promotion of peace are no problems of theirs; they prefer such questions as Whether the coat should be fastened with buttons or with hooks and eyes. They are not interested in religious education in the true sense of the word, in problems of health, child labor, or in public schools, but they are interested in such problems as whether a member may drive an automobile, have brass mounted harness, or wear a collar and tie. They are troubled more about the frills of life than about problems of vital godliness. With such an aversion of interest in the practical affairs of life, it is not surprising that they are a disappearing people, driven here and there in quest of an asylum for their antiquated notions and customs.

A vanguard of 10,000 of these people who were compelled to leave their Southern Manitoba farms because of their failure to obey the compulsory school law, started recently on their long journey to farms in Paraguay and Mexico. One party used thirteen freight cars and three passenger coaches. Three hundred and fifty members of the sect left for New York, where they will board ship, en route to their new homes in South America. Others are selling their farms and getting ready to leave as soon as they can. This sect insists on teaching their children themselves. Many of them cannot read or write English. Many heads of families have paid fines and others have gone to jail, but they refuse to obey the law and as a result are moving to other lands.

If the salt of the gospel of the simple life have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? Are we content to wholly lose this note of our message? Or may it be that we shall yet realize that we have come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

A New Financial Scheme

One of the difficulties in church finance is to get people to give to certain of our religious institutions in amounts large enough to meet the exacting demands of the times. Church members have been appealed to to invest in annuity bonds and to make bequests and wills in the interest of colleges, missionary societies and publishing houses, but they have not responded very freely. It may be due partly to a lack of expert effort and method. That seems to be the view of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, which is planning to make the week of December 13-18 of this year "Bequest Week," during which time its agents are to specialize in promoting gifts through life insurance trust for educational, missionary, religious and philanthropic organizations connected with the church. The plan is to be carried out in cooperation with the Federal Council of Churches, through its committee on Financial and Fiduciary Matters.

Mr. E. A. Woods, of Pittsburgh, representing the Equitable Company, devoted one day about a year ago to this purpose, calling it "Bequest Day." On that day, 335 of his representatives interviewed 1,370 prospects in the interest of 545 charitable organizations and secured 57 applications for policies totaling $169,500, designating religious or charitable or educational organizations as beneficiaries.

From the point of view of religious organizations, this experiment means effective advertising, publicity and education, and has a value far in excess of the number of policies written. It affords an opportunity to inform insurance underwriters about the needs of religious agencies for support and to secure cooperation in directing the attention of great numbers of people to worthy causes.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. Florence N. Gribble informs us that she and Marguerite are settled in France and both in school. She also relays some interesting news items from the workers in Africa.

Christian Endeavorers, turn to page 11, where you will find a message from the Intermediate Superintendent, Mr. W. O. Nish, and another from the Booster Committee, of which Rev. F. C. Vanator is chairman.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports for the Bedford county circuit in Pennsylvania, where Brother W. S. Crick is the energetic pastor. The total amount of the three churches—New Enterprise, Yellow Creek and Raystown—to the Endowment Campaign Fund is $1,171.41, making a grand total of $81,477.47.

Miss Mary L. Emmert writes an interesting letter from our African mission at Yaloke where she has been conducting a school since June 7, having twenty pupils enrolled after the sifting process had done its work, ranging in age from 7 to 15. This school work promises to have a far-reaching effect on the native population.

From Grafton, West Virginia, comes a report of an enthusiastic campaign of evangelism conducted by Brother Thomas F. Howell of Highland, Pennsylvania, resulting in confessions by the unsaved and the stirring of the membership to greater devotion. Brother Howell's services were highly appreciated.

We call the attention of the Ohio pastors to the Eighth Annual Pastors' Convention to be held at Columbus, January 24-27, 1927. Dr. S. Parks Cadman and other noted men will speak, and such topics as the following will be discussed by the speakers and by the pastors in attendance. The subjects are: Evangelism, Religious Education, The Church and Youth, International Good Will and Moral Welfare. The registration fee is $2.00.

There are a number of churches which find it suitable to hold Watch Night meetings on the last of December. It is a splendid custom and affords many possibilities of arrangement and helpfulness. We urge all who find it possible, either churches or Christian Endeavor societies, to plan for such a meeting. It is a good way to begin the New Year. Decide upon some theme which shall be the burden of prayer, for example, pray for a revival, but allow opportunity for any one to make request for prayer.

Brother F. C. Vanator of Canton, Ohio, tells us of the campaign he conducted at Gratis, in conjunction with the pastor, Brother O. C. Starn. Ten souls were added to the church as a result of this meeting. The evangelist credits the pastor with having the field in readiness for the reaping when he arrived. Such preparation is, as he suggests, an important fact in nearly every successful campaign.

Brother Claud Studebaker shows himself to be one of the very busy pastors of the brotherhood, being a leader in the local community interests. The Sunday school is making commendable progress. The Harvest Homecoming was a unique and very successful feature with an offering of $700.00. Three revivals were conducted by the pastor, one in his own church at Leon, Iowa, resulting in additions to the church, and another campaign was conducted at Hamlin, Kansas, which is without a pastor.

Brother Harold D. Fry, pastor at Oakville, Indiana, writes an interesting letter and we hope he will so favor us more often. He is doing some real building in his congregation in way of developing the prayer life and training for service. Such work is destined to have a far-reaching influence on the efficiency and strength of the church. The annual rabbit hunt and supper was a great success.

Dr. W. H. Beachler sends us his first communication as pastor of the First Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio, where he has been in charge since leaving his South Bend, Indiana pastorate in July. He has been hard at work and has gotten the Dayton situation pretty well in hand already which indicates what everyone was ready to believe that though the field is big, it is not too big for the man. Something special has been doing practically all the time, which is the way of this great church and also the way of Brother Beachler's pastorates.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The White Gift and Christian Education

By Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, President Ashland College

As the time of year approaches when the churches celebrate the coming of Jesus into the world, our minds naturally turn towards the bestowal of gifts. One can not contemplate this Supreme Gift to men without a feeling of altruism and generosity. This Gift was so free, so unmerited, and yet so necessary that it compels admiration and response.

Outside of the general giving of the White Gift offering, my mind turns at once to the part the College and Seminary at Ashland have had in it for a period of years. We have made the plea here for years that we are especially worthy of remembrance because we are striving to promulgate the teachings and spirit of Jesus through the process of education. That may be an old plea but so long as the forces of evil or even of indifference are alive, we shall still have our cause to fight.

And the forces of opposition are still alive and active, and in the field of education. Those who are in a position to know feel keenly the general tendency to separate education and Christianity. It is everywhere abroad. Within the past three months it has been my duty to approach certain sources for money for a Christian college and I found that in certain cases the religious appeal was not only not effective but wholly unwelcome. Perhaps one would not want to say that the forces I have in mind are hostile, but certainly indifferent.

For instance, there is a general tendency for the various states to set up their own machinery for the training of their own teachers. That means that the high school teachers and the grade teachers will not have come into contact with the Christian college as so many of them now do. Without saying a single word against the technical efficiency of these state training schools, yet one might be allowed to observe that they by no means stress in any very effective way, the teachings of Jesus.

It seems to me that nothing could possibly be of more importance than that our education, the very foundation of our national life, should be kept in close accord with Christianity at its best. At present there is no other way to make this contact than through the Christian college. It seems to me that there would be a very distinct loss entailed, not only upon the churches, but upon the nation as a whole, if this trend should finally bring us to any real lessening of the influence of Christianity in the field of public education.

The first aim of the general courses in teacher training is to make for correct technique. That is what they are set up for and that is the ideal towards which they work but those who are anxious for the genuine welfare of America know that more is involved. Character, altruism, social solicitude, righteous living, personal purity and honesty, and all that might be included in the word Christian, should some way or other be woven into the educational fabric. How this can be done when the agencies of the church are shut out from having any effective part in the program of education, is hard to see.

Ashland has always stood for just this thing,—education with the major emphasis upon its Christian elements. The claims not only of Ashland but of every college which seeks to stress these elements, are just claims,—claims for sympathy and support. If the denominational colleges were taken out of the field of higher education, the nation as a whole would suffer a distinct loss and anything which the churches can do to foster and further these schools, is effort well spent. I do not make a plea for our own college on the grounds of education only as so much college training but on the grounds of its Christian influence.

No one but those closely connected with such a school as ours, can possibly know the forces which are brought to bear upon us by agencies which have small or no regard at all for the advance of Christian education. Some of these forces eliminate from such high places of authority that they can not be ignored. The Protestant churches of America ought to look well to strengthening their colleges and to keeping them above scholastic reproach. This can not be done by half-hearted and indifferent response but by a loving and intelligent interest.

At least two serious problems are facing the church colleges. First is that relating to their scientific and moral teaching and the other to their finances. The first problem is one that can only be settled by sound scholarship controlled by Christianity. Philosophies of life and of the world untouched by Christianity are now abroad and are dangerous. It is surely the duty of the church college to set these right. As Christianity is now understood, and with all the forces at our command in the way of archaeology, science, and history, we are at once in a commanding position,—but only if we make sensible use of these forces. The Christian scholar has nothing to be ashamed of, nor anything to hide,—thanks to a better understanding. But the second problem, viz., that relating to the proper financing of such schools can not be solved by words. It takes one thing and one thing only and that is money. We may fret, say it is unjust, we may point out that our teachers do not demand large salaries, we may say anything we want to yet there is only one solution to the problem and that is sufficient money to make the institutions financially secure.

A just portion of the White Gift goes to that very purpose. It could not be better spent for it works for the church in a double way,—in education and Christianity.

Ashland, Ohio.

PROF. J. A. GARBER

Head of the Dept. of Religious Education in Ashland College

A Great Opportunity

By O. C. Starn

As we are approaching, again, the Christmas season the welcome call will come to our Sunday schools for a White Gift offering. This appeal comes with perennial freshness. As a basis for our thinking and acting let us recall God's great "White Gift" to the world which has made millions happy. In an unselfish way he gave THE BEST he had and certainly we will want to give a PORTION of what God has given us to help make others happy in Christ.

The White Gift offering is used for one purpose—to promote the work of the Kingdom. As Christian people, who dare refuse to support such a work? This main stream is made up of three channels: the support of the Department of Religious Education at Ashland College; promotion of missions in Kentucky; the National Sunday School Association which promotes religious educational agencies in the local churches.

No one can evaluate the fine work that is being done at Ashland College by the Department of Religious Education. Our College would not engage in any training that was not valuable. Many young men and women who go out from college are fully equipped to enter into the great field of Religious Education because of the fine training received in this particular department. They are trained in methods of teaching the importance of which dare not be minimized a single iota in comparison with the emphasis and demands laid upon methods of teaching in the public schools. They are also trained in material to teach the Word of God. They receive a specific knowledge of the field of Religious Education such as the Daily Vacation Bible School, the Church School and the Week Day School of Religion. Think of what fine results are being attained in your local communities by these different agencies.

The promotion of missions in Kentucky merits our support. It is a needy field. Many of us are acquainted with the consecrated workers in Kentucky and their work. Think of the fine use to which our money can be put if more workers like Hattie Cope Sheldon can be discovered. Quite likely there are such in Kentucky if the opportunity for development can be extended. I believe all the present workers in Kentucky will join the rest of us in saying that we hope to see still greater work promoted there. This can only be done by each one lending their support.

Practically all churches in the brotherhood have tasted of the good work being done by our National Sunday School Association. Each Sunday school can evaluate the help they have received from the different field secretaries of the past. No doubt you will want it continued. Think also of the effort of the Association to promote leadership in the Sunday schools through Teacher Training, setting of goals special young people's workers, etc. We are only beginning to take hold upon the latter but by your support it will become one of our great fields.

Children, young people and adults, this is your opportunity to become "Workers together with Christ." Let us boost the White Gift offering.

Growing Plants Have Growing Needs

By G. E. Drushal,

A bit over twenty-one years ago, under the hand of the Lord the work of the Brethren church was begun at Lost Creek, Kentucky. That God led in the setting of the plant, there was and never has been any doubt. From the first those who have labored here have tried to let the Lord have his way in their lives; have tried to only follow his leading, and by that leading have come to the conditions and circumstances now prevailing. During this time, mistakes of course have been made. But in the main there now abides the deep undercurrent of belief and certainty, that somehow, in some way, "God has been within the shadow keeping watch above his own."

Every normal plant must bear some fruit, else the excuse for its cumbering the ground would not avail. There is no place in the economy of God, or man, for stalemate life. There must be a moving on, a growth, or else death is the inevitable result sure to follow. But if the plant bears some fruit, the caretaker of the same is encouraged in the continuing of its upkeep.

May we now look at this plant, the planting of the Lord, and see if there be any fruit. If none, then certainly no wasting of energy. But if fruit, the only thing to do, carry on. But in making this superficial inventory we must remember that man has no way of accurately measuring spiritual values. "Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. But what of the fruit?"

As we look about we first see the name of Hattie Cope Sheldon, who gave her life for the benighted of Africa. We see many souls as white as yours or mine, though in black skinned bodies, rising up and calling her blessed, for having been the instrument in God's hand in leading them out of the hideous darkness of heathendom into the glorious and blessed light of salvation in Christ Jesus. Again we see three preachers, two of them giving their entire time to Christian service. We see many school teachers who received the most of their training at Riverside. We see homes transformed by the power of the Gospel, and souls many of them who have entered into glory actually and potentially, and we see a community transformed by the power of the Gospel, so that the things it once loved now it hates. Other fruit there is, but we hasten on to our concluding paragraph.

As the work approaches the quarter century mark, one must realize that time enough has passed to have wrought changes, and changes there have been. "Time makes ancient good uncouth." WHAT HAS BEEN DONE, WITH THE USUAL NORMAL

Some Lost Creek's Contributions to the ministry, missions and Sunday School Work. Your White Gifts Bear Fruit.

CONDITIONS PREVAILING, CAN AND WILL CONTINUE TO BE DONE. But time has brought us face to face with new needs. Growing plants require more care, more help, more outlay, if they continue their growth normally. That is the condition that this plant has come to. There must be some work done here, lest death sets in. That work will require a bit of funds to get it going at least. Who is it that prefers death to life, when in the morning and noon of life? Who would desire not to see this planting of the Lord grow? Now is the opportunity to give expression to that desire. May we only see what our God would have us do, and do accordingly. "He that putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back is not fit for the Kingdom of God."

That White Gift Offering

By J. L. Gingrich

"The heart was made to love, the hand was made to give; the heart without the head cannot bestow the special gift." We have been taught that God is love. Our experience reminds us constantly that God, through love, causes us to become the recipients of manifold material and spiritual blessings. God, on account of this love and unfailing concern, permitted his Son to come to this earth, because of our extreme selfishness manifested in our attitude toward man and God. Jesus who was very God and whose life was the very thought of God, could not do other than promulgate the spirit of love and sacrifice. In all our study of the relation between our Lord and mankind we discover that not once did he perform a miracle upon himself. When tempted by Satan, he emphatically objected to even consider such a procedure. In every miracle Jesus, because of his compassion, ministered either to multitude or individual. The very spirit of Christianity should be to carry forward and establish the principles of Christ in the hearts of men today. The "Norm" for life should be "Less selfishness and more altruism."

The White Gift Offering reminds us that our love should be pure and unmixed by reason of prejudiced or selfish greed and material gain. The motive prompting any giving ought to be wholehearted and free from alloy. We feel confident that everyone who is at all interested in mankind will welcome an opportunity to give something. The question may present itself to some, Where and for what use is the money expended? To which question or any other that may arise we reply: The White Gift offering is divided according to your discretion or left to the disposition of those responsible for the following most worthy causes, viz., Religious Education in Ashland College, the mission work in Kentucky and the promotion work of the National Sunday School Association.

As a former student of our beloved Christian institution, the writer cannot speak too highly of the commendable work done in the special department of Religious Education. In one's college career there must, of necessity, be a controlling power—a governor if you please. In the ambition to acquire a good education one dare not forget nor neglect the value of religion. Especially is this true today. Space forbids the writer to elaborate upon this particular phase but this much must be forever stressed, Our own church needs the department of Religious Education in Ashland College. The future of the church depends upon the existence of this department. You are responsible for the maintenance thereof. The aforesaid Department exists with your loyalty and support. They stand or fall together.

The casual observer dare not think of minimizing the work accomplished in Kentucky. We who share the blessings resulting from good educational advantages, splendid reading facilities and direct and immediate social and business intercourse seldom, if ever, stop to ponder over the situation prevalent in Kentucky. Whatever is true of their increasing amount of modern blessings and pleasures one thing is sure, they need our support that will enable them to feel their need and create within them a desire to live, labor, serve and love like him who is our friend and Master, Savior and Lord.

The work of the National Sunday School Association needs but very little comment and emphasis. We are confronted every day with problems which must be met and answered intelligently. When God reminded man that he was the "I AM that I AM," a truth was presented that has never been challenged. God is an ever-present Helper for the ever-present needs of the ever-present Christian. Wherever one finds a group of Christians working there will also be found various difficulties. The above Association stands ready to assist in placing the Sunday schools on a better working basis and solve any difficulties.

Let us then put into our boys and girls the greatest life values possible that they may live to honor their Creator and be a blessing to all with whom they meet. The church of all the institutions should grasp this conception.

Making Your Gift White

By N. V. Leatherman

To some giving is a burden, a drudge, a something to be done because social and church prestige urge that it be done. True, Christmas that glorious season of the year, is oftentimes relieved of much of its glory because some pocket-books are touched. But is it not true that the empty pocket-book does not look so bad when that for which it was emptied is at hand to give lasting satisfaction. A loaf of bread surely looks better to a starving family than a last silver dime.

Let us therefore offer one conception of a White Gift. It is a gift that looks better and gives more satisfaction when given than when it is kept. But in order to realize this satisfaction the giver must know something of the good results accomplished by the gifts.

With this thought in mind we would like to offer a few suggestions that might help make your gift appear a little whiter this year.

Your White Gift goes to the National Sunday School Association. It is used by this Association to further the interests of our Bible schools. Your church workers are being trained in Bible school methods, principles and management at Ashland College, and when you get them back in your congregation they are able to lead your school to a higher standard of efficiency. Your pastors are getting this training and the fruit of their work is but the result of your interest in supporting a teacher who trains them for this purpose.

A further extension of the training the Association is offering will be found in the Young People's Conference to be held at Shipshewana this summer. There a short course will be offered to the young people to help them better fit themselves for work in your church.

Then too the benefits which you and your church receive through the leadership of the Association officers is not to be minimized but might well be considered in your estimating the value of your gift. The cost of the magazine sections of the Brethren Educator are paid by the Association to which your White Gift is sent. Your national leaders use this Educator to give your school the advantage of their study and interests. Our teachers and officers are now using these suggestions to the benefit of your school.

The Association also supports to no little degree our very wonderful work in Kentucky. On a certain visit to this mission a gentleman born and raised in the mountains of Breathitt county said to the writer, "I don't know what would have become of us here if our mission had not been started." When lives are grasped out of the darkness and set in the light as many have been there, we ought to see the whiteness of our gifts for them.

Your gift will be white to the Association. May it be as white or even whiter to yourself.

The White Gift Offering

By George E. Cone

It is quite likely that no word from me is needed with regard to the Religious Education department of Ashland College. May I be allowed to make one suggestion? It would seem that it was now time that we should support this department with our prayers and gifts, so as to make it the potent factor in our Sunday school work that it was aimed to be. None, we believe, will deny that we need this department to train our young people in the basic, sound, practical methods of Sunday school work. That they in turn may come to our churches of the brotherhood to carry the day for sound Christian education through the channel of the Sunday school.

Certainly we have a splendid work in the mountains of Kentucky. It would be nothing less than a crime, on our part, to allow our part of this work to be crippled. The workers have been faithful. The work has been of the nature to glorify our Lord and has received his smile of blessing in the past. If we have had outstanding illustrations of what the faithful preaching of the Word and teaching could do for the life of a community we certainly have one of them in the Kentucky work. The Lord would not hold us guiltless should we fail him in this work now. Perhaps we could make no gift at the Christmas season this year, which would be WHITER or more pleasing to the Lord Jesus, whose birthday we celebrate, than just this one for the continuation of his work in the Kentucky mountains.

Then too, if we want the leadership of the National Sunday School Association, we must put sufficient Prayer, Life and Funds at the disposal of its officers that the work may be carried on. You may think the work of this Association should be extended, broadened, deepened and you think right. Doubtless each officer feels the same about the work. This can be done when you and I put enough of prayer and means into it so as to make it possible for the officers to broaden the work; to deepen the spiritual benefits to be derived therefrom; to extend its borders of usefulness. If the work has not pleased us in the past possibly we have not given enough time in prayer for God's direction upon the work. The Association may have been hindered by a lack of Bible honoring and Bible studying people in the various schools. Perhaps we have clung to God's money when he would have desired us to put it at his disposal in this work. We say have, "possibly" and "perhaps," for you know whether these things are so or not.

Let us earnestly petition Almighty God to guide us to do our VERY BEST at this season that his guidance may be with us in giving these WHITE GIFTS. Through the year, may his name be glorified in the administration of the gifts.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Giving Thanks Always for All Things

By C. C. Grisso

(Sermon preached at the Union Thanksgiving Service in the Presbyterian Church at Warsaw, Indiana by the Pastor of the Brethren Church)

TEXT: Giving thanks always for all things unto God the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Ephesians 5:20.

It was David who said, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits to me." Now what are these "all things" and these "benefits?" We are ready to find fault with God if anything goes wrong, but slow to bow our heads to his benefits. These we share with all mankind. The heavens clothed in glory, the earth decked with radiant beauty. The sun sheds its light by day, and the moon by night. The brooks ripple with sweet melody, and the birds sing their heavenly carols. The valleys and hills spend their strength in our behalf. If David and Saint Paul could lift their voices in praise, how about his people today with the wealth of the world in our hands, and the indwelling Holy Spirit in our hearts, pulsing the very eternal life of God? What are these "all things" of which he speaks? Our daily food, yes, friends, homes, trials of life, deep sorrows, heartaches, yes, "all things work together for good to them that love God." What has He not done for us?

Pours Out Blessings

"Every day God pours out his blessings upon us. He opens the windows of heaven towards us, and literally exhausts himself in our behalf, but we pass by these things without showing the least spark of gratitude. Think with me for a moment of what he has done for us. Every breath we breathe, every particle of food touching our lips, every ray of light to the eye, every sweet sound to the ear, every material blessing from the least to the greatest has come from him. But to those who are Christians there is more than these. Our sins are blotted out from his book of remembrance. He has given us eternal life. We walk in the light day by day, even as he is in the light. We have a constant fellowship with him and all his redeemed. We have the assurance of every needed supply here, even, "according to his riches in glory" and a deed in fee simple to a mansion in heaven, and his unfaith-ing promise of his coming again, and the assurance of making these bodies like unto his own glorious body.

Makes All Things Possible

"Heaven pity the person with a heritage like that who would fail in continued thanksgiving to God. And in whose name; 'In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.' The Savior—the anointed one—he it is that has made these things possible. He is ours and we are his. God through Jesus Christ has poured the cup to overflowing in our behalf. Let us this day pour out our grateful thanks. The old prophet cried out, 'Will a man rob God?' A man may be mean but certainly not mean enough for that. After having received all his tender mercies, and a persistency that knows no bounds, will a man turn and rob him? It would seem that since we derive all from him, and all that we can ever hope for in this world and in the next must come from him, that it would be the height of madness and meanness to rob him of gratitude. The nine ungrateful lepers of Christ's day are no more inconsiderate than many of our generation. You know the story. There were ten cleansed. Only one returned to thank him. Where are the other hundreds of God's children this morning that have failed to stop in their mad rush for pleasure and other things to thank him? They have received the same healing; been ministered to by the same gracious hand; partakers of the same benefits as members of the body of Christ, but who have forgotten his healing touch. Beware! Beware! lest you come to the doubter's seat or the scoffer's place of denial. Remember.

"Jesus paid it all, all to him I owe,

Sin has left a crimson stain,

He washed it white as snow."

All Should Be Grateful

"We should be profoundly grateful this day. First as Americans; second, as Christians; third, as individuals.

"I. For what should we be grateful as American citizens? There arises the thought of an unexampled prosperity. The wealth of the wooded hills,—the hidden treasures of the mountains—the riches of the widespread prairies, such wealth has never been paralleled since the treasures of civilization were poured into the coffers of Rome. We are literally embarrassed with our wealth. A goodly heritage has been ours. Our fathers toiled and suffered and bled as they patiently and persistently laid the solid foundations of our republican government upon the immovable rock of divine justice. They laid the cornerstone of our American liberty and independence and dedicated the whole structure to Almighty God, sealing their vows with their own blood and the blood of their sons. Are we grateful for liberty at such a cost? Shall we seek to preserve it by holy living and hand it down to coming generations unimpaired? Shall we this morning bring dishonor to that little company of pilgrims yonder at Plymouth Rock in their absolute reliance and undying devotion to Almighty God? Witness them once more as they come to their new home, not to enslave and destroy, but to build—build homes, build churches, to find a place to worship God, not in cold, heartless, empty forms, but according to the clear, simple spiritual teachings of the word of God. Accordingly, note their first act, mark their devotion. See them drop on their knees and give gratitude to God. They were uncompromising in their observance of the Lord's Day. They met in their rude meeting houses to thank God for their scant harvests which they by his help had dug from the wild and niggardly soil. And brethren, it was this unswerving spirit of loyalty and devotion to Almighty God that made our forefathers strong enough to withstand the persecution of those days and build for us this great nation. Are we thankful for it? Again, as Americans, we ought to be grateful that our nation is enjoying a season of peace. That over the cannon's mouth the spider has woven her web. Our nation is tired of war. And in these days leaders of many nations are endeavoring to inaugurate some ways and means whereby war might be banished forever from the earth. Such a spirit is to be commended and we should be grateful for it, but let us not forget that their dream will be realized only as Jesus, the "Prince of Peace" shall rule in men's hearts and in all the affairs of the nations of the earth, for "when he comes he will make wars to cease unto the ends of the earth."

"II. Grateful as Christians. For what have we as Christians to be especially thankful? Many things, but profoundly so, for the fact that the church of Jesus Christ is becoming triumphant in the earth. The world is coming to recognize Jesus Christ as God's son, as the one and only author of salvation. A better day is dawning for his church. A great revival, I believe, is coming upon his people. And all things are pointing to a world-wide kingdom soon at hand. Silently and steadily the gospel has been burning its way into all the world with light and life and hope until today scarcely a nation but what has thrown open its doors to the Christian faith. It is folding the world as a garment, and like a vine pruned in the springtime, is in these latter days springing up to greater power and usefulness. And thus above the blessings of rich harvests, above our material progress and prosperity, above the blessings of strong government, is the blessings of the church of the living God, 'against which the gates of hell shall not prevail.'

"By and by this great American government will crumble, soon the great British crown upon which the sun never sets will come to naught. But the church of the living God will survive the ravages of time and live on and on. How grateful for this fact we ought to be, and not only for this, but for what it is to us here and now. What would this old world be without the presence of the church of Jesus Christ in it? Are we appreciative of all its blessings to us? Are we always as loyal to it as we should be? The humblest and least favored child of God ought to stop and give thanks this day, for just to get inside the door of the kingdom; just to have a place within his circle; to bear the lowest title of the redeemed; to be the weakest in all the family of God; to be the dimmest jewel; to be less than the least of all the saints, is enough to cause the heart to rejoice and be grateful.

"III. For what have we to be grateful as individuals? Health? Food? Raiment? 'Tis easy to be thankful for these. What if his hand has been heavy upon us? What if loss has come? What if sorrow and sickness and death has come? Listen to this note of cheer. 'The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us.' Thank him for our ears? Yes. Sorrows? Yes, for every tear and every sorrow of earth will but teach us something of the unsearchable riches of God. Then here's the Bible, the gift of his son, answered prayer, comfort in sorrow, a living hope, privilege of service, fellowship of the saints. Let us thank God for these and today pledge our lives anew in holy service to him. In conclusion, I want us to remember two persons. As you gather around your tables today with those you love and in remembrance of the absent and missing ones, I would beseech of you to remember your brother less fortunate than you, poor, tired, sinful, suffering, needy humanity, the folks who need help. Remember them today. And second, your elder brother, Jesus Christ. He needs you and you need him. Give him your life, your service, your heart, your all. For all our future happiness and glory must come through the merits of him. 'Let us therefore offer unto God the sacrifice of thanksgiving.'"

Joining the Church

Joining the church ought to be the expression of a great conviction, which in its turn should come out of knowledge and understanding. Often we must needs hang our heads because some church members fall so far below the New Testament standards of Christian living. We hear the remark that there is no appreciable difference between the church member and the non-church member. This is not as it should be, for the world is still against Jesus Christ in sentiment, character, and actual practice. The trouble is not especially that the church member is hypocritical. He is probably doing the best he knows, although he is probably not doing his best to know. An ignorant Christian cannot be a good Christian. We say that deliberately, not merely in heat of writing.

Joining the church is too great a move to undertake without the equipment of understanding and determination. Consider what the candidate for church membership proposes. It is nothing less than enlistment in the army of God where he must cope with all the wily arts of the powers of darkness. There are no mock heroics in this spiritual warfare. It is a fierce and continuous battle with the world, the flesh, and the devil. Surely such a war requires preparation.

The inconsistent and distressing life of many church members is not always or generally because they are not sincere. It is because they were started wrong. They joined the church wrong. A writer in "The Northwestern Christian Advocate" lays witty emphasis upon this point. He says:

"Was it Dean Swift or a later Irishman who said that the Church of England reminded him of nothing so much as of the fold which Robinson Crusoe made for his goats? It was so large, he said, that the goats inside were as wild as the goats outside. Anyway, I thought of it the other day when I heard of a church which found it necessary to prune its membership records, following the pastorate of a brother who had taken people in on profession of faith, by letter, by post card, from constituency rolls, and from almost every other source except the telephone book. I am not a strict constructionist, but if joining a church means no more than joining the Red Cross or the Democratic Party, how does anybody expect to see any difference between the inside goats and the goats outside?

We can scarcely thing of a greater injustice to a person joining the church than to give him a low idea of its purpose and implications. To join the church is a fine commitment of the soul to the highest things known, and no one should be allowed to pass through this act without deep and sincere religious experiences. When we make more of joining the church, we will do better with our membership in the church.—The Christian Evangelist.

Your Subject and Your Object

Dr. Alexander Maclaren once said: "A man should begin early to grapple with great subjects; therefore he should seek for great texts. As the athlete gains might by great exertions, so a man does not overstrain his powers by taking great texts. The more he wrestles, the more he will gain strength. He must not merely dream over the subject or play with it. No two men will treat the same subject alike unless they imitate each other. The things that agitate the world, the things that agitate your own bosoms preach on them. The things we should like to have settled before we die, settle them and preach on them. The things you would ask an apostle if you had a chance to talk to him, get your Bible and preach on them."

This is wholesome counsel. Some men demean the pulpit by discussing petty themes. But life is too short and the opportunities for preaching the gospel are too few to choose small subjects when there are so many that are great.

Moreover, the right sort of preacher will have an object as well as a subject. He will aim at something worth hitting. He will plead for a verdict. He will not be satisfied merely to show what he knows about the great subject he has chosen; he will make his discussion of that subject the means of reaching the minds and hearts of men with the word of the living God.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Do you wish to live in fear? Do you wish to live in sorrow? Do you wish to live in perturbation? By no means. No one who is in a state of fear or sorrow or perturbation is free; but whoever is delivered from sorrows and fears and perturbation, he is at the same time also delivered from servitude.—Epictetus.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

The Need of Repentance. Repentance is a changed attitude in life, a turning away from sin and toward God. "All have sinned and come short," and so all need repentance; often those that think they need it the least really need it the most. "Know thyself." That great Greek motto stands at the entrance to every path of progress. Until we perceive our ignorance and repent of it, we shall not seek instruction. If we think we are strong enough, we shall not take exercise. While we believe that we are good enough we shall not seek a Savior from sin. Repentance is not the final need, it is only the beginning of the Christian life; but it is the absolutely necessary beginning.

"The Blessed Assembly which Samuel had convened only gives occasion for a new Philistine invasion! Trying to do his people good, Samuel would appear only to have done them harm. It is not rare for steps taken with the best of intentions to become for a time the occasion of a great increase of evil—just as the remonstrances of Moses with Pharaoh led at first to the increase of the people's burdens, or just as the coming of Christ into the world caused the massacre of the babes of Bethlehem. But these evils are transitory as compared with the good that comes out of them, through the blessing of God upon the enterprise. The rousing of the Philistines, and their attack, led to relief for years from the tyranny they had been exerting upon Israel.

Israel Came to Samuel as the recognized leader of the nation, the man who in mental ability, spiritual uplift, and force of character stood head and shoulders above all the men of the times. These Israelites had the right idea of prayer. They knew how easy it is for thoughts of worldliness, for timidity and doubt and fear to creep into man's mind if it is not constantly in touch with the Most High. Perhaps the Israelites remembered the battle of their ancestors with the Amalekites soon after the escape from Egypt, in which the Israelites were successful while Moses' hands were raised in prayer but unsuccessful as soon as the hands of the great leader were lowered (Ex. 17:11). If they had been wiser they would have asked Samuel to pray first that God would forgive their sins, and then that he would give them success against their foes. They prayed only half their prayer, but God read their hearts.

A Good Life Record. "I think that one of the most magnanimous, and majestic, and heroic deeds ever done in our world's history was done by Samuel, when, convinced that it was the will of God, he set himself to do what no other man could do; to forsake all his past, to abandon all the lines of action on which he had worked through the best years of his life, and to put into other men's hands fresh possibilities."—Prof. W. G. Elmslie. This splendid sacrifice completed Samuel's life record.

The Thunderstorm. "Now if God has so adjusted the scheme of Providence that the final result of the whole shall wonderfully accomplish his grand design, may he not, must he not, have so adjusted it that every intermediate part shall work out some intermediate design? It is only those who have an unworthy conception of omniscience and omnipotence that can doubt this. Surely if there is a general Providence, there must be a special Providence. If God guides the whole, he must also guide the parts. Every part of the scheme must fall out according to his plan, and may thus be the means of fulfilling some of his promises. Let us apply this view to the matter of prayer. All true prayer is the fruit of the Holy Spirit working in the human soul. All the prayer

Was It You

*Some one started the whole day wrong—
Was it you?*

*Some one robbed the day of its song—
Was it you?*

*Early this morning some one frowned;
Some one sulked until others scowled;
And soon harsh words were passed around—
Was it you?*

*Some one started the day aright—
Was it you?*

*Some one made it happy and bright—
Was it you?*

*Early one morning, we are told,
Some one smiled all through the day
This smile encouraged young and old—
Was it you?*

that God answers is prayer that God has inspired. The prayer of Samuel was prayer that God had inspired. What more reasonable than that in the great plan of Providence there should have been included a provision for the fulfillment of Samuel's prayer at the appropriate moment."

Christmas Thoughts. There are many to-day studying a regular Christmas lesson, the story of the Birth of the Redeemer. It seemed unwise to omit entirely this wonderful story of a providential answer to a prayer of faith in the olden times. But it is perfectly possible to graft on to this lesson some thoughts appropriate for the Christmas season. The sins of the people which needed repentance, and which brought them to need a Savior. The call to repentance by the prophets for centuries before coming. And the wonderful Providence through which God gives us the victory over our enemies through the coming and the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth, Jesus the Christ of God, of the church but in our own lives. We can all "set up our Ebenezers" to mark the places where we have felt the danger of attack, and have received this wonderful aid from our Savior, who was born on Christmas Day, centuries ago, in Palestine.

What the Birth of Christ Means to the World. It means the assurance of the sacrificial love of God, that there is nothing that God will not do in order, if possible, to win his children away from sin and to himself. It means the salvation of all sinners that will accept the atonement freely offered through Christ. It means the salvation of all sinners that will accept the atonement freely offered through Christ. It means the fullest possible revelation of God to men. It means the fullest possible development of man, his restoration to the divine image in which he was created. It means the ultimate establishment on earth of Christ's reign of righteousness, peace and joy. It means the final triumph of God over Satan, the downfall of the devil and all his works. Whatever can be imagined that is happy, just, strong, and true, this the birth of Christ means to our world.

"Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift!"

Practical Thoughts

1. The "Ifs" of God's promises are to be carefully noted. God's promises of help and blessings are always conditioned on our willingness and ability to receive the fulfillment of them. Not all his ocean of love can enter a closed reservoir. The Savior knocks at the door and will gladly enter—if we open the door.

2. God is ready and anxious to deliver us from our troubles just as soon as we are in the condition where it is wise and safe.

3. A revival in our own souls is the best preparation for victory over the world.

4. Activity on the part of God's people arouses opposition. Indifference on the part of the world and of wicked men is often a sign that the church is not doing its duty. A sleeping cause, or church, the enemy can well afford to let it alone.

5. Even those who have scouted prayer want to pray, or to have others pray for them in special times of distress and sorrow.

6. Consecration is followed by victory. The victory is due to God, but we must do our part as faithfully as if all depended upon ourselves.

7. Pray as hard as if we could do nothing; fight as hard as if no one else could do anything.

8. "The memory of all God's mercies ought to be perpetuated. Every critical period, as the turning of the year; every point of success in any enterprise of life; every point where we gain a higher joy; whether it be secular or spiritual; every new relation which promises great blessedness to us; every business achievement which seems to lift use out of difficulties; every great mischief that impended as a threatening sky, but that is rolled away—every such event or experience ought to have a distinct recognition."—Henry Ward Beecher.

But for God's deeper depth; we sow to reap;

Have patience; wait, betake ourselves to prayer:

Deep answereth deep.

From the office of the General Secretary has gone out an appeal for funds for the coming year in our special line of endeavor. This is the third year that this appeal has been made. The second year the response was better than the first. This year we want it still better. You will please note that enclosed with the letter was a government post card, and it is stamped all ready to mail. On that card is a place for your pledge for this year. Do not make it less than last year. Try to do even better. Also there are some societies which have never gotten onto this movement. We cannot do without you. But if your society does not take it up, you, as an individual member, go to the one in charge and ask for the card. On the end of that card is a place for a personal pledge. Fill that out and send it in to the General Secretary, Miss Gladys Spice, whose address is at the top of this page. But in any event PLEASE GET THAT CARD BACK TO THE SECRETARY. EVERY KIND OF A THOUGHT MAY BE EXPRESSED ON THAT CARD. READ IT AND SEE.

Suppose There Were No Christmas Luke 2:10, 11

Once upon a time there was a little boy named Kano Kiwari and he lived far across the sea in Japan. It was Christmas time but seven-year-old Kano was not a bit excited or happy. It was not because he was a poor little boy that he was not interested in Christmas. In fact Kano's father had quite a bit of money. The reason that Kano was not excited about Christmas was that he had never heard of Christmas. Did you know that there are people even now who have never heard of Christmas? There are many people who have never had Christmas. Let's pray for them on Christmas morn as well as other days of the year that it may not be many years until everyone on earth will celebrate the birthday of Jesus together.

Well, on Christmas morn, Kano got up just like he did every other day of the year. He had not heard carols sung early in the morn for no one in the town knew what Christmas carols are. So Kano got up and dressed himself without any music to make him feel happy. Then he went down stairs. But he did not run and hurry to see his Christmas tree. He had never heard of a Christmas tree and did not even know what a Christmas tree looked like.

Then he spent the day at his usual tasks with a small bit of play thrown in. He was not so very unhappy for he did not know that in the far-away country of America the people were celebrating the birthday of the King of Kings. Finally evening came and Kano went to bed, while far away other children were saying recitations and singing praises about Jesus. Don't you feel sorry for Kano? Didn't he miss a lot that Christmas day? But is that all that Kano missed? No, it certainly is not. Let's think of some of the other things that he missed.

Kano did not know about Heaven. Just think how terrible it would be not to know about Heaven and about what becomes of us after we die. This boy did not know that Jesus told people about his home, Heaven, where all who live right and believe in Jesus can go to live after they die.

Because he did not have any Christmas, Kano did not know of Jesus' love. He did not know that Jesus loves everyone, boys and girls, and all the big people. He did not know about Jesus blessing the little children and healing the sick people. He did not know about God loving the World so well that he was willing to send his Son, Jesus into the world. Since Kano did not know about the love of God and of Jesus, he could not pray to them and talk to them like we can either.

Because Kano did not have any Christmas, he did not know that Jesus had died that people might be saved from their sins. Poor little Kano knew nothing about having sins forgiven or about Salvation being given by Jesus.

Kano did not know of the perfect life that Jesus lived as an example for us. How can Kano seek to be good and to do what is right when he does not even know that our Savior, Jesus, lived a perfect life, to show him how? Jesus served others and thought of others first. He was kind and considerate to all. He loved and still loves all people. He died for us. He is now in Heaven preparing a place for all of those who love him and believe in him. Yet Kano knew none of these things so how could he try to be like Jesus and to think of others as Jesus did?

Do you know that we would be just like Kano if Jesus had never come into the world? How happy we should be that we have Christmas, and please let's all pray that the time may soon come when everyone all over the earth will have Christmas together.

HEBREWS 7:25

"Those who are in the habit of coming unto God." The present tense of the Greek is full of significance here. It refers to those who seek that the presence of God shall be a daily delight rather than an occasional privilege. Those who are not content with living in the outer court, but who crave the intimacy and richer fellowship of the inner circle. Those who are daily realizing that they are not only servants, but sons. "His servants shall serve him; and they shall see his face."—J. Hastings, in "The Great Texts of the Bible."

Our Mission School in Africa

Yaloke, Sept. 27, 1926.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

We are continuing to praise the Lord for the granting of a school at Yaloke, after more than a year of waiting upon him in prayer for it; and now for the prospect of one at Bassai station in the near future. The story of that year of looking to the Lord cannot be told here in detail but we do not cease to marvel at his power to overrule and to accomplish his purposes where "common sense" would see impossibilities. One thing is certain and that is that our desire for a school and that of the natives was deepened and clarified by constant prayer. Many of them came to see that it was God alone who could open the door and that it was to be HIS school for the purpose of learning to read HIS word. Will you not join us in prayer that this purpose may never be lost sight of and that every scholar should be trained for just the life of service God has planned for him? Nothing less would justify the cost of a school in Africa.

Verbal permission for the immediate opening of a school at Yaloke was given June 1 and the classes began June 7. The formal written permission did not come until recently but already three months of school have been taught. Perhaps you are curious as to what a school in Africa is like, so I will try to describe this one to you.

At present there are only about twenty pupils, but we hope to have nearly triple that number when the school house is completed. Three-fourths of this number were already more or less accustomed to the ways of the Mission. Many others were enrolled from different villages but have returned home due to homesickness, aversity to working for their board, or other causes. Every girl enrolled was soon withdrawn, probably through a mutual decision on the parents' part that school would interfere with selling the girls. There will probably always be a culling out process at the beginning of each term until those who really have it in them to learn shall remain.

Can you imagine being a little boy running practically wild in a native village with no care save to evade the soldier's call to work whenever possible, and with no particular thought for the future save perhaps to grow to be a great man of the village, to hunt animals, own a suit of clothes and as many wives as possible; and then suddenly to be called by the chief and told to go to the white man's place and learn to "count the writing"? Curiosity to see this much talked of white man's place with the immense houses and to hear more of the "affair of God" is enough to make the trip an enjoyable one. The first few weeks are very agreeable, for there is so much new to see and hear, but on the other hand to follow a routine every day is a bit uncomfortable. To have to get up every morning at the same hour, take a cold water plunge, attend the morning service, sweep out the hut, and go to school when the bell rings whether one is so inclined or not is something new and startling; and then to have to work even for an hour or two is not nearly so pleasant as doing what one pleases. Those are such queer little characters in the book, too.

What is it all about anyway? And then one begins to wonder what the folks at home might be doing by this time. Everyone always lived happily enough without a school in the past, is it worth all this effort?

But after the first two months are over the story is changed. This reading and writing grows to be fascinating and one gets very well acquainted with the other little boys. It is better after all than working for the soldier; and then one and all become interested in the story of salvation and the last one accepts and is baptized. No one talks about going home now. A new life has opened up before them with more possibilities than their little kinky heads could dream of before.

The ages of the children range from about seven to fifteen. The best learning age seems to be from ten to fourteen. The ones who had never come in contact with the Mission before are far behind the others with one exception. I must make you acquainted with this one exception. The full quota from each village has been drawn and all other applicants turned away, for the veranda threatened to overflow. It was so hard to turn the eager candidates away, but the promise of taking more after the school house was finished satisfied most of them. Such was not the case, however, with one tall, lanky youth with a large bumpy head. After several days it was discovered that this lad, Boua, had not returned to his village as directed but was living in the hut with those who had been more fortunate irrevocable decision would be changed. So he was permitted to enter the school a week later, hoping no doubt that the seemingly late, but he has long since left behind him the smaller boys and is now keeping pace with the average in the first division.

The instruction, of course, has to be in the French language and so one period a day is given over to conversation. The rest of the day would remind you much of the old fashioned school of the three "R's" and you would feel much at home no doubt. At present the classes are held on the veranda of our house. The boys sit on their little native benches and use their knees for a desk. They started out with slates but most of them have progressed to the use of paper and pencil by this time. On Friday afternoon school is closed by a few gymnastic exercises, and the end of the month is marked by prizes given for punctuality and attendance at school and at the morning preaching services. We are not permitted to make the opening exercises in the school religious but as soon as the church is finished we hope to have a short daily chapel service for the school children by themselves. We covet your prayers that these young lives committed into our care may be trained for the Master's service.

Sincerely yours,
 MARY L. EMMERT.

 November 19, 1926.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

At this time in the midst of pressing duties I will take only a few minutes to tell you that Marguerite and I arrived here safely November 15—that we are both in school. Marguerite in girls' school and I in medical college—that the above is our address and that we shall be delighted to hear from our friends at this address until the first of August, 1927. Letters will reach more quickly if posted direct to this address, instead of to the address at Nogent, as formerly.

God has been good to us every step of the way. We did not come third class tourist on the Berengaria, as we had expected, but finding through the Cunard office at Washington, D. C., that the Berengaria had discontinued third class tourist November 1st, we were booked second class, the extra funds being on hand at the moment of need. I miss having the other missionaries in France, and am waiting anxiously for news from them.

Brief items from Brother Hathaway under date of September 15th are as follows:

"Much sickness among the natives, mostly 'lagrippe'."

"Yama's baby died. Gowan lost his wife. Both are submissive but heart-broken."

"Lester Kennedy, Jr., is enjoying good health, and is a joy to his parents as well as other missionaries and natives."

"We shall soon rejoice in the arrival of Jobsons and Fosters."

"I wish their number might be doubled in order that we might open a fourth station. May the Lord bless in giving missionaries and funds for their coming."

"Brother and Sister Sheldon are at the new station and are being blessed."

"School foundation almost completed."

"Temporary houses almost repaired."

"School boys learning rapidly"

"Four chapels in various villages just finished."

"Evangelist Jodowan, Yolo and Lange-ouse on preaching tours."

"Except colds—missionaries are well."

We are glad for these brief notes at so recent a date.

Continue to pray for the work and workers, whether in Africa, France or America.

Lovingly yours,
 FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

New Enterprise, Yellow Creek and Raystown Churches

These three churches are served by one pastor, Brother W. S. Crick, who with his family lives at New Enterprise. The churches are located in the famous "Cove" of Bedford County. This was the original home of the Replogles, Furrys, Crawfords and Obers, with others whose names are very familiar to the Brethren fraternity. All three churches have a small membership and Raystown is a mission church. Brother Crick is doing good work here and is well thought of; he gave me his full time for the canvas and was of great aid. They have no parsonage, but are looking forward to the near future when they expect to take steps to build one.

New Enterprise

Is a small country village beautifully located in one of the most scenic spots of Pennsylvania and is famous for its many springs. It was here that J. Leonard Replogle erected a memorial high school and gave it to the community in memory of the birthplace of his parents and himself. There is very little here for young people to do and there is a continual drain upon the membership in moving to larger places. The church has not labored in vain, as it has given to other churches those who are leaders. They have a very commodious and good church building. The people showed much interest in the College and gave $541.41 to the endowment.

Yellow Creek

The church is located in the country and about seven miles from New Enterprise. The building is in good condition. The membership is made up mostly of farmers. They have a good Sunday school and while the membership is small and they have a limited field, they are doing good work. They are faithful to the church and its support and according to their ability contributed to the endowment. The gift was $265.00.

Raystown

This church showed much life and ambition and has a promising future as it has a large field to work in. It is located near two industrial towns, Riddlesburg and Saxton. Coal mines are being operated in this section. The church building is in good shape and makes a good appearance for a country church. They are alive to organization work and showed much interest in our School. The Mission Board is still giving them some aid, but it will not be long if they continue to grow, before they will be able to carry their own work. They gave $365.00 to the endowment. The total gift of this group of small churches was $1,171.41. W. S. BELL.

OUR LAST PASTORAL TRANSITION

Elder W. C. Teeter, for many years the faithful correspondent for the Dayton congregation, has been for some months incapacitated by illness, hence it will fall to the pastor himself to write a few lines of news. Before passing, however, it should be said that Brother Teeter is gradually improving, and it is our hope that he and his faithful wife may soon be back into the active work of the church.

I have called our last move a "pastoral transition." I am allowing myself to think it will be our last one. Moving is a luxury altogether too expensive for the average poor preacher. By the time he has moved ten or twenty times he can figure that it has cost him approximately a little, modest home. Some of our laity may doubt this. Our older ministers do not doubt it—they know it.

Our move was from South Bend, Indiana, to Dayton, Ohio. Just what instrumentalities and forces operated to bring about this move is a matter upon which there is some difference of opinion. When one of the South Bend sisters was remonstrating with the writer about the change, he ventured to suggest that it was the Lord's leading. Whereupon she quickly replied—"The Lord had nothing to do with it. It was Dayton that did it." Whereupon, we left the argument unfinished.

At all events, after a stay of a little less than two years at South Bend, we came to Dayton. Ordinarily, so short a stay at a place is unfortunate. I am not speaking for South Bend on this delicate point. But speaking from my own standpoint, I consider that it was unfortunate to leave that field so soon. We were just getting nicely under way. We believe we undertook and accomplished some things during our short stay. We undertook other things which must be carried through by my deserving successor, Brother N. V. Leatherman. As for the South Bend congregation, I can say without any reserve, there are many in the ranks there who are loyal to the core, hard working, and sacrificing. The church is also blessed with some very capable lay leadership. And hence, I have no fears for South Bend's future. If our people stand unitedly together, and work together, the debt will be wiped out in the course of time, and the church will make for itself an increasingly large place in its respective part of a rapidly growing city. Though a fire forced our South Bend congregation very abruptly into a bold program of building, the congregation acquitted itself in a very statesmanlike manner, manifesting great faith and courage, and rearing a most creditable and beautiful church property and parsonage. And it will all be taken care of. My very best wishes linger with our South Bend people, and I allow myself to believe that I can return occasionally in the future (not too often of course) and receive a warm welcome. I am going to try it some time and find out for sure. Next to the last Sunday of July I closed my work in Indiana, and turned my face toward my native state and that of my wife.

And here I am in my own native country and among many people whom I have known from childhood. My father bought me more than one pair of knee pants in Dayton. My first ministry was around Dayton. Needless to say, we feel very much at home back in Ohio, and in Dayton.

I am not saying much about "first impressions." I have been too busy to pay much attention to my first impressions. In fact I believe the older a man gets in the ministry the less stock he really takes in "first impressions." They are so often unreliable and misleading.

But I can say that many things have transpired since we are here which will linger in our minds as pleasant memories. Among them are, a very creditable installation service; a very heart warming Reception; Home Coming; Promotion Day and Rally Day in the church school; a great Father and Son banquet; a great Communion service; a splendid Layman's Day service; a delightful Thanksgiving Musicales by the choir—these and other events we recall with pleasure. There have been some additions to the church since we are here, also some letters have been issued. We are planning to give Christmas due and proper recognition, and we expect to swing hard on the White Gift offering. I urge upon other Church schools that we ought to go after the White Gift offering in a thorough manner, and I try to practice what I preach. Envelopes will go into all of our homes, both resident and non-resident. And our special meetings will begin the second Sunday of January with the pastor in charge. This will be prefaced with careful organization. We have also made fairly good progress in our endeavor to get into all of the homes of the congregation as soon as is possible.

Many of my friends informed me that I was taking up a man's sized job when I accepted the call to Dayton. In reality they were breaking no news to me. I knew it well enough. And I have seen nothing so far to indicate that I was mistaken. If it were a vacation I had in mind, then surely I got off at the wrong station, when I got off at Dayton. There are big problems to face here, as in any forward moving congregation, and there is plenty of chance for constructive work. We are getting our bearings, and it takes time. If God blesses us with health, and wisdom, we are not afraid of the size of the job. And we have faith to believe that the reports from Dayton shall continue to be good, and that large, definite things shall continue to be accomplished.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

LEON, IOWA

I am quite sure we will not be imposing on the good graces of the editor or the Evangelist readers when we take some space to report our work here. Once a year is not very frequent correspondence and yet a year slips by almost before we are aware of it. Am presuming you will be glad to hear from us, as we are always delighted to read the letters from the field and rejoice in the success of every effort. I hesitate to dwell too much on our successes and do not care to tell you our difficulties, for as you no doubt have enough problems in your own church to occupy your thought, so we will endeavor to be modest in our report that you may not overestimate our work. Our second year at this place ended with the month of August and attendance of National Conference. It was a very busy one, with more outside work than we like to do, but it was loaded onto us and gave us a wide field of influence and will indirectly give us more influence for the church; but it all takes time and energy. With a number of outside addresses, president of the school board with a building program, president of the Chautauqua Association and platform manager thrown in and three revival meetings in a year besides a large pastoral field to work, if you think the pastor had any time to loaf around, just try keeping up for a year. We reached a new attainment in a good many ways. Our Sunday school reached a record attendance of 354 with an average through the spring of more than 200, but the summer lowered it a little, and the fall which is usually our best time of the year has been so very rainy and Iowa makes it next to impossible for our country people to attend and this church though located in the county seat, is made up of a majority of country people owing to the fact that three country organizations brought their membership to this church, which was a wise thing to do and gives this church a great field of country people. So a rainy day is reflected in our attendance.

We spent two weeks of our vacation at Winona, a few days in Illinois, visiting relatives, and the rest of the time on the road getting back to Leon in three weeks, about the hardest work of the season. With only two Sundays at home we left for Kansas to hold a three weeks' meeting.

Hamlin

This name may not mean as much to you as it does to me, but here we spent four happy and profitable years as pastor and it was indeed a feast of love to be with them in a meeting, and it seemed that every one treated us better than we could deserve. Here in this little town and the surrounding country is a group of as fine Brethren as I know and they are without a pastor. Their field is small compared with this one, but some pastor ought to be on this field. As long as the Brethren church has places like this without a pastor, she ought not suggest that we have plenty of preachers. We can build as many churches and maintain them as we have men who are able. I put in this little preaching—our greatest need is MEN. We did not reach the people we hoped an and I believe this is one time the weather gives us an alibi, as we had every Sunday rainy and muddy. It was rainy almost the entire time. But we had a splendid meeting and it did our heart good to see some of those faithful saints come several miles through the mud and rain without missing a night. We closed with a communion service. A blessed service. I would like to go back and live among these people again, but I have so much more opportunity for larger service that I presume it would not be right for me to do so. But I do hope they find a pastor; they want and need one so much.

We had one Sunday of regular work and then began our own meeting, this was our fourth successive meeting here, but we put on our regular program with three sermons for each Sunday and services every night in the week. We had good crowds every night and overflow crowds on Sunday nights. As for the visible results we received fifteen into the church by baptism and others will come later. This includes some new families, the very best in the community. So we feel that we had a good meeting.

Our Harvest Homecoming was held this year on the 20th of November. On this day we ask every member to bring an offering and we sell it to the buying public. They bring livestock, grain, fruit, vegetables, foodstuff, candy, aprons, fancy work and whatever they wish to give. We make it a big day; this year our offering was almost $700, last year it was three hundred, next year we expect it to be more than a thousand. We believe giving an offering of the hand as well as of the heart has spiritual value. Our people greatly rejoice in it. We give our church much favorable publicity.

Our cradle roll day is also one of our greatest days when we give every member of the cradle roll a special invitation to come and bring the father and mother and all the rest of the folks. We give them favors on that day and all are glad to see the babies honored. We have had two good years in this field and begin our third with much added strength in the church. We have well nigh doubled the membership in two years of work and in these new members we have some of the most consecrated workers and givers that rejoice a pastor's heart and make him feel his labors are not in vain. Now this letter is too long and if the editor wishes to use the scissors on it I will have no objection. We have some difficulties of course, but the brother pastors can discover them after they are on the field and if we should tell all our trouble it would be gossip and evil speaking and would not be edifying, so we just call them crosses and bear them with rejoicing and tell the good and press on toward the mark of our high calling. May the Lord bless every church and pastor is my earnest prayer.

CLAUD STUDEBAKER.

GRAFTON, WEST VIRGINIA

The Brethren church at Grafton, West Virginia is glad to report the success of its revival campaign which closed November 18. Rev. Thomas F. Howell, pastor of the First Brethren church of Highland, Pennsylvania, was the man whom we were fortunate enough to secure to lead this special series of meetings. Long before Rev. Howell arrived in this city plans had been laid, prayers had been offered and intensive work had been done in the church and community, preparatory to his coming. So when the evangelist appeared he found the church waiting for a great meeting. At the very outset, October 30, Rev. Howell began to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, his first subject being, "The Gospel of Jesus Christ." He wasted no time on preliminaries of any kind, but set to work to present the claims of Jesus Christ upon the soul of man. The sermons were plain, uncompromising and convincing. Christ our Lord was exalted so that none could fail to see him. From the very beginning of the meeting there was good interest and a fine spirit manifested and a good attendance. The weather also was good which added to the further opportunities of the two and one-half weeks of services.

The first break in the services came on the first Sunday when a very promising young man came forward and others were reclaimed, which made every one feel that we were gaining ground. From the very beginning to the last week of the campaign was replete with blessings. Not only were the nonsaved brought to Christ, but the church itself was stirred to more fervent endeavor. November 7 was indeed a most notable day and not one minute of time was wasted—Sunday school, 9:30; preaching 10:30; at 1 P. M. dinner was served to a large crowd; at 2:30 P. M. preaching, after which the ordinance of baptism was administered; 5 P. M. a light lunch was served, after which preparations were made for the Lord's supper and communion. We thank God for this Victory. We believe the spirit of evangelism has been awakened within the church and that many more will profess their faith in him in the weeks that are ahead. The people of the Brethren church and other denominations were elated over Brother Howell through his kindness and fine Christian spirit towards us.

Brother Howell left Grafton the morning of November 19 for his home in Pennsylvania. He left with a place of sincere regard in the hearts of the people because of his untiring efforts among them. We again want to express our appreciation to the Board at Johnstown and Brother Howell and his good wife who so faithfully administered to her duties at home while he labored among us. Our prayers are that they may always be about their Master's business.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP AT GRATIS

There is something satisfying about two pastors getting together and working hand in hand for the advancement of the Kingdom of God. Such was the satisfaction that came to the writer when he was privileged to lay aside the pastoral duties for two weeks and work side by side with Brother O. C. Starn, the hard working pastor of the Gratis, Ohio, church.

When we arrived in Gratis on Monday evening, November 8th, we found everything ready for the announcement of the Good News of the Kingdom. It rained that first night, but there was a fine audience there to greet us. We were not altogether strangers in a strange land, for we had numerous acquaintances in the audience, gleaned from a former visit at State Conference and through other conferences. From the very first we were made to feel right at home. It was not our purpose to bring any sensational messages, but rather to tell the simple Gospel story and we found that this is just what the people wanted. They responded in a way that is only to be judged by those who have experienced the attitude of a people in response to the spoken word.

As the meetings progressed the interest grew and in spite of the fact that the farmers were "up to the neck" in work in the corn, they came consistently to the services. Some driving as far as eight or ten miles and not missing a night. During the first week we had a fine visiting delegation from New Lebanon, led by their pastor, Brother Lester King, and another from West Alexandria along with their pastor, Brother Willis Ronk.

Before I say anything as to results I want to say that Brother Starn sure had his field well worked and ready for the process of gathering the sheaves. And right here I want to say, what so many times I have said and thought, and that is that no evangelist can do an efficient piece of work if the ground has not been thoroughly tilled in advance by the pastor. I take no credit for the results for that credit must go where it belongs—to the workers in the Gratis church. And after all even then the credit must go higher and be given to God himself. It is as if we snatched the words of Paul from his letters and said, "Starn planted; Vanator watered—BUT GOD GAVE THE INCREASE."

The net result was ten added to the church. One by letter and nine by baptism. Most of these were young lives and we know that there is a fine future before those who have thus given themselves to the Master in the very midst of their young manhood and womanhood.

While there on the last Sunday we had the privilege of talking to as fine a bunch of young men as I have ever seen. It is a joy to see a class of young men in any Sunday school, and a greater joy to bear witness to them of the life of the Master.

I surely thank God for the help that this meeting has been to me and deem it a privilege to work with these people in their endeavor to bring in the Kingdom.

I thoroughly enjoyed the social part of my stay with these people and am willing to say that there are more chickens in Preble County than in any county in Ohio. That is, there were before these two weeks in November.

My prayer is that the seed that has been sown may continue to bear fruit throughout the year. May in truth there be "added to the church DAILY such as are being saved."

FRED C. VANATOR,
Canton, Ohio.

LEAD CROSSES PLANTED

The great to-do in the newspapers about the discovery of lead crosses and other relics alleged to prove that a tribe of wondering Jews dwelt in the Southwest for a couple of centuries, long before Columbus made his famous voyage, seems to have been premature. The discovery appears to be a hoax.

The relics are said to bear dates such as "775 A.D." Now, it happens that the use of the letters, "A.D." did not become general until long after the year 775. This reminds us of some bogus pre-Christian coins that were found bearing the date "445 B.C." stamped into the metal!—Scientific American.

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

Those in the brotherhood who must confess with me their negligence in supporting the Evangelist, and through it encouraging the rest of the Brethren, doubtless know what I mean when I say "it is hard to kick against the pricks." Many times I have reminded myself of writing to the church through these columns, but a multiplicity of old duties seem to take the pastoral calendar by storm. But at last this word comes from Oakville.

The Oakville church seems to be ready for winter. Our annual canvas increased over last years' pledges very materially; our Sunday attendance is fair; but best of all, our progress is to be seen in two realms that in which every congregation in Christ should find itself. There is an activity, born of prayer and dedication, in most departments of the church. The Sunday School Cabinet meets monthly with increasing interest and effectiveness. A Teacher's Training Class is conducted by the pastor after prayer meeting each Wednesday. The ten members find the work from Oliver's "Preparation for Teaching" delightful and profitable. Our attendance at prayer meeting and Teacher-training averages eighteen. The Sisterhood and W. M. S. are holding their Mission Study jointly under the leading of Mrs. Fry. Our choir is doing splendidly under the leadership of Brother Kern. The Christian Endeavorers of the Senior society among other plans are beginning Memory Work of Bible verses. The Juniors are progressing nicely under the able leading of Miss Mary Hayes; and the Adult society have very interesting and helpful meetings.

I have not and will not mention the disappointments that come and Satan's hindrances—we all have them and know them without remembrance, and pray for one another. But inspiring to one another are the victories Christ gives us, and the joys in his service. That which cheers us, and you, is the other realm which I said indicates our progress more surely and really than any other. It is the place of prayer. Born of individual need, Oakville congregation has a greater prayer spirit than ever before, we believe. But we are just beginning to awake out of sleep in this regard. The numbers in our prayer services are not great, nor the frequency of our meetings for prayer. But on Wednesday evening, and fifteen minutes before Sunday school, there are those who know that without him we can do nothing. We are growing in that direction, and about thirty in our congregation have pledged themselves to pray daily until the answer comes from God's altar, "Lord send us a revival, and begin in me, for Jesus' sake." Friends, will you not join us?

This letter is extending rapidly, but you will be interested in the annual rabbit supper, which Brother Lowman began in Oakville. It is the custom of the men to cook and wash dishes, serving and entertaining the usually overworked women of our congregation. This year though rabbits were reported scarce and elusive, and ra'n spoiled our fun the last two days, the usual sixty-four rabbits were accumulated by the nimrods of the congregation. The supper was proclaimed the best ever and even the "pie-face quartette" was clapped back for another demonstration of their minstrel ability.

Personal regards to the dear folks in Ankenytown, and way over there in Southern California.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

THE BOY IN OVERALLS

By J. L. Glover

Everything was late that morning. The cow had failed to come up the night before, as was her plain duty, and Tom had to go and look for her. And when she was found and milked, there was wood to get for cooking dinner and all the hundred and one little "chores" about the yard to be done. Tom fed the chickens and fixed the woodbox and pumped water, so that his mother might not have much to do while he was gone; but the odd jobs took so long that he was horrified to find himself with barely ten minutes to get to school. It was a long ride on his bicycle; and if he were late, it would spoil his otherwise perfect record for the month.

"I can't wait to dress," he said desperately. "My overalls are clean. I'll just have to go as I am, mother."

"Go to school in your overalls, Tom?" she asked. "What will Miss Carter say? You never did such a thing before."

"I know, but I can't be late. She'll understand." And, snatching up his cap and books, Tom was gone.

He barely made it. The bell was ringing as he rode into the school yard and, letting his bicycle drop at the steps, entered the schoolroom door just as it stopped. Breathless, he slipped into his seat, uncomfortably conscious of his blue overalls and of Miss Carter's surprised eyes. But he had been in time.

It was the irony of fate that the school inspector should choose that day of all days in the year to visit the school. Usually Miss Carter did not mind his unexpected visits, for she could always depend on Tom to do credit to the school in the spelling tests and problems which Mr. Rowe delighted to spring on the children. And Tom always looked so nice too in his trim knickers, with his curly hair well brushed and his alert brown face. She was proud of him, and he had never failed her.

But today! There was her "brag scholar" in blue overalls trying to catch her eye and signal her not to call on him if possible. Understanding his embarrassment, she nodded encouragingly and called on Ralph Forrest to go to the blackboard. Generally Ralph was good at arithmetic, but today he was unprepared; and although he went to the board unwillingly enough in response to Miss Carter's nod, he failed to solve the problem and sat down confused and ashamed.

Miss Carter was dismayed. Was there anyone else on whom she could depend? But there was not. And at her pleading glance Tom stood up. "I'll try, Miss Carter," he said, and came forward.

The inspector looked surprised, but he said nothing. He looked still more surprised as the boy in overalls solved problem after problem, and the teacher could have clapped her hands.

"Tom Ross is my best pupil," she said afterwards to the visitor. "He was embarrassed today because he had not time to change his clothes before coming to school. He has a perfect record."

"Good!" said the visitor approvingly. "A boy like that will not always wear overalls. He need not be ashamed of them today."

Tom gladly laid down the chalk and sat down, thankful to have survived the ordeal and feeling greatly ashamed of his attire.

But the visitor was not through with him yet.

"One moment, my boy," he said. "I have an announcement to make to the school. A prize was offered to any student in the schools of this county, boy or girl, who could solve every one of those problems unaided. The prize is a scholarship in—College. You have fairly won it, and I am proud to congratulate you."

Tom's cheeks were red with delight and embarrassment, and his hand tingled from the hearty grasp of the visitor; but he forgot all about his overalls when Miss Carter came to him and whispered joyfully: "O, Tom, I am so proud of you! I knew you would not fail me."—Christian Advocate.

"TELL THEM SALAAM"

By A. M. Barnes

India is known as the "land of many races." People of every known human type are to be found there. Thus it is a country of no special nationality. The people of India are not known as Indians in the sense that the people of Canada are Canadians and the people of the United States are Americans.

More than three hundred million people, in addition to British and European residents, live in India. In some portions of the big empire the people are crowded more closely together than in any other country of the world, except China.

Millions of children live in India, and the lot of many of them is hard and piteous. They live in homes which are poorly thatched huts with mud walls built right on the bare earth. The floors, like the walls, are of mud. In the greater number of these miserable huts there is no furniture, not even chairs or tables or beds. The family squats upon the floor and is thankful if at night there is a pile of straw to lie on.

At daybreak thousands of little children may be seen going to the fields, many of them breakfastless, others having partaken of the scantiest portions of food. Their eyes are heavy with sleep and their poorly nourished bodies almost skeleton-like from hunger; yet all day long they are kept toiling at the hard tasks.

In the jute factories of India, where other thousands of little children work, the conditions are just as pitiful. Missionaries and others have found out that many of the children are fed opium by their parents in order to deaden for the time the pangs of hunger and to keep them from feeling the cold.

It is when the monsoons, "the rain-bringing winds," fail to come and the crops are burned up that the most dreadful times come for little children in India. Then occur the terrible famines, in which thousands die in each section of the country. During the last fifty years there have been twenty-three famines in India which have caused the death of close to thirty million people.

A missionary gives us this piteous account of how through the awful conditions that exist at such times parents are forced to sell their children because they cannot feed them: "Repeatedly parents have offered me their children for sale at a rupee each, or about thirty cents. Yet they love their children, even as we love our children. As a result of the last famine children are now being offered for sale as low as four cents each, or for a measure of grain."

Millions of our little friends in India never know what it is to have the opportunity of an education. When there is a chance of going to school, it is generally to one where the entire course of study is in committing to memory page after page of the Koran. In some of these native schools the pupils have to learn the multiplication table up to forty times forty, and there are a number of fractional parts.

For thousands of our little friends, however, in the big empire across the seas happy days have dawned in the opening of government and church schools and in the coming of the missionaries with the story of Jesus and his love for little children. So eager are they to attend the schools, so anxious not to miss a single time from either the day school or the Sunday school, where so many lovely things are taught, even the worst weather cannot keep them away.

A visitor to one of the mission schools in India was asked to talk to the children. When he had finished his talk he asked what message he should take back to their young friends across the seas. "Tell them Salaam, Sahib!" came in a quick chorus. What a lovely message! "Tell them Salaam." That means, "Peace be to you."—Christian Advocate.

JESUS ONLY

And lifting up their eyes, they saw no one, save Jesus only (Matt. 17:8).

Once it was the blessing—now it is the Lord;

Once it was the feeling—now it is his word; Once his gifts I wanted—now himself alone; Once I sought for healing—now the healer own;

Once 'twas painful trying—now 'tis perfect trust;

Once a half salvation—now the uttermost; Once 'twas what I wanted—now what Jesus says;

Once 'twas constant asking—now 'tis ceaseless praise;

Once it was my working—his it hence shall be;

Once I tried to use him—now he uses me; Once the power I wanted—now the Mighty One;

Once I worked for glory—now his will be done!

Bethlehem's Babe the World's Desire

O little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie;
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent stars go by:
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The everlasting Light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee tonight.—Phillips Brooks.

It is not expressing a mere sentiment but a historical fact to say that the Babe born in Bethlehem was and is the desire of all nations. The world was astir with expectation and hope when Jesus was born. Everywhere there was a looking for the coming of a great prince, a deliverer, a savior and teacher of the people. In sacred and profane history this hope is revealed. Among God's chosen people and also among the other peoples of the world there was a yearning for and an expectation of a more exalted ruler and a nobler personage than had ever appeared among men. They were looking for some one who was more than man, some one who would come to them with a message from heaven, teach them the will and way of God, and bring to their aid the power of God. In him were the hopes of the ages centered. He was the desire of all nations.

That desire was manifest among the Israelites from the beginning of their history, indeed they associated it with the very beginning of human life upon the earth. In the opening prophecy of Genesis (3:15) which declares that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head, we have the foregleam of a steadily growing hope for the coming of some one who could redeem men from the power of evil. As God's people grew in numbers and in national consciousness and power, their hope became more and more restricted and nationalistic, and, though at first vague and indefinite—a mere aspiration for better things, it was gradually centered in a great and beneficent person, whose mission and glory were looked forward to and cherished under various idealizations. Isaiah saw him as the "branch of Jehovah" who would protect, purify and give prosperity to his people (Isa. 4:2-6); as Immanuel, a child born of a virgin, and a sign of deliverance (Isa. 7:10-17); as a great light, a mighty deliverer and king who rules with the authority, wisdom and glory of God (Isa. 9:2-7). Micah saw this Messianic hope as a ruler coming from Bethlehem, who was "from of old, from everlasting"; and who should be "great unto the ends of the earth" (5:2-5). Again by Isaiah he is pictured as the "rod" or "branch" out of the destroyed kingdom of David, possessing the spirit, wisdom and power of Jehovah, a righteous king ruling in universal peace (11:1-9). So the voice of prophecy continues on through Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel and to the very close of the Old Testament, pointing out the characteristics of, and expressing the hopes of the people with regard to, the Messiah. For in all these prophecies we have not only the voice of revelation, but of human yearning. Not merely the promises of God but the aspirations of the people are expressed. Jesus was indeed the desire of the Israelitish nation, and of vast numbers of its noblest individuals, the center of all their thought and literature, the source of their strength and endurance, and the hope of brighter and better days.

Jesus was also the desire and expectation of the Gentile world. They did not see with the clearness of the Hebrew prophet's vision the majesty and humility of his person, nor understand so fully the nobility and characteristics of his mission, but vaguely and indefinitely they sensed the coming of some one, and their yearning hearts were looking for him. And as the years passed the intensity of the longing increased. Dr. I. C. Jackson tells us: "Four hundred years before Christ, Socrates in Greece entertained an expectation of the near advent of some supernatural being to be a teacher of men. He said: 'We must wait till some one comes from God to instruct us how to behave toward the divinity and toward man.' A few years later Plato, following his great teacher, spoke his similar expectation, declaring: 'It is necessary that a lawgiver be sent from heaven to instruct us. O, how greatly do I desire to see that man, and who he is.' And in his 'Republic' Plato has recorded one of the clearest of the unconscious pagan delineations of Christ in his famous ideal description of the just man. 'Without doing any wrong,' says the philosopher, 'he will assume the appearance of being unjust; yea he shall be scourged, tortured, fettered, . . . and after having endured all possible suffering, will be fastened to a post, and will restore again the beginning and prototype to righteousness.' About the same time in China, Confucius was predicting to his disciples, 'A new religion will some time come from the West. It will pierce to the uttermost parts of China, where ships have never gone.' 'In the West the true saint must be looked for and found.' This seems a wonderful pre-vision of the approach of the Christian religion from the West, and of the coming of Christ to China from that quarter. In the oldest sacred writings of the Hindus, dating back to a period long anterior to the advent of Christ, we find this prophecy: 'Some day a religion will come from the West that shall be under the protection of the sword, but which shall spread by persuasion.' It is a fact that the Hindus interpret these words as referring to Christianity, advancing as it does under the armed protection of Great Britain, but making its conquests by the persuasion of missionaries." Wherever we go we find this expectation cropping out in prophetic utterances by the men of spiritual vision and understanding, utterances that portray not merely their own vision but also betray the needs and longings of their people for the visitation of God to the earth.

A remarkable thing about this expectation of the pagan world, is the definiteness with which some of the seers point to the place of Jesus' birth and to the purpose of his coming. Virgil, who died about 19 B. C., speaks of the mission of the Coming One almost as if he had read the Gospel records when he writes (fourth Eclogue) that "a child from heaven was looked for, who should restore the golden age and take away sin." Tacitus, Suetonius and Josephus inform us that there prevailed throughout the entire East at about the time of the Advent an intense conviction derived from ancient prophecies, that ere long a powerful monarch would arise in Judea, and gain dominion over the world. From the "Memoirs of Mrs. Judith S. Grant, Missionary to Persia" we have the following testimony: "But the clearest of all these prophecies was one by Zoroaster. The Nestorians say that Zoroaster was a disciple of Jeremiah, from whom he learned about the Messiah, and who in turn taught it to his disciples. As their tradition is remarkably corroborated by Abulpharagius, I will quote his language: 'Zoroaster taught the Persians concerning Christ. He declared that during the latter days a pure virgin should conceive, and that, as soon as the child was born, a star would appear, blazing, even at noonday with undiminished lustre.' 'You, my sons,' exclaimed the venerable seer, 'will perceive its rising before any other nation. As soon as you see the star follow it wheresoever it leads you, and adore the mysterious child, offering your gifts to him with profoundest humility. He is the Almighty Word which created the heavens.'"

It may be explained that this widespread expectation arose through the influence of the Jews of the dispersion and those who had voluntarily made their way into various parts of the world. This may explain the conformity of the hopes of many in the heathen world with those of the Jewish people, but it does not explain the fact that they had such hopes. Jewish tradition and expectation did not create the desire; if it had not been there, if there had been no ready field, Jewish theology would have taken no hold on the pagan mind. The real explanation is to be found at once in the universal god-like qualities of the human heart, and in its universal need. Every soul, however ignorant or enlightened, craves and seeks God. Augustine's prayer is the experience of the race, "O God, thou hast made us for thyself, and our hearts find no rest until they find rest in thee." It is this conscious, aspiring, rising character of man which constitutes his godlikeness and separates him from the beasts. Moreover, man is ever fettered and bound by his earthy nature, from which he cannot extricate himself alone, and he seeks the help of one greater than himself. This universal temper of the mind and heart is born of human need and helplessness, and it grows and gains strength and intensity through contact with sin and suffering, adversity and distress. Men are ever dissatisfied with their unhappy lot and yearn for relief and deliverance, and the more aggravated their conditions the more intensely burns the desire and the more brightly gleams the hope. And that suggests the condition that obtained when Jesus came—society had sunk to a low level, sin abounded, vice was rampant, wretchedness and cruelty, poverty and slavery were as universal as snow in the arctic, faith in the pagan gods had waned and depression had settled on the human heart. In the midst of such a world the Jews went with their hopes and anticipations of the future, and men who had been longing and groping in darkness began to realize the presence of a better light. Their despairing hopes of better things were revived and given direction; their inborn desires for God were intensified and enlightened and their longing souls seemed to sense that in this promised Messiah was to be found their satisfaction.

Thus it was that God was preparing the world for his visitation in the person of his Son, and at the completion of that preparation, "in the fullness of time," Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, and was welcomed by representatives of the expectant, godly souls of both Jews and Gentiles. In the manger-cradle was found heaven's answer to man's unquenchable desire for a manifestation of God in the flesh.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother and Sister Foster are rejoicing in the prospect of soon being on the mission field in Africa and bear witness to God's goodness in removing difficulties and bringing them on their way.

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Bryan, Ohio, reports a successful evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother C. C. Grisso of Warsaw, Indiana. Twenty souls accepted Christ, nineteen of whom united with the Brethren church. Besides this result, the community was greatly stirred and the church inspired by the forceful preaching.

The First Brethren of Philadelphia is rejoicing in the completion of church improvements and redecorations amounting to nearly five thousand dollars. They have gone forward from victory to victory under the capable leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, last year making their property debt-free and this year making it beautiful. Three confessions are reported.

Brother H. E. Eppley writes of his experiences as song leader in the campaign at Third church of Johnstown, where Brother J. L. Gingrich, the pastor, did the preaching. It was a successful meeting and we shall hope to hear more definitely from the pastor as to the results. This being Brother Eppley's home church, his was a most enjoyable experience. He is now engaged in a meeting at Listie, Pennsylvania. He says he still has some open dates for the spring.

Brother G. E. Drushal, superintendent of the school and mission at Lost Creek, Kentucky, writes of the visits Brethren Ankrum and Sickles, both of whose addresses were greatly appreciated. He also points out the upward trend of public education in Kentucky and of the effect it is likely to have on private schools, an effect which will doubtless soon be registered in the policy of missions engaging in public school work.

From the thriving mission church at Winchester, Virginia, comes a report of a successful evangelistic campaign conducted by Elder E. B. Shaver, who is possibly the oldest preacher in the active service of the church, and yet one who does not seem old, judged by his activity. Eighteen souls were added to the church as a result of this effort. Brother Emerson J. Rohart, who was recently ordained in the presence of his congregation is the earnest and industrious pastor of this flock. Brother E. L. Miller, pastor at Maurertown, delivered a highly appreciated address on the occasion of the ordination. Brother Rohart's services are making for himself a place of confidence and high regard in the hearts of his people and his work is bearing fruit in the growth of the church.

A good letter comes from our correspondent at Louisville, Ohio, where Brother R. F. Porte is the capable pastor. The Sunday school is growing and is in need of larger quarters, which they are working to secure. Brother L. P. Clapper is himself the resourceful superintendent. The pastor conducted an evangelistic campaign which resulted in five being added to the church by baptism. The Christian Endeavorers have divided into two groups so as to give the really young people better opportunity, a good move, it would seem.

Prof. J. A. Garber, in his Sunday school news requests the schools of the brotherhood to measure themselves as they enter upon the work of the new year, using the Standard of Excellence as the measuring stick. It is a good thing to do, so that it may be determined whether a school is really making progress or merely marking time. We gladly commend "The Educator," our own Sunday school workers' magazine and teacher's monthly, to which Secretary Garber refers, as well as the "International Journal." This is a good time to get acquainted with them, if you are not already. Send White Gifts to Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, Ashland, Ohio.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us another installment of news from the college, in which it will be noted with pleasure the service the Gospel Teams are rendering to nearby churches. At Ankenytown one team was instrumental in leading ten souls to Christ. Through the representations of Prof. E. G. Mason, the college finds itself able to meet the new exacting requirements of the State Department of Education and with this assurance doubtless the attendance of prospective teachers at Ashland College will continue in large numbers.

The faithful and efficient pastor of the Fort Wayne, Indiana, mission tells that the work is going forward. The church is to be organized this week. It has at present about forty members, but it is hoped that other Brethren people in the city will yet identify themselves with this work. Rally Day saw seventy-five present in the Sunday school. The members recently showed their regard for their pastor and his wife by a "donation." The attached verses express a splendid sentiment on the part of the members toward both the pastor and their new church.

White Gift offerings are to be sent to Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, Ashland, Ohio. Also we attach the following because of inquiry as to whom to send various monies. For General Home Missions to Wm. A. Gearhart, 1106 American Building, Dayton, Ohio; for Layman's work, to U. J. Shively, Nappanee, Indiana; for Foreign Missions to L. S. Bauman, 1330 East Third Street, Long Beach, California; for Education Day offerings to Martin Shively, Ashland, Ohio; for Publication Day offerings to R. R. Teeter, Ashland, Ohio; for Brethren Home to Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana; for Superannuated Ministers to J. J. Wolfe, North Manchester, Indiana.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, founder of the Brethren mission work in the Argentine, writes of progress and also of challenges to greater things on the part of the church. Three were recently baptized at Rio Cuarto. A remarkable case of answered prayer for healing is reported at Hernando, a town of 8,000 inhabitants, where the door is opened to a most needy field. In the two missions in Laboulaye there are over one hundred children in the Sunday schools. At Alejandro the attendance at the services crowds the hall. Let us thank God for the progress, and pray that he may somehow make possible the entering of the doors of opportunity that are continually opening to us.

Brother H. F. Stuckman favors us with a report of the work at the splendid church at Goshen, Indiana, where he is the wide-awake pastor. The Homecoming and debt raising campaign was put across in good style, with the assistance of Brother A. T. Ronk. A personal evangelism campaign resulted in ten confessions, five being received later, a total of fifteen souls were added to the church. It is interesting to have this witness to the value of personal evangelism, a type which is coming into large use today. Dr. J. Allen Miller was greatly appreciated in a week of Bible lectures. Brother Stuckman recently gave evangelistic assistance to Brother W. I. Duker and his good people of Elkhart, where a successful campaign was conducted.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Day Star

By Robert F. Porte

"We have a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts." 2 Peter 1:19.

Christmas marks the beginning of a new day. The worry and care of the world is forgotten for the moment as we rejoice in the new born Babe of Bethlehem. What a time it was when Jesus was born! The world was lost in uncertainty and perplexed by a multitude of unanswered questions. There appeared a Star,—a Star of wondrous beauty; it was seen by the ever watchful astrologers of the east. These magi came in oriental splendor seeking the meaning of the Star they saw. In a lowly place they beheld a mother pondering as mothers do, over the great event of the birth of a Son. There were strange and wonderful revelations attending this child. For many years Jewish maidens had lived in purity hoping they might become the mother of the Messiah. At last Mary, beautiful, pure, and good, knew her Child was the chosen of God. He received the devotions of eastern kings and their costly gifts. His birth without any earthly herald, was told abroad by the heavenly heralds. His birth inspired a song, a smile, of beatific wonder and a hope unclouded,—yes, a new day was come to the sorrowing, sin-cursed world.

The coming of Christ in Bethlehem was marked by a new light. Revelations were made to the Shepherds, to the Wise-men, to the old prophet Simeon, and out from the little town of Bethlehem and Jerusalem, the capitol of a small country, to the wide world the light of God spread because God became incarnate in the form of human flesh. All the Hebrew prophets had said seemed impossible and had to be believed by those of superior faith. The apostle Peter says, "But we have a more SURE word of prophecy." The coming of Christ shed light upon all which God's servants had spoken in the days of the Kings, by the wonderful works and the heavenly testimonies which were characteristic of the earthly career of Jesus. For the first time mankind became acquainted with the truth that he was akin to God and that God was not unwilling to acknowledge this kinship. A new view of other nations was born with this new light in Christ. Instead of the provincial, tribal idea so prevalent in ancient Israel, there was begotten the spirit of world brotherhood. Jesus cultivated this teaching in his parable of the Good Samaritan and the healing of the daughter of the Cananitish woman. The light of the Star of Bethlehem is increasing and will rise to its full zenith in a perpetual day of righteousness and peace to all people and among all nations.

Thousands are interested in having a real "Merry Christmas." The day to many becomes only a day of passing pleasure. The day following is a day of regret for the indulgences of the day before. The secret of Christmas is Christ. Two-thirds of Christmas is Christ

ELDER R. F. PORTE
Pastor The Brethren Church, Louisville, Ohio

and he is the center of it all. The day of the birth of Christ did not mean much to Herod and many others. The day passed as had many others without bringing to the consciousness of the people the angels' phrase, "Unto you is born this day a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Christmas is not a day of meaning to anyone who does not know that a Savior was born and the meaning of his birth. It is entirely out of the spirit of the day to be selfish. Each of us should ask himself, what have I given the world for this Christmas-tide? Have I given kind words and acts and helped to smooth life's rough road for some weary traveler? This is worth-while. In the doing of good we reap good for ourselves.

The Day Star Appeared to Great Souled People

Not to the high and haughty, or the rich and proud, but to the meek and lowly of heart. It was a wonderful night when it seemed that God had stopped the clash of armor and sword to usher in the Prince of Peace. Prophets had foretold his coming but the leaders of political and social life were not looking for him. Out on the hills near Bethlehem where David the hero king of Israel as a boy tended his father's sheep and where later as the poet he spoke in poetic verse, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork," there other shepherds heard the strains of music sung by the heavenly choir announcing the birth of the Deliverer of Israel and of the world.

The one great fact in the earth's tragic experience is Sin, and in the trail of sin, guilt, condemnation, death, and "after death the judgment." Like the ceaseless refrain of the troubled sea the burdened heart of humanity through the long ages of the past has voiced the despairing cry, "Who shall deliver us?" The announcement to the humble shepherds was, "A Savior which is Christ the Lord." God could not have made a more appropriate gift to the world than to give the world a Savior. The Christmas season marks the birth of our salvation, for there is no salvation in any other.

The world has been amazed because the followers of Christ have been lowly men and women. In saying this we do not mean these noble souls were mediocre, they were rather men and women of great spiritual possibility. I am amazed at the deep, searching insight of Simeon as he beholds the Child Jesus and says, "A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." The humble fishermen who became the first earthly evangelists of the doctrines of Christ proved their greatness of soul by the work which the Holy Spirit did through them. In the Christ himself there was no beauty or comeliness that would attract the notice of the world but underneath the rugged humanity of our Lord was the Deity, Creator, God. The Day Star cannot arise in hearts where low hanging clouds of conceit and selfishness obscure the glory and brightness of God; all this must be dispelled by the will of man so that the light of Christ may shine in. The Bethlehem Inn is not the only place where Jesus was omitted. Many hearts are dark because they refuse the light of Christ, the Day Star.

The Day Star Comes With Power to Change

The blackness and darkness of spiritual night has covered the world. Spiritual night settled upon the nations and sorrow filled hearts. The coming of Jesus has made a wonderful change. He has transfigured the world and many lives by his coming. Mr. J. J. Brown, a survivor of the ill-fated Titanic tells of the dawning of the new day after the awful night of sorrow, separation, and death. She says, "As the morning began to dawn in the gray light we saw a wide expanse of water and great mountains of ice all around us. Then as the sun began to drive back the mists and shed a canopy of glory against the darkness and sorrow of the passing night we saw the Carpathia and our deliverance." What a moment that must have been to those lost people upon the open sea! We may get a little idea of the great beneficent work which the coming of Christ did for those who were seeking deliverance—it changed things for the believing heart. Deliverance which had to be accepted by faith now became a visible reality.

God's Christmas gift has not been received unless the life be transformed. Christ is light. He is the Day Star of the coming age of peace and good will to all men. You have probably looked out of the window at night, it was dark and nothing to be discerned. You looked again as the dawn was coming, there are objects but still masked in mystery, then the sun arose and cast a halo of glory upon the earth. The world became new, common things were transfigured in the golden light of the rising sun. May we not imagine what a change is wrought when Jesus comes into a life darkened by sin? Perhaps you have seen lives transfigured by the glory of the Son of God, the Savior. The presence of light makes a wonderful change.

The Rising Day Star Marks the Re-Birth of Humanity

Dr. Cowan says, "Christmas is the peri-helion of love's orbit." It marked the place in the orbit when the love of God came nearer to mankind than at any other time. In giving his Son because of his love, God gave himself to the world. We cannot have God by rejecting Christ or crowding him out of our life. Humanity was born of Adam but was reborn in Jesus Christ. God comes to us in the Person of the Babe of Bethlehem. This is man's second chance to become like the Creator. Traherne, a mystic, says, "Want in God is treasure to us. For had there been no need, God would not have created the world, but he wanted angels and men." There is indeed something to cause thought in the above quotation. But leaving the suggestion included in the above quotation we need to marvel that God so loved the world that when mankind sinned and transgressed his divine law he sent his Son in the Person of the Babe of Bethlehem to be the Savior of "Whosoever would believe on him." Who can imagine the depths of God's love rising as a Day Star above man's sin and iniquity to usher in a new day for penitent mankind? Christmas portrays to us incarnate Love, rich beyond our comprehension. We all feel the impulse to give something to some one else. It is a divine impulse born out of the spirit of the day when God gave his Son.

On this natal day of hope and good will we should recall that it is also a day of new things. The day witnesses the birth of the father of a new race. Adam's sin pitched the race into the depths of sin, the Son of God opened the way of everlasting life and happiness. "Behold I make all things new." In the book of the Revelation we read of a "New Heaven and a New Earth wherein dwell eth righteousness." God is re-creating mankind and after that he will re-create the earth. Sinful people cannot make a heaven, for heaven is the abode of righteous people. "Except ye be born of the water and of the Spirit ye cannot enter the Kingdom of heaven." "Ye must be born again." Christ was born in the form of flesh that we might be born divine through the Spirit. The meaning of this season and the proper understanding of the Christ and his work will come to those who experience a new birth within their own hearts.

What error and darkness there is where Christ has never been born! How much of suspicion, ill-will, hatred there is where the Day Star has not yet risen. A Mohammedan man visiting New York looked with eyes of criticism upon our great city. He criticized the newspapers for printing news that should not be printed, but finally he was shown a large hospital where many sick were cared for. "But this is for your own people," he said. He was then shown a bed occupied by a Turk. "How much does he have to pay?" "Nothing," was the reply. Then said this Mohammedan, "I have found the Christ at last and I pay homage to him." The little glass tube on the side of the great boiler tells the amount of water in the great boiler. The manifestation of love toward our fellow men tells the amount of the love of God within us. It was near Christmas, and the mistress of a mansion was tired, nervous, and almost prostrated with her Christmas planning. Her laundress entered and bid her the time of day and said, "I have nothing to give you, so I thought I would give two hours to do your ironing." The tired lady accepted this as the richest gift for the poor woman gave herself. This is the spirit which should be manifest at Christmas. This is the spirit of the Christ and the spirit which will please him and make a Heaven on this earth.

During the world war after a night of fire and death the morning began to dawn as the armies moved into new positions. Between the hostile forces the dark outline of a French farm house became manifest. As the dawn increased and the sun came up something was seen moving over the grassy lawn. It was a small child, a mere babe. The soldiers of both armies saw the child. All firing ceased and peace came upon the field of blood and carnage. They watched the innocent little thing creeping over the ground, grasping a dandelion in its tiny hand. A soldier leaves a trench and goes toward the child, a cheer arises from both armies. It was a moment of peace all because two hostile armies saw a babe which called holier sentiments from their hearts and quieted all thoughts of hate. May the vision of the Babe of Bethlehem rise as the Day Star upon this sorrowful, sin-cursed world. In him is peace and good will to men.

Jesus the Son of God

By Samuel Kiehl

To a certain man who was blind from his birth to whom Jesus had given sight he said, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? He answered, Who is he Lord, that I might believe on him? Jesus said, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he (the Son of God) that talketh with thee. He said, Lord I believe. Believe what? That Jesus is the Son of God? That belief (coming from the heart (Rom. 10:10) is the faith that overcomes the world, and saves repentant sinners (1 John 5:5). There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved (Acts 4:12).

Hebrews 1:8 reads thus, Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever. The Father addressing the Son as God. Since the Son cannot be God (the Father) he is God (the Son). Two distinct personalities; the Father, and the Son. To illustrate, Mr. Smith has a son. Two separate persons; Smith the father, and Smith the son. Neither one is, or can be the other. The words the Son of God, and God the Son are synonymous terms. Jesus the only begotten Son of God is God the Son, not God the Father, according to Psalms 45:6, 7, and Hebrews 1:8. Supplying the words understood, John 1:1, 2 will read, In the beginning was the Word (the Son of God), and the Word was with God (the Father), and the Word was God (the Son). The same was in the beginning with God (the Father). The preceding exposition, as the writer sees it, is so plain that wayfaring men . . . shall not err therein (Isa. 35:8).

The following are some of the sayings of Jesus concerning God (the Father), and himself (except words in parentheses). God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son (John 3:16. I am the Son of God (John 10:36). My Father is greater than I (John 14:28). My Father worketh hitherto, and I work (John 5:17). This is the work of God, that ye believe on him, whom he hath sent (John 6:29). Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath eternal life (John 5:24 R. V.) This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God (as their heavenly Father), and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent (as their Savior and Lord) (John 17:3). All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him (John 5:23).

The following scriptures teach that Jesus who was born of the Virgin Mary is the Son of God. The angel to Mary said, That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God (Luke 1:35). At Christ's baptism a voice from heaven said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased (Matt. 3:17). At his transfiguration a voice out of the cloud was heard, saying, This is my beloved Son, . . . hear ye him (Matt. 17:1-5). Jesus, I said, I am the Son of God (John 10:36). John the Baptist who baptized Jesus said, I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God (John 1:34). John the evangelist says, These (signs) are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ. The Son of God (John 20:31). Peter to Jesus says, Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God (Matt. 16:16). Paul after his conversion straightway preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God (Acts 9:20). What do you preach?

God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself (2 Cor. 5:19). He is also in faithful believers who confess that Jesus is the Son of God according to 1 John 4:

15, Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. First John 5:5 tells who overcome the world by asking a question, and giving the answer, thus, Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? What do you believe?

To say that Jesus is God contradicts the Father whose voice from heaven, at Jesus' baptism, said, This is my beloved Son (Matt. 3:7). As his transfiguration a voice out of the cloud was heard, saying, This is my beloved Son (Matt. 17:5). Jesus, who said, I am the Son of God (John 10:36). John the Baptist, who said, I saw . . . that this (Jesus) is the Son of God (John 1:34). John the Evangelist, who says, These (signs) are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God (John 20:31). Peter to Jesus, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God (Matt. 16:16). Paul, who straightway preached that Christ is the Son of God (Acts 9:20). Since these holy persons affirm that Jesus is the Son of God, dare we, who are sinful by nature, say, The Father, The Son, John the Baptist, John the Evangelist, Peter, and Paul did not speak the truth when they testified that Jesus is the Son of God? No, NEVER!

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son who saith, I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me (Heb. 1:1, 2; John 14:6). It is written, He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life (1 John 5:12). That is final. Do you have the Son? If not, receive him as your Savior and Lord today. Now is the accepted time. Tomorrow may be too late. Delay is dangerous.

Addenda—The angel Gabriel said to the Virgin Mary, . . . Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; . . . and of his kingdom there shall be no end (Luke 1:30-33). The kingdom continues, but in due time Christ shall deliver the kingdom to God the Father according to 1 Corinthians 15:24-28) reading thus, Then cometh the end, when he (Christ) shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. . . . And when all things shall be subdued unto him (Christ the Son) then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him (God the Father) that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. Then heaven and earth, yea, all the vast expanse of the universe will be filled with his glory; and every son and daughter of the Lord Almighty shall shout for joy (2 Cor. 6:18). Be it so. In Jesus' Name.

What Christmas Means

Bring on the Christmas toys. Loud chant the carols. Sweet under the crisp midnight stars let the chimes ring out their songs of the epiphany. Not possible is too much joy at the happy Christmas day.

But more than holly and mistletoe, more than brilliant glow worm lights in Christmas trees, more than wreaths and festoons and the shouts of children as the much pilloved figure of Santa Claus rushes up the aisle blowing his white mustache out full in front of his face and reaching his hands into his bag of toys is the meaning of Christmas. Of course Christmas means also the dead dimpled fingers, our dear dead mother's hands that never did know a manicure; and of course it means gratitude to the Great Giver. But more and greater things, even than these Christmas means. It means, peace; peace on earth—devotion to peace and that a devotion which will fight for peace. Christmas means "Good Will." It means a world of good will, men of good will, civilizations founded on good will, good will scattered like seed in the field wherever men are and are related one to the other.

Christmas celebrates the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem—yes, but not alone a birth twenty centuries ago, but a new birth in the year of our Lord 1925. Christmas bespeaks the birth of Christ today; the birth of the Christ Spirit, the Christlike life, the Christ abroad—Christ where the toilers are, and where their masters are, and where the tenements and sweat shops and furnaces, midnight corridors of the mines are, and where sit the men who direct them. The fingers of that Christ Child are smiting the walls of ancient wrong, the walls of privilege, the pedestal of the aristocrat, the hereditary parasite, the old ideas of justice and contracts and profits. These little hands, those tiny hands of the Christ Child—that later had spikes driven through them—are smiting as never before everything that is not fair, everything that wrongs anybody, everything that crushes.

And good people, we ought to help those little hands. We ought to be ashamed to stand by and let those little hands bear it all alone. What kind of a Christmas is that which satisfies itself with toys and the shouts of favored children, our children dancing about the Christmas tree, and the songs of the choir and the speech of the preacher, lovely as all these things are..

We want a Universal Christ, an interracial Christ, a Christ of all mankind—a Christmas that is a proclaiming of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man; whose text is the Sermon on the Mount, and whose life is the fresh epiphany incarnation.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTMAS STORY

God's love freely giving
His Best to the earth;
God's Son gladly taking
A peasant child's birth;
God's hosts singing "Glory"
And "Peace" from on high;
God's star a bright beacon
In Bethlehem's sky.
Earth's King in a manger
Is cradled to rest;
Earth's wise men come seeking
A heavenly Guest;
Earth's shepherds, with haste, bring
The angels' glad word;
Earth's sin has a Savior—
'Tis Jesus, the Lord.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

When God Came to Earth

By C. C. Grisso

TEXT: "God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. 1 Timothy 3:16.

This is Paul's way of presenting the great doctrine of the incarnation. In John 1:14 he gives us his word picture of the same doctrine. "And the Word became flesh and dwelt, (lit, pitched his tent—tabernacled) among us." But it remains for St. Matthew to tell just how it was that God came to earth in human flesh in Matthew 1:23. "Behold a virgin shall be with child and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel which being interpreted is, God with us."

I shall raise no controversy with those who do not believe in the doctrine of the virgin birth. Their quarrel is with the Word. For if any person desirous to know the truth will turn and read the whole story of the angel's announcement to Mary and Joseph, they shall find that this child "was to be great, and be called the son of the highest and the Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever: and of his kingdom there shall be no end." "And they shall call his name Emmanuel". God with us.

Hebrew El-lo-heim, or the same name given Jehovah in Genesis 1:1. Thus this child is given the name of the creator of the universe. Now, if I did not believe in the doctrine of the virgin birth, and the divine incarnation, I would be entirely unable to explain the above scriptures.

This doctrine of God coming to the world in human flesh necessitates the doctrine of a virgin birth. For if he was born in the natural way we would have only a human being. But Jesus the son of God came to earth in human flesh. Let us yet note another scripture, John 17:5, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me . . . with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." I have been asked, "How could God become Man?" And we shall not attempt to explain it. It is not necessary. Just believe it. It is not difficult to answer. "Why it was so." When man sinned a wide gulf was fixed, such as could not be crossed by man. But God could come over, and he did. And God's one great purpose in the gift of his Son to the world is to reveal himself. He wants his people to know him. But men cannot know him. They have never seen him. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Thus men can not see God, and know him and appreciate all his wondrous love to us "in the face of Jesus Christ." The story is told of Mrs. Alexander that during a great meeting when Dr. Torrey was pleading for poor, lost, outcast sinners to come and accept the love of God, that one of these poor fallen sisters of the street was heard to say, "I don't believe it. Nobody loves me." This woman overheard the statement and said to her, "Yes, God loves, Christ loves," but she said "no, I cannot believe it." Finally Mrs. Alexander said to her. "I love you," and she planted a kiss on her cheek to prove the sincerity of her love, and the poor woman accepted Christ because she saw him in the face of the soul-winner. So St. Paul tells us that "He made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." See him as a babe in the manger. See him standing before the doctors at the age of twelve. Listen in again to that prayer in Gethsemane. Go a step farther unto Pilate's hall—move out toward Calvary's hill, up which he treads with the sin of the world bound in a mighty bundle. Hear the voice from yonder cross, as it comes down across the centuries, "Father forgive them," and ask, "Who is this?" And the answer comes back, "He is God come down out of the eternities, down to the realm of time and space, so that men might see him and know him." We could never have stood before God, no more than we can look into the face and glare of the noonday sun but we can look in the face of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. Again, God knew that one of the greatest needs of the human race was to have an example; a perfect example. Who could he of all the sons of men send to earth to become a perfect pattern, and a sure guide in all life's affairs. Moses, David, Joshua, the apostles? No, it must be one more perfect than these. It must be one upon whom the searchlights of twenty centuries will find no fault. A perfect example of holiness, of love, of sacrifice. God knew that the thing that would break and melt men's hearts, would be the story of the unselfish love of Jesus. How many of us have been won to him by that love? He might have come to this world as a king. He might have been born in a palace. He might have taken the nature of angels. But he didn't. Blessed be God! "it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." How close that comes to our hearts. "Like unto his brethren." Think of us, and then of God wanting to be like us. Some folks find so much in the Bible difficult to understand. Here is the most marvelous thing in all the world—Jesus the eternal Son of God, infinite in riches and glory, for our sakes became poor: was born in a stable, of poor parentage, in order to become a part of humanity, a tender friend and brother to all alike. That's the sweetest message ever told to listening ear. Can it be that men yet live whose ears are deaf to that song of the angels when they sang: "Fear not for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord?" Oh that men might still know that the way to the Father is by the way of Bethlehem's manger, and by the way of the cross, and by the way of the empty tomb. For, "I am the way . . . No man cometh unto the Father but by me." He wants men to see in God a great, wise, compassionate Creator, and loving Father, interested personally in each living soul, anxious to guide and bless and save, anxious for love, and fellowship and communion. Anxious to have all men attain unto their highest powers and possibilities. That is the kind of a God, Jesus the Son, came to make known to men. God has revealed himself, and made known his ways from the day he called to Adam until now. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son." "This is my beloved Son hear him." The times through which we are now passing demand of us a vigorous re-assertion of this truth. Christ is God: come down to earth in human flesh, even in our own natures. This is the Christ of Bethlehem: the Christ of Nazareth; the Christ of the early church; the Christ of the New Testament; this is the Christ that has revolutionized the world, and under whose guidance the great host of the redeemed shall go forth conquering and to conquer, "until the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of God's dear Son." This Christ is none other than Immanuel, God with us, his blood "cleansing us from all sin." Brethren, this is the most glorious gospel ever heard, or it is the greatest delusion, to which man has ever listened. But we that are his know, that it is not a delusion. By his life and his miracles, by his death and resurrection he has proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that he was the son of God. But the most convincing argument to me is that Christ has been born in my heart; that one day I was a poor, trembling sinner, and with simple child-like faith I opened my heart to him and he came in to dwell. And it is this that we need, the incarnate Christ, in our hearts, living his life of faith, and grace, and truth, lifting us out of our own selves, even out of lives of anger and hate and sin of every kind, and making us like unto himself.

"Dear dying Lamb, thy precious blood shall never lose its power, Till all the ransomed church of God, are saved to sin no more."

Would you desire to accept a Savior like that, if so, it is your privilege, and rejoice in his saving, keeping power throughout all eternity. Though his blood has redeemed and washed the blackness from millions of sin-stained hearts it is just as powerful today as when it was shed on Calvary's cross. 'Tis true. Believe it, accept it, for one of these days this same Christ, who "manifests God in the flesh," is coming back to earth. Not to be shamefully treated, not to suffer and die and shed his blood, but to see how many since his going away have prepared for his coming. To see how many have "washed their garments and made them white in his blood." For, "He shall appear a second time, apart from sin . . . unto salvation," to those who have heard the message of the first advent and believed it, and trusted in his finished work, and anxiously await his coming. Even so, Come, Lord Jesus! Amen.

Growth in Church Loyalty

By Hazel Keiser

Because thou art lukewarm and neither cold or hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Revelation 3:16.

If we are Christians, not only in name but in reality, we must desire a growing willingness in the work of our Lord. God's word to his people is, "So then because thou art lukewarm and neither cold or hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." How can people consider themselves hot if, for any reason whatever, no matter how selfish it may be, they find an excuse for being absent from the house of the Lord. Yet how often this is true. Many from every congregation find it hard to find a convenient time to get to church even for a Sunday's service. It is raining too hard, if perchance the sun has remained under a cloud and God has previously sent a little shower as a blessing to these same people. And if the sun shines too hot it is too suffocating to go to church. At times it is too cold to go, yet the same weather permits selfish pleasures. Maybe that is the only convenient day of all the week, because of not daring to sacrifice business on week days, to make a visit or entertain company. To entertain on Sunday will not be desecrating the Lord's Day as much as to put off our work until Sunday. So we must work during the week, dare not sacrifice that, and entertain on Sunday, no harm then. But why is that not equivalent to desecrating the Lord's Day by work? Sacrificing our duty to him in order not to lose a pocket full of money from a day's labor.

Another excuse works itself out likewise. Some say,

"We have worked so hard during the week, we will stay at home today and rest. We will be doing no harm to spend the Lord's Day in quietly resting, yet they could better afford to sacrifice the close communion with their God, and so be rested for the oncoming week's work."

If the Lord's followers would call these people "cold" Christians it would not please them at all. Yet they cannot declare themselves as "hot". So what betetr can be applied to us? If we so allow indifference to crop into our religious life, than that spoken by the Lord himself, that we are "lukewarm." The words of Jesus as above written, then, will have surely already caused a shudder to pass over us, "If ye are lukewarm, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

On considering these words only, we might think that God is an unjust God. Surely if we attend his services now and then, and keep our church pledges paid up, except when we must have the money for something else, surely the Lord will give reward for the small effort. But the word of God tells us that the kingdom of God is likened unto a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth, but when it is sown, it groweth up and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it. Just so in our lives, it is stated that no one is so sinful but that there is a spark of good in that life, and so if rightly encouraged this spark of good may be developed as the grain of mustard seed, until the kingdom of God has been firmly built in that heart. As that kingdom grows within the heart, it is natural that the individual will give of his efforts to extend that kingdom to others hearts and in so doing will often find his way to the house of the Lord.

Growth in church loyalty, is it then possible in all cases? Certainly so, with the spark of good as inborn within us all, and God's hand allowed to control it. We have one thing to fight but that not alone. By God's help we can overcome indifference, and allow the one grain of good to grow and take seed until it has become, as stated by Jesus, "as the grain of mustard seed, shooting out great branches so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadows of it. We will not only be made better but all nature will feel the influence of our lives. As a great writer has stated, "God works in mysterious ways his wonders to perform," so we may not have been able to realize any remarkable changing power within our lives, but God himself will seek that development as it worked out in our inmost soul.

"Knowledge becomes power only when it is made to do something worth while. With too many of us it is just knowledge."

*The world stands out on either side
No wider than the heart is wide;
Above the world is stretched the sky—
No higher than the soul is high.
The heart can push the sea and land
Farther away on either hand;
The soul can split the key in two,
And let the face of God shine through.
But East and West will push the heart
That cannot keep them pushed apart;
And he whose soul is flat—the sky
Will cave in on him by and by.*

Lesson 1—Israel Journeying toward Canaan

Scripture—Numbers 10:11-36.

In this lesson we witnessed the start from Sinai, and Moses made the proposal to Hophni, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good." As they set forward the ark of the covenant went before them and rested where they were to stop.

Can our church honestly say to those without, Come thou with us and we will do thee good?

Lesson 2—The Report of the Spies

Scripture—Numbers 13:1 to 14:45.

Twelve spies are sent to Canaan; ten bring back a discouraging report; two see all the difficulties, but say that with God's help Israel is able to take the land. The people are overcome by the spirit of pessimism and rebel against Moses. Jehovah threatens them with pestilence and disinheritor, but Moses intercedes. After the people realize the door is closed they make a mad attempt to enter Canaan and meet a crushing defeat at the hands of the Amalekites and Canaanites.

Servants of an omnipotent God have no right to view themselves as grasshoppers.

Lesson 3—Moses Honored in his Death.

Scripture—Deut. 32:45-52; 34:5-8.

Moses exhorts the people to obey the law; he learns of his approaching death; he bade farewell to the people and blessed the tribes. God gives him a view of the promised land and then he dies in the land of Moab.

Is it the lot of most men to labor and not to see the end of their labors?

Lesson 4—Joshua, Israel's New Leader.

Scripture—Numbers 27:18-20; Josh 1:1-9.

Moses appoints Joshua as his successor at the direction of Jehovah, who charges him to lead the people over Jordan, points out the land of promise and urges him to be strong and courageous, since he can count on divine help even as did Moses. He is exhorted to obey the law; therein is the secret of success.

No man is indispensable. "The great Craftsman can always find another tool sharpened and ready to his hand."

Lesson 5.—The Evils of Strong Drink (World's Temperance Sunday).

Scripture—Prov. 23:29-35.

A picture of the drunkard is given; the appearance and effect of wine set forth; then further pernicious consequences of wine drinking.

If a man is at his best when he leads a non-alcoholic life, then the Eighteenth Amendment becomes a national declaration of independence, and the man who resolutely is seen at once to be the apostle of human liberty.—Senator George Wharton Pepper.

Lesson 6.—The Fall of Jericho.

Scripture—Josh. 6:12-20.

Directions were given for the capture of Jericho; it was to be encircled a certain number of times. Jehovah would give them the city for it and its people were devoted to destruction, with one exception, that of Rahab. This being the first strongly fortified city, its complete destruction would have a terrorizing effect upon whole of Canaan.

The right of the Israelites to Canaan and the rightfulness of their destruction of the people lay in the command of Jehovah which had its moral basis in the worth of Israel to the accomplishment of his righteous purpose for the world.

Lesson V.—Caleb's Faithfulness Rewarded.

Scripture—Josh. 14:6-15.

Canaan was divided among the twelve tribes, but Caleb who, with Joshua, only remained of the twelve spies who spied out the land and who was promised an inheritance, was given an individual portion—Hebron and the surrounding district. His old courage was still manifest in the selection of one of the hardest-to-conquer portions of the land.

Dr. Frederick A. Atkins says, "To attempt a difficult task is a moral tonic—to achieve it, is a radiant joy."

Lesson 8.—Joshua Reviewing the Covenant.

Scripture—Josh. 24:14-25.

Joshua reminds the people of God's help throughout their history and because of that they owed him sincere, loyal and undivided service and challenges them to choose between Jehovah and the gods of the lands. The people respond readily with a choice of Jehovah, but Joshua insists on a most solemn, reaffirmed and recorded vow.

The church is today challenged to a choice between right conduct and sincere devotion of Christ and the worldly standard of the masses.

Lesson 9.—Gideon and the Three Hundred. Scripture—Jud. 7:1-25.

Gideon is instructed to sift his army; neither the fanthearted or the careless make good soldiers. God does not need numbers, but courage, watchfulness and strict obedience. God uses not only men of courage, but men of wisdom and strategy.

Gideon is a shining example to modern reformers. We need men of his type to go against the tobacco evil, liquor drinking, vicious movies, gambling and dancing.

Lesson 10.—Ruth and Naomi.

Scripture—Book of Ruth.

Naomi, a Jewish widow, decides to return to Bethlehem, urging her widowed, Moabite daughters-in-law to remain in their native land. Ruth insists on going with her and vows life-long allegiance to her mother-in-law and to her God. Her devotion is rewarded with a happy marriage to a godly man of Israel and with becoming the ancestress of David and David's greater Son.

Lesson 11.—The Boy Samuel.

Scripture—1 Samuel, chapters 1-3.

Samuel's call of God at a very tender age was due in large measure to the influence of a godly mother. Serving Eli as "an altar boy" he grew up in the atmosphere of the sanctuary and became one of the greatest prophets of Old Testament history, receiving his first prophetic message as early as twelve years of age, when he spoke God's judgment on the House of Eli.

Lesson 12.—Samuel the Just Judge.

Scripture—1 Samuel, chs. 7 and 12.

The Israelites still in subjection to the Philistines are admonished to repentance and confession, then instead of depending on the presence of the ark as on the occasion of their dire defeat, they turned to Samuel who directed them to prayer and sacrifice, and after such preparation they gained a decisive victory through the help of the Lord. In memory of the victory Samuel erects an altar called Ebenezer (Stone of Help).

Church School News

Evangelist readers have already become acquainted with the plans for and objects of the rapidly approaching White Gift Offering. With the loyal and generous help of the Editor we have been able to present this worthy cause through our church paper to the majority of Brethren people. Gifts from individuals have already been sent to Professor M. P. Puterbaugh, the treasurer. He probably will receive gifts from schools during next week, as some of the schools will lift their White Gift Offering on Sunday, December 19th.

A letter of explanation and instruction from Professor Puterbaugh was included with each package of White Gift envelopes sent to the several church school superintendents of the brotherhood. The package also carried a self-addressed stamped envelope, which will make easy a prompt and early return. Since the White Gift envelopes provide for decisions for Christ and his church and various life-work decisions, we shall be glad to have the superintendent report the offering of Self and Service as well as of Substance.

January for many persons is the time of taking inventory and of making plans for the coming year. While most of our church school people are in that frame of mind, we are asking both officers and teachers to check up on their attainments thus far and to plan for further achievements during the months immediately ahead. Their attention is being directed to the Standard of Excellence. It will be found in the January number of The Educator with certain explanations relative to each point. This publication also contains valuable articles from President William H. Beachler, Professor C. L. Anspach, Rev. Melvin A. Stuckey, Dr. G. C. Carpenter, and others.

This would be an opportune time for schools not now taking this worker's magazine of our own to become acquainted with it and to subscribe for it. An arrangement has been made with The International Council of Religious Education whereby The Educator and The International Journal of Religious Education can be secured through our National Sunday School Association for the usual price of the Journal alone, namely, two dollars per year. We regard both publications as being needed by and useful to Brethren church school workers. We hope that all of our schools will take advantage of this very good opportunity to secure the two magazines for the price of one. Subscriptions should be sent to the undersigned.

The little Jesus dropped the glistening things
(The place smelled sweet of frankincense and myrrh),
And Mary pressed her darling close to her.
It seemed so very strange!
Like any other baby's were the rings
Of soft damp hair upon his tiny head,
And yet—those Three, the stately camel-tread,
The Star that did not change!

She hid the Magi-gifts half tenderly,
Half jealously, for Joseph in distress
Groaned of their splendor and their uselessness
And would have proffered them
Back to their givers, could such rudeness be.
But they were gone; the rested camels sped
Busily eastward now, and rumor said
Not by Jerusalem.

The warning came, "To Egypt!" and within
Her simple bundle Mary stored the gifts
(They scented it like apple-blossom drifts In May), but Joseph frowned.

things dad and mother tell you to if you are made to do them."

That was a little too much, so Mary had to make some reply. "Well, I guess you are just the same. You are no better than I am."

"There you go. Now you are mad, I suppose, just because I told you the truth. I know a good resolution. Why don't you resolve never to say unkind words to your dear brother Tom? Ha, Ha, Ha."

About that time their mother appeared at the door, and called to them. "What are you children arguing about now? If you aren't going to slide, come on in the house. It is too cold to stand around outside when you aren't doing anything."

When they reached the house, Mary said, "Mother, do you think that it pays to make New Year's resolutions?"

"Well," said mother, "this is the way I feel about it. If we are going to make New Year's resolutions, we ought to be very careful to make good ones. Then after making them, we ought to try very hard to keep them. I don't think it is a very good thing to make a resolution one day and then forget all about it the next day. We should be sincere about our promises whether they are made to ourselves or to others."

"Yes siree, isn't that just what I told you? Mother, I told Mary that the trouble about her resolutions was that she never kept them." Tom held his head high and looked very superior after saying this.

"Well, I just won't make any if everybody is going to fuss at me about them. What difference does it make anyhow?" Mary felt unhappy and she was trying to hide it by being gruff.

Mother wanted to guide her children aright and one of the things that worried her most was their being unkind to each other. When she saw both of them were out of humor she told them, "I think one of the best promises I ever made on New Year's Day, I made when I was about your age, Tom. My sister and I were always finding fault with each other and whenever we disagreed on any subject we would fuss until neither of us were happy. So, we decided together that we would both make the same resolution to be kind to each other and see if we could keep it. We took a piece of paper and we worked quite a while until we had it worded just to suit us. I think that really helped both of us. Of course we missed sometimes, one time one of us would break it and another time the other one would. But, we really tried to keep our promise, so we were much better than we had been the year before."

Tom was smiling when his mother finished. "Mother," he said, "I had just told Mary that she ought to promise not to say unkind words to me during next year. Of course, I was kidding, but since you have

Why Holly is Used as Christmas Decoration

Holly has its place in the legends, and at one time many carols were composed in its honor.

European peasants think that a sprig of berried holly which has been used in church decorations will bring luck to the house; so when the evergreens are removed, they beg for a spray. Holly used for decorating houses must, on the other hand, be burned after January 1, or ill luck will follow.

In some parts of England, as in Ireland, girls seek omens from burning the Christmas decorations; and say the more noise they make and the brighter they blaze up, the warmer is the affection of their lovers. In some places it is considered unlucky to burn the Christmas decorations, and they are thrown away instead.

The holly tree was dedicated to Saturn and was said to have many healing virtues. A pretty legend is handed down about the first Christmas tree. When Ansgarius preached the "White Christ" to the Vikings of the North, the Lord sent his three messengers, Faith, Hope, and Love, to help to find the first tree. They were to seek one that should be as high as hope, as wide as

Some "I Wills" for 1927. Josh. 24:15

"I wish I could think of a good New Year's resolution for this year." Mary was sitting on the porch steps looking far away and thinking very hard as she said this.

"Ha, Ha, Ha! That's a good joke," said Brother Tom with whom Mary had been sliding. "Don't you remember the resolutions you made last year and that you didn't even keep them a week. What is the use of making resolutions anyhow. After you have made them, you just live like you always have. You do the things you want to regardless of others and you do the

En Route to the Field

On the Congo, October 4, 1926.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

God has so wonderfully blessed us, in leading us out into his service, that we desire to testify to his faithfulness, render praise for his grace, and thanks for the many answers to prayers that have ascended to the Throne of Grace on our behalf.

"But without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

These words have been very precious to us; because when the Lord first laid the Foreign Mission Field on our hearts, naturally speaking it seemed impossible that we would ever get there. First there was the question of my health, then our ages; and many, many other things too numerous to mention. But as time went by, the spark of love that had been kindled in our hearts for Africa burned into a flame, until at last our whole beings burned with a desire to go to that land, to which we felt the Lord calling us. But how were the many obstacles to be overcome? How could we persuade the Foreign Missionary Board, that we felt called of the Lord when they were receiving more applications from volunteers than the money on hand permitted sending forth? The answer came to us through the verse quoted above.

First, we must believe "that he (God) is," and that "without faith it is impossible to please him," third, "that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." "God is," he has all power, all wisdom, he leads his children according to his will; (if they will to follow). Therefore this burning that he had put into our hearts must be worked out by him according to his will; in his own time and his own way. All that we needed to do was to believe, "that he is," and realize that "without faith it is impossible to please him."

When the Lord was on earth on different occasions he rebuked his disciples for their lack of faith. He was unable to do many mighty works, because of their unbelief, and over and over the children of God are admonished, "to have faith" and "to believe." Therefore we decided best just to trust the Lord, and to let him work for us, because he is able to do "exceedingly, abundantly above all that we ask or think." And that "he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." The reward came, but not until we had waited and prayed two years. My physical condition was such that the Foreign Mission Board would not accept us the first year, but God has worked in such a wonderful way that my health is perfect. Then the question of the language arose and was overcome by putting us on probation, but we continued in prayer, believing that God would undertake for us all along the way. And he has, for as I write this testimony we are slowly wending our way up the Congo River.

It has not been a path strewn with roses, but it has been a path of blessing. God overcame so many obstacles for us before we left home, that when things go wrong we never have a feeling that perhaps we have made a mistake; but we know that God has brought us thus far, and believe he will keep us all the way until the work he has for us is finished. He does reward the faith of his children, he showers blessings all along the way. Our testimony and plea is for those who feel called of the Lord, and who have obstacles in their way. It may be ill health, lack of funds, lack of encouragement from their pastor, board or loved ones in the church, or in the home. But just rest in the Lord, believe "that he is," "that without faith it is impossible to please him," and that "he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." And he will bring to pass HIS WILL for you, as he has done for us, "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it."

MR. AND MRS. J. H. FOSTER.

Argentina

It is a pity that our six native pastors are not able to write in English so that Evangelist readers might have their reports directly. They write interesting and encouraging letters. Their work is being blessed, and while no work is free from difficulties, yet on the whole there is a steady growth toward self-supporting missions.

This week Brother Sotola writes that one day he felt called of the Lord to visit Hernando again. This is a flourishing town of about 8,000 inhabitants, eighteen miles from Cabrera. He went in the auto purchased by the Cabrera believers, and on arriving found one of the group of believers there very ill. The doctor had said that he could not live through the day, and the relatives were gathered from other places, having been summoned by telegraph. But the sick man had not given up hope. He had prayed and had said that Brother Sotola would come to pray with him. When Sotola arrived he said, "I told you he would come." Brother Sotola first read the Scriptures to the crowd and explained them, his words meeting with approval, and then prayed. I think he also anointed the sick man, but am not sure. The result was that the man at once began to get better and is now well again. The incident has made a great impression on the relatives and the town and there is an increased demand for meetings there. Brother Sotola is eager to go, and the only question is that of the expense. The faithful group of members at Cabrera are having a struggle to raise the $500 for the auto needed so badly in their work, and have also begun to pay for their own literature and cannot do more at present. Hernando is an atheistic, wicked town with no mission and only this little group that is beginning to be interested. Perhaps we can get a little help from them without frightening them away. If not we will have to leave this door standing open without entering, as our resources are strained to the utmost for work already established.

Carlota is a promising field, but we have had to care for the work there without further burdening the Board. I have gotten some help for the rent from Carlota, and the believers at Alejandro help by sending Brother Reina to preach on Monday evenings.

Brother Istueta writes that he has again visited Levalle in order to distribute tracts in the cemetery on All Saints day, which is Decoration Day down here. This is a good town of about five thousand, some twenty miles from Laboulaye. He writes that he now has over one hundred children in the two Sunday schools in Laboulaye and that they are attempting to pay for all their literature even though they have this year spent a lot for books in the Sunday school library.

Reports from Alejandro indicate that the mission hall is too small for the crowds that attend.

Brother Yett reports visiting towns with the Bible Coach, of six thousand or more inhabitants, which are without even a priest or Catholic church. The pampa district is developing with amazing rapidity and offers a tremendous opportunity for the Gospel.

Here in Rio Cuarto I have baptized three more converts—a father and two sons. The father has been a victim of the vile tobacco slavery for forty years, but is now free. Our work is steadily growing in numbers and in financial and spiritual strength.

Sister Nielsen is visiting other missions this month and will doubtless write her impressions. She has been a valuable worker.

The Christmas Tree That Satisfies

No human being, of himself is satisfied. For this reason, Christ came into the world. Last Christmas, Paul Rader sent to his personal friends a strikingly beautiful Christmas message. He said in part: "How beautiful a type of our loving Lord is the Christmas tree. It is cut down, as he was, for the use of others; cut down and taken from his home to our home for joy. His cutting down on that cruel cross, becoming a curse for us, satisfied—yes, praise God! fully satisfied—every claim against us. The Christmas tree sparkles with iridescent light, cheerily, merrily, brightening the room and the happy faces; but he is light with all its glow and glory of color, cheering, lighting, warming, comforting, delighting. His light alone satisfies; for it alone can put away all darkness, letting us walk in the light as he is the light. This light alone brings fellowship. Loneliness cannot reach us—he satisfies. The Christmas tree is loaded with presents. He came to give gifts to men—the more abundant life for spirit, soul, and body. In him and through him for us today are gifts, gifts, gifts for every need. Our names are written on them, but we have never opened them. Will you with me this Christmas draw up close to him, 'thankful, oh so thankful, dear Lord,' and take! take! take! 'For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.'"

We have been enjoying the satisfaction that the Christmas tree brings for so many years, we are wondering if that enjoyment may not be tinged a little with selfishness, in view of the hosts of God's children living in darkness and sin, to whom we have never sent the "Good News!" May this Christmas find our hearts more thoughtful of others and more concerned about those who have never known the satisfying joy of Christmas.

GERMAN WOMEN TEACH MISSIONS

The women of Germany are making their influence felt in all phases of life. The improved conditions in politics, in communal welfare, in all matters of public interest, are to a very large extent due to the activity of the women. One of the most interesting of the developments of recent months is the activity of the women teachers in the public schools along missionary lines. The evangelical teachers of religion are united in an organization which publishes its own periodical, a paper of high merit in the articles it contains. The president of the association is Oberin Magdalene von Tiling, who is prominent in all forms of women's work and is a member of the Prussian Parliament. The January number of the periodical referred to contains four articles on missionary questions. One teacher writes: "Missions belong to the schools, for their own sake and for the sake of the children."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

Another song of Thanksgiving is ringing in our midst. In fact we are so thankful that it required one whole day to properly give vent to our feelings. On November 28 an all-day praise service was held in our newly renovated church.

For the past year we have blushed at the sad state into which our church building had fallen. In our efforts to clear off the mortgage we were forced to neglect necessary repairs. But with the Mortgage out of the way we have set to work to make our "debt-free" church a "beautiful" church. We feel that we have succeeded. Our new carpet rejoices our hearts as we enter our newly varnished pews which gleams forth a shining welcome as we take our seats. Our brightly gilded radiators and our new electric fixtures shed warmth and brightness and best of all, a soft-toned coat of paint has covered all the ugly streaks that previously screamed at us from the walls and ceiling. In order to attract the outsider into our spic and span church we have placed a new illuminated sign over the door.

The entire cost of these renovations ($4,800) has been met by either cash payments or pledges, in the following apportionment:

From church members,	$3,000
From church budget,	1,000
From Sunday school,	500
From Adult Classes of Sunday school,	300

Total, $4,800

An exceptionally fine program was arranged for the day. Our pastor, Brother Miller, preached in the morning upon the Book of Philippians. At the close of this service six people rededicated their lives to the Master. Brother M. A. Witter, pastor of the Third Brethren church, Philadelphia, brought us a helpful message in the afternoon. A union meeting of Endeavorers was held at 6:30 P. M., followed by Brother Miller's evening message upon the topic, "Is Mussolini the Anti-Christ?" A baptismal service followed the sermon. At the close of the evening service 3 souls accepted Christ.

Since many of our people live at great distance from the church, dinner and evening luncheon were served. Much credit must be given the trustees and their wives for their ability to provide and serve two excellent meals. About 200 people were served. Sisterhood girls proved very helpful as waitresses.

However, it is the spiritual feast of the day that we remember and prize most. God had indeed been good to the Philadelphia First church. Once more we sing meaningfully "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

THE BRYAN REVIVAL

Our Editor made announcement of the Bryan Revival some time ago, hence we imagine that our readers will be pleased to hear a word concerning it.

Our special campaign was all we anticipated in every respect. We knew that our field has been closely gleaned for the past several years, yet in spite of this the Gospel message found receptive soil and when Evangelist C. C. Grisso, of Warsaw, Indiana, left the field, there were just even twenty folks who had been reached. All are now identified with the church except one, who will count the step which he made a re-consecration, and remain in his own church, where he had been a member for years. It is right to say that a few of this number came by statement from the old Bethesda church near Pioneer, which has not been functioning for several years.

Brother Grisso was a powerful preacher. He heaved close to the line. The word was presented without fear or favor. The entire church and community were pleased and mightily moved with interest because of the forceful preaching. Yet one thing was noticeable, when the pressure was heavy, Satan won victories with some folks by inducing them to remain at home. However there are dozens in this community who have again heard the word in all its power, with a great appeal from the evangelist and the church, therefore no charge can be laid at our door.

We believe that the church was much benefitted by this meeting over and above the additions to the membership. We make this statement, because the church was ready for the meeting and also was interested in it, from start to finish. Time will not permit emphasizing the place of prayer, personal work, special music and the financial side of this meeting. They all had their place and were carried out in an acceptable way.

Two impressive services have been held since the evangelist left us; one the baptismal service which was witnessed by a considerable audience, the other was the Communion service last Sunday evening. Some said it was the most wonderful service they had ever experienced. One brother who had driven twelve miles said it was worth going twice that distance to attend such a service. We are glad indeed that folks so love Jesus and his word that they are willing to obey that which he has commanded.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA, THIRD CHURCH

To the writer this is home. It is the place of residence of mother and many relatives and friends. And while the location has been changed it is the "Home Church."

Therefore, coming to the Third church to be in charge of the music during a revival campaign was looked forward to with pleasant anticipations. Now that the meeting is closed the backward look is not disappointing. Every minute was a pleasant one. It was my first opportunity to work with Brother Gingrich, the pastor, and our fellowship was most congenial. He does not shun to preach the whole gospel with a positiveness that is convincing. The people are also congenial and friendly. The entertainment? Did you ever try to eat two Christmas dinners per day for a period of two weeks? And then on top of these try to eat breakfast every morning of something you are especially fond of? Such was their entertainment. Thank you Third church, I shall not forget your hospitality.

Parsonage

A new and modern parsonage has just been completed here. It is complete in every detail. It is beautiful, substantial, commodious, and comfortable. Fortunate is the preacher who is privileged to live in it and serve the people who made it possible.

Communion

The closing service on Sunday evening was the observance of the holy communion. This service was most impressive. It was conducted in a very quiet manner giving each communicant time for reflection and meditation. At the close the writer was asked to sing again the solo of the morning. The invitation was extended and while the third verse was being sung a father accompanied his daughter to the front where she made the good confession. What a beautiful picture!

Next

On Monday evening, November 24th, I will begin a meeting at Listie, Pennsylvania, to be in charge of the music and do the preaching also. An interest in the prayers of the Christian people is desired. A few dates in the spring are yet open. I would be glad to correspond with any church desiring the services of a preacher and song director combined. Address L. B. 266, Winona Lake, Indiana.

H. E. EPPLEY,
Preaching and Singing Evangelist.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

There is never a lack of something to report, but there is a lack of time with which to report the things which we have been doing. Goshen always has a very full program. Immediately following Conference we began to plan and work toward our Rally day in the Sunday school. We arranged to have Homecoming on the same day and endeavored to raise the balance of indebtedness on our lately acquired property. All these things were prayed up and with the fine assistance of Brother Albert Ronk of Winona Lake, we went over the top in every way. Counting the folks in the kitchen and those who straggled in too late for the report, we had five hundred in Sunday school. The offering was twenty-five hundred dollars, and more than three hundred took dinner with us at the noon hour. Brother Ronk had charge of the Sunday school hour, and brought the message of the afternoon. The pastor preached in the morning service.

Immediately on the heels of this great day, we began a week of personal evangelism, something entirely new with us. We had twenty volunteer workers who went out to make calls on the unsaved each evening during the week. On Friday evening we had baptismal services and administered the rite to ten adults. These with others who came to us the Sunday following made the total for our efforts, fifteen. We centered on folks that we had worked with for a long time; all who came were adults, six of them husbands. It was highly gratifying to us. Dr. Miller came to us from the College, for a week of Bible lectures. Speaking both afternoon and evening. His Sunday audiences were large and appreciative. The week days were very stormy, and we found the folks a little timid about venturing out. Although some nights were almost impossible, we had a creditable attendance each evening. Dr. Miller rendered us unusually good service, and one of the things we had been wanting for a long time, was realized in his visit to us. He has a host of friends here who remember him for his sacrificing service to this people, when the church was passing through a severe crisis. He helped me beautifully in our reception of members the first Sunday he was with us. I am convinced that where we have such a group of consecrated personal workers as we are able to gather together here in Goshen, the personal evangelism program is very worth while. We do not get the unsaved into our revival services these days, and they are scarcely reached unless we go prayerfully to their homes. Just now I am closing a revival meeting with the Elkhart brethren. The services have been largely attended. The people have a mind to work, and I have never seen a more glorious revival spirit manifest than here. They are standing by loyally, and souls are being saved. It is a pleasure to work with the Elkhart laity and pastor. They know how to help, and are willing to work.

Our own work here in Goshen is surely moving forward. We are badly in need of more room, and will be supplying that need shortly. In fact plans are to be worked out very soon to meet this need. Our people are harmonious and are offering the heartiest support to their pastor these days.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

School closes December 17th and classes are resumed Tuesday morning, January 4, 1927. Most of the students will either go home or go to visit friends. At least one Gospel team will be in service over the holidays. Several Gospel teams were out over the Thanksgiving vacation and all report good services and rich spiritual blessings. The one at the Ankneytown church report some ten conversions. There are also several girls' teams.

We were blessed recently by the visit of our Brother Sickel from South America. He spoke to the students and also twice at our church. He also advised with our students relative to mission work and altogether his visit was a benediction.

Professor Anspach, who is now in the University of Michigan working on his Doctorate, was here over Thanksgiving advising with us relative to our Normal work. He reported a good and busy year. He will either stay there over the summer or enter Columbia University in New York City.

Professor Mason, acting registrar, recently returned from Columbus where he went to secure approval and recommendations from the state office relative to our educational courses. The State has imposed new and rather hard conditions on us here but we will be able to meet these conditions, according to the conference between Professor Mason and the State office. Inasmuch as much of our summer and Saturday work is in the field of education, we have to follow very closely instructions from the State office if these courses are to continue and if they were dropped, our finances would be considerably crippled.

The girls of the College are planning the usual Christmas party for the orphans of the County home, located near Ashland.

The Holidays will offer some of us a time for needed rest. Also to make some slight repairs on the plant. During this vacation, the Summer School announcement will be gotten out and mailed in the latter part of February. It was impossible to plan its publication until after Professor Mason consulted with the State office.

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

Perhaps a few items from this city may be in order at this time. Things are going I suppose about as fast as we could expect them to go, under the circumstances.

It must be remembered that we have never yet had an organized church here. We are now in a position to do so, and on December 16th we intend to organize the First Brethren church of Fort Wayne.

We have at this time about forty members, but we still have a goodly number of Brethren who have not yet identified themselves with the work here, but we hope they will do so in the near future.

Our Sunday school is growing and on Rally Day we had seventy-five present and $14.00 collection.

These good people also gave the parson and his wife a real old-fashioned donation which was of course very much appreciated and when the time arrived, after spending a pleasant evening together, we simply said, Call again.

We also had a banquet in the basement of the church, but on account of the heavy rain we did not have as large a number to attend as we had expected. Still we had forty-eight at the table and had a fine address by one of the prominent attorneys of the city. The following is a poem written by Miss Mamie Leonard and sent by request.

J. L. KIMMEL.

"GOD'S PLAN"

Dear friends we are glad to see you today
In our little new church, on our first Rally day,

And while you listen, a tale I'll tell
About this church we all love so well.

Rev. J. L. Kimmel is our pastor here
And to each of us is very dear,
He came to us when we were discouraged and blue
And all our hopes he did renew.

We had worked for many a year
In the Master's cause so very dear,
In a rented hall, we sang and prayed
On the week day nights and each Sunday.

We prayed for a leader to come some day
And help us on our upward way,
Our members were few, but we wanted to grow

And have a church, where we could go.

Many were the plans that we did make
But they all seemed so big to undertake,
So we grew discouraged and very blue
But—our Father in Heaven all about us knew.

He had a plan, we now do know
For to Muncie, his thoughts did go—
And called Rev. Kimmel to come this way
To preach for us on one Sunday.

Rev. Kimmel came, he preached, he prayed,
And the need in Ft. Wayne on his heart was laid,

He asked God to guide him and lead the way
Then he came to Ft. Wayne to stay.

God did direct, and he followed the way
And that's the reason we have today
Our little new church we all love so well Where Rev. Kimmel the Gospel Story tells.

And we are so glad you are with us today
In our little new church, on our first Rally Day.

We hope you will enjoy this service today
And we invite you to come again next Sunday.

And may we all give God praise each day
As he leads and guides us on the upward way,

And never forget in the hour of need
He will always help us, if his voice we heed.

LOUISVILLE CHURCH NEWS

If I remember correctly, the Evangelist readers last heard from Louisville about six months ago, so we thought it might be of interest to tell what has transpired since that time.

The attendance at Sunday school and public worship kept up during the summer months very commendably and was indeed encouraging to both pastor and superintendent.

On October 10th we observed Rally Day with an appropriate program, the main address being delivered by Brother A. L. DeLozier, of Ashland. The promotion exercises, in charge of our elementary superintendent, Mrs. Floyd Miller, were held in conjunction with the Sunday school rally. Mrs. Miller and her corps of teachers had a very fine program prepared and every number was well rendered. The elementary section of the Sunday school is doing fine work and are very much hampered for room and modern equipment. This is one of the greatest needs of our church at the present time and we are working and praying that the time will not be far distant when our dreams will be realized. The children are not only asking for this improvement, but are really working and saving their nickels and dimes and putting them into the remodeling fund. The ladies of the W. M. S. are another loyal lot of boosters for this fund. If the men of all of the Brethren churches would have half the "pep" the women have—forward steps would not be such a hard task.

Our pastor, R. F. Porte, held a two weeks' evangelistic meeting, beginning October 31.

No Louisville pastor ever presented the truths found in the Word of God more forcibly than did Brother Porte during this series. Through his effort and the prayers and personal work of a few of the members, five members were added to the flock and were received by Holy baptism last Thursday evening. Two others would have been baptized at this time but could not on account of sickness. Brethren, pray for the work at this place that others who are still outside the Kingdom might accept Christ and spend their energy in the noblest work on earth—bringing others to Christ.

We think our Christian Endeavor Society recently took a forward step. For a number of years we have noticed that it was a difficult task to get into our society the younger folks of the Sunday school and church. Finally we came to the conclusion that perhaps it was our own fault—the older group. Feeling that the younger folks would feel more free to lead meetings and take a more active part at the Sunday night prayer services, we decided to divide the society into Group A—the younger folks, and Group B—the older folks. Group A meets in the C. E. room at the same hour Group B meets in the church auditorium. It made our hearts glad last Sunday night to see so many of the really young folks in attendance in the Group A meeting. New officers were elected for each group and we are certain that this plan is going to work out satisfactorily and we suggest that other societies give it a trial if they have difficulty in getting in the young folks.

The Sunday school is preparing the Christmas pageant, "The Angels' Message to the World" which will be presented on Thursday evening, December 23. The White Gift offering will be received at this service.

REVIVAL MEETING AT WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

The special evangelistic services which were closed December 5th were specially blessed of God. Thanks to God for the prayers of the saints for the lost. May God help every saint of the brotherhood to realize what a great blessing comes to those who definitely and with faith and works intercede for others. Should we not be urged to continue in love and prayer when we dwell upon the thought of Christ's never-failing intercession for us?

During these meetings there were eighteen additions to the church, seventeen of these were confessions for the first time. Ten were adults, several past middle age, one a mother of six children, who is thankful that even now, long after her thirteenth birthday when she wanted to accept Christ but was hindered by her mother, God in his love and mercy has saved her.

The success of these meetings is largely due to the faithfulness and earnestness of the preaching and visitation of Elder E. B. Shaver of Maurertown, accompanied by the pastor. Brother Shaver is one of the pioneer clergymen and organizers of churches in the Shenandoah Valley. He is one of the oldest preachers of the brotherhood, a man approaching the hundredth mark, and yet preaching with remarkable vigor and power. He stands out as a scholar as well as an earnest exponent of the old-fashioned, fundamental religion. The dear brethren in the Shenandoah Valley hope and pray that this man, whom some call the century old preacher, may not only reach that happy age, but may upon that bright and happy birthday have power to proclaim this same Gospel fearlessly and in the same love and power of the Spirit. Brother Shaver, we all throughout the brotherhood, wish you many more happy years of service and blessing. The church at Winchester wishes you great peace and strength and many more years, if Jesus tarries long. They thank God for you and for Brother Miller and his help. May God prosper you and every one who helped to make these meetings a success. Thanks to everybody who made a contribution and a special vote of gratitude to you who remembered us daily at the throne of grace. Continue in love and prayer with special remembrance of our pastor.

The service of baptism was held Saturday afternoon when the pastor baptized thirteen. Through the kindness and love of Brother E. L. Miller who led in the initiatory service of the pastor, it was a great success. Thanks to you, Brother Miller. There are still others with whom the spirit is working. Let us continue to pray for them and their yielding to the Lord soon. The church expresses deep gratitude for all friends and their gifts toward the work here. At present we need a piano. Maybe some one in the brotherhood would like to have a part in this new work by having this as a memorial of their love. God bless you if you choose to help. Write to

The Pastor, E. J. ROHART,

AN ORDINATION SERVICE

The first Brethren church of Winchester, Virginia, which just opened last May rejoices in having been able to attend and to participate in a very special and impressive ordination service held in this new edifice on Tuesday evening, November 30th. The occasion was a rare spiritual treat and blessing to us because we witnessed the ordination of our own pastor. We consider it a rare privilege because many churches go through generations without being favored with such a token of God's grace.

The committee on ordination reported a very satisfactory examination of the candidate, Emerson J. Rohart, and stated that he not only passed a thorough questioning, but also has the necessary requisites which make for the full proof of a spiritual servant of the Lord.

Rev. E. L. Miller, who delivered a very able and scriptural ordination address, also commented very highly on this brother as a worthy and devoted servant of the Lord.

Rev. G. C. Carpenter of Hagerstown, Maryland, was glad to hear the testimony of Dr. M. E. Miller, prominent eye specialist, and Irving B. Linton, a prominent lawyer, both of Washington, D. C. These men helped Brother Rohart in a three days' meeting, which proved a blessing to all who heard these men. They are not only learned men in their own professions, but are real witnesses for Christ and the Gospel. Their lives show what Christ can do and will do for a man in business or in the professions. Thanks to God for business men who have zeal for lost souls. Many of us preachers are put to shame when we meet such men. Both of these men spoke very highly of the spiritual character of Brother Rohart.

A very large congregation attended this service, in fact, many were turned away, unable to get seats. The meeting was opened with the singing of several old and yet new spiritual Gospel hymns. Prayer was offered by Rev. George Copp of Strasburg. Rev. Rohart sang very effectively a solo, which he was called on to repeat. It was entitled: "There's no disappointment in Heaven." After the address by Brother Miller on the theme, "The Minister," which was thoroughly enjoyed by all and of particular blessing to preachers and laymen, Elder E. B. Shaver led in prayer, while other ministerial assistants surrounded and laid hands on the candidate. This was followed by the Moderator's charge to the newly ordained pastor, and then a closing hymn, "I love to tell the story," closing with the benediction by the pastor.

Make Way for the King

*Way for the King—make way!
This is the King's day;
Haste to the crowning.*

*Weave him a garland of olive and bay.
And they wove him a crown—of the thorn,
Was such garland as this by a King ever worn?*

*Still he was King!
Way for the King—make way!*

*Way for the King—make way!
This is the King's day;
Lift him on high, where a King should be.
Yea,
And they lifted him high;—'twas a tree
That they gave him for throne on the hill told us about your resolution, it really sounds like a good one to make."

"Do you mean that you want me to make that kind of a resolution and you not make one yourself?" Mary questioned.

"No, of course not," said Tom. "Let's get a pencil and paper and work out our resolutions like mother and her sister did."

Both of the children felt happier and were soon busy. Their mother smiled as she watched them and down in her heart filled with love for her children, she too make a resolution. "I am going to help those two dear children to keep their promise for it will help all of us so much."

love, and that bore the sign of the cross on every bough; so they chose the balsam fir, as it met their requirements better than any other tree in the forests.

It was usual at Roman weddings to present the bride with a wreath of holly, significant of the warmest congratulations.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

News items have not appeared for some time now. Reason, too busy, and when it could have been done, too tired to do it.

Since last report, we have had some notable visits. The first of these was the visit of Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the Oak Hill Brethren church, Oak Hill, West Virginia. He came in an official capacity, being the newly elected member of the Kentucky Committee of the Home Mission Board. He gave his address on Evolution while with us. This was well given, and he well held the attention of the audience while giving his address. Brother Ankrum's visit was enjoyable and helpful, and we should be glad to have him come again. We also addressed the students at the morning chapel service, these talks being very helpful.

The next visitor was that of Clarence Sickie, our South American returned missionary. He gave his illustrated lectures on two nights and gave us a talk on the South American field the other night. His visit was very helpful and enjoyable, and his presentation of the Brethren field in South America, was well done. At the close of this last lecture, five of our young folks volunteered for life service.

The communion services were observed by the church here, Sunday, November 14th. This was peculiarly a blessed service, there being a goodly number out, and our Lord's presence in the Holy Spirit seeming very real.

The attendance at Sunday services still holds up fine. Sunday, the 5th there were 105, this being somewhat more than one year ago the same day.

On Friday the 3rd instant, the writer united in the sacred bonds of matrimony, at the Presbyterian church at Beattyville, Kentucky, Orie C. Landrum and Genevieve McDonald, in an open church service. The groom is one of our local boys, the bride's former home being California. This is a very promising couple, and we bespeak for them a good future in their service for humanity. These young people became acquainted at Los Angeles, California. They are a splendid example of the yielded Christian life.

On the 19th and 20th of November, the writer attended an educational conference at Lexington, Kentucky. This was a State meeting, and was addressed by notable educators, Dr. Tygert, the United States Commissioner of Education being one of them. The writer clearly saw again some things which we believe the brotherhood ought to know. Some of these are:

1. The conception of education is rapidly changing in Kentucky, as in all Southern States.
2. This changing conception is placing more and more emphasis on the importance and work of the public school.
3. And that more and more this public school is destined to do in the mountains of the South, what it is doing outside the mountains, and that means that there will be less and less use for the private school, especially elementary and secondary school work, only as such.
4. That there is no disposition yet visible to do away with the private school, and that it has its place and work.
5. That place and work must be a special work along certain lines, doing regular elementary and secondary school work only as incidental, i. e., to draw the young.
6. For our own work it means:
 - A. That we now have one special work, that of the teaching of the Bible.

B. That we are now facing a situation, when we need to take on some more special work, and that this cannot be delayed very long, if we do not seriously suffer for the same.

C. That there needs to be better equipment provided. This last also is a very pressing need, the coming of the graded road being one of the things which is emphasizing this need.

Somehow, we believe that these needs will be met, without hindering or affecting any of the other vital needs of the brotherhood. Shall we pray that our God, our heavenly Father, who planted this work, will water it in due season that it does not suffer too much from drought? i. e., from the lack of proper support?

G. E. DRUSHAL.

No distance of place or lapse of time can lessen the friendship of those who are thoroughly persuaded of each other's worth.—Robert Southey.

The Christmas Rose

[Heleborus niger]

By M. E. S. Charles

Merry Christmas to all

It may seem strange to class the Christmas rose with the evergreens, but a little plant that has the hardihood to grow and bloom under the snow, as does this one, certainly deserves the name. With its beautifully cut leaves and waxy-white flowers, this plant is not a rose, but is a member of the buttercup family, and, coming into bloom during the winter season (and it is often in the height of its beauty at Christmas time), it was reverently called Christmas rose by the ancients.

At one time in Greece the Christmas rose, or Heleborus niger, was highly prized as a remedy for mental disorders, and in some of the countries in central Europe the belief still prevails among the peasants that "A sure panacea for human woes Is the beautiful, thornless Christmas rose."

The Christmas rose has become so thoroughly naturalized in this country that it grows as far north as Michigan, and blooms as exquisitely at Christmas time as it does on its native mountain slopes in the Alps or Appenines.

The beauty and purity of the Christmas rose, which greets us at the time which we celebrate as the birth-time of the Christ-child has long associated it with the nativity. There are several legends concerning this flower, the most beautiful of which comes down to us by way of both England and Japan.

It is a beautiful tradition that every little child has a guardian angel. It is told in some of these legends that "Jesus said that the children's angels, or messengers, are always heard in the courts of heaven before the requests of any one else. A request from a little child in trouble is considered before the request from a statesman who is directing the destinies of his country, or the request of a general on the eve of battle, or the request of a philosopher who is struggling with the problems of life."

The following is the legend according to the English tradition. "Madelon, a daughter of a shepherd, heard the shepherds talking of the new-born Child who was to be their King and Savior. She listened to the shepherds as they tended their flocks on the hillsides, and she, too, was filled with a desire to see this wonderful Child. When these men started to find the young baby, Madelon silently crept along behind them, keeping in the shadows, and trying always to remain out of sight, fearing lest the men would compel her to go back. When she reached the streets of Bethlehem, she was very tired and footsore; but when she reached the stable where lay the Baby with his mother, she forgot her tired body and all her troubles in her joy of seeing the Child.

Madelon stood entranced. "She saw the rich gifts the Wise-men brought, the humble gifts of the shepherds, the loaf of barley bread, the home-made cheese, the fleece of a lamb so white, and soft enough to wrap around a new-born baby's limbs on a cold winter night." Madelon was a generous little soul, and longed to make a gift that would be appropriate. But all she ever had to give was flowers. But when the ground was covered with snow there were no flowers, and she had no money to buy anything else. She was heart-broken, and burst into tears. "At once her guardian angel, Gabriel, appeared at her side and took her by the hand, and touched the ground with his stick, and instantly beautiful flowers sprang up all about her." Thus, the legend affirms, came the Christmas rose to the world, the white flower of the nativity.

Alfred Hitchens, the artist, has painted a picture representing this legend, depicting the moment when Madelon is making her offering—a handful of Christmas roses—to the Christ-child in the stable. This beautiful picture shows Gabriel standing in a reverent attitude while little baby angels smile approval at the humble gift of homage from the child. Madelon, of course, occupies the center of the picture. So timid is she in the presence of the Christ-child that she scarcely raises her eyes from the flowers in her hand, to look at him.

In the original picture, it is said, the roses that the artist represented on his canvas in Madelon's hand are readily recognized as belonging to this species. The fact that the Christmas rose blooms in northern climates from November until March, and even blooms under the snow, seems to be one of nature's miracles.

The Land of Beginning Again

Some one has said poetically, "I wish there was a land of beginning again", but he concluded that his wish was all in vain, that there is no such place, no chance of beginning again unhampered and unembarrassed by the failures and mistakes of the past. He was true to the experience of the race in his wish, but was wrong in his conclusion. It would seem strange in the face of the universal desire for a new chance if it were not possible. All men come to the point some time in their lives, and most of them many times, when they feel terribly disappointed with what they have accomplished and with what they have become.

The approach of the new year in a special way induces that sort of feeling in a multitude of serious souls. It is a time when we are inclined to become introspective, when we are led to take stock of what we have accomplished and what we have become. We stand upon the threshold of the new year and, like the Roman god, Janus, with its two faces, we look backward with the old face over the path whence we have come, and with the young face gaze into the future. And the backward glance fills us with sadness and disappointment, when we think of what it might have been. An old painter of S'enna, after standing for a long time in silent meditation before his canvas, turned away, saying, "May God forgive me that I do not do it better"! This is the attitude of every honest, sincere soul as he reviews the past year. And the more nearly he sees eye to eye with the Master the more keenly aware is he of his failures.

Is it possible to begin again, to cast aside the old, marred record and to start on a new, clean sheet? Is there some power that will open the door to new opportunities and make possible greater attainments? The Romans believed so. A new beginning was opened up to them every year by their god, Janus, after whom they named the first month in the year. True to his name, which meant a "door," he was the great janitor who opened the door of every year and the door of every human life. The priest and the people prayed to Janus at the beginning of every day, and at the beginning of any work, for he was the one who opened the door to that opportunity. They also held a great festival in his honor on the first day of January every year, and in time they began to reckon the beginning of the year from that festival.

These Romans were not deceived in thinking that some one opened the door of the new year for them and gave them the chance of beginning again. Nor were they wrong in seeking the favor of that one when about to enter upon a new day, or a new year, or new duties. That yearning for a new chance, and that seeking of the blessing of him who has the power to open and to shut the doors of opportunity is the universal prayer of the human heart, and he who planted it there will not mock us with a lie. The heart is not taunted with an empty longing, a vain hope, nor will he, who has the power to open and shut, hide himself that he cannot be found. He who inspired the wish will answer it with the power of his own might. The Romans were right in believing that there was one who had the power to open the door of a new chance to them, but they did not find the one who was able to do that in a god who was the creation of their own imagination. It was Jesus who gave them that power and opportunity, and it was he whom they ignorantly worshipped.

It is "he that openeth and no man shutteth, and he that shutteth and no man openeth." It is Jesus "who stands guarding the doors and gates of life." In truth he is the door by which men enter into life, and the gate by which they may enter into the "Land of Beginning Again." "I am the door", said Jesus, "by me, if any man enter in he shall be saved" (John 10:9). He is the source of all newness of life or power or relations. Paul says, "Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away, behold all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17). And when this life shall have lived its little day, it is Jesus who shall prepare and open the gates into the City of our God. "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, . . . Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them. . . . And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new." (Rev. 21:2, 3, 5) He it is who is the author of life and has the keys of death and the grave. He it is in whom we live and move and have our being, and he comes that we may have life, new life, and have it more abundantly. He brings us in touch with the "Land of Beginning Again." When life has become wearied and burdened, he gives us a new chance. "Come unto me," says Jesus, "all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

And to this possibility of beginning again Paul testifies when he admonishes that "the old man" and "former conversation" or "manner of life" be "put off" and "be renewed in the spirit of your mind." In other words, those inner and higher principles of life that control conduct shall be sanctified and dedicated anew to conformity to the will of God. "Put on the new man," he says; begin life anew. For this, man's deepest desire, is made possible through Jesus Christ. It matters not what may be the nature or the depth of sin. He is able to make all grace to abound, and to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by him (Heb. 7:25). Whether the sins be as scarlet, or merely those of self-righteousness and lack of self-surrender, Jesus stands ready to open the door of the new birth by which we may enter that larger, richer, nobler life of Godlikeness. To whatever extent that divine image, the heritage of the human race, has been defaced, it can be wholly renewed, and in the strength of that new creaturship, the soul can go forth, unashamed and without fear, daily being perfected in holiness. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift—Jesus Christ our Lord, who opens unto us the door to the "Land of Beginning Again."

Religion Expels Crime

We spend a great deal of money each year on the detection and punishment of crime and in efforts to correct criminal tendencies and habits, but very little in comparison on the prevention of crime, in ways that are really effective. The prevention of crime is a most urgent sociological problem, and many very able and high-minded men are beginning to turn their attention to it with utmost seriousness. But they do not seem to get very far until they discover that the element of religion bulks large in the solution of the problem. The survey recently made by Dean Walter S. Athearn of Boston University, and previously commented on in these columns, shows how vital is the relation between crime prevention and religious education and religious exercises. Men of leadership in every line that touches crime and criminal causes are speaking out loud on this point. It is not that the theory that religion has a very direct bearing on crime prevention is new; it is not; we have known it all along. But we are beginning to get awake to the fact about which we have been almost criminally indifferent.

When courts of justice are testifying to the vital influence of religion on the problem and are urging the church on to more aggressive endeavors in the fortification of childhood and youth with religious instruction and religious experience, it is time we were setting ourselves to the task in dead earnestness. And if we really understood how mighty and practical an instrument the religion of Jesus Christ is, we would surely exercise ourselves more zealously in behalf of its spread and application to the lives of both old and young. But we have thought too exclusively of religion as being a passport to heaven and not as a power that animates and directs life here and now. The ultimate goal of the Christian life will most certainly be often in the mind of the Christian, but he must know too that the way to that blessed end leads through the broad fields of duty, righteous living and service. And those who limit their religious concern to feeding their own souls on the Bread of Life and fail to do what they can to distribute the heavenly manna to the multitudes who have not received it and who have not experienced the strength and joy and wholesomeness of life that is derived from it, will surely be denied the joy of receiving the "well done" of God's faithful servants at the end of the journey, if indeed they are not reprov'd and denied entrance to the heavenly realm. And those of whom we have been most careless in the days of the immediate past and to whom we are not yet giving adequate attention, are the boys and girls of our land, and especially those of our careless, irreligious and unwholesome homes. It is from such homes that our criminals come, and our neglect of them has cost and is still costing us a fearful price. It is a price that could have been avoided if these lawless citizens had been motivated and inspired by Christian ideals and principles. And by that means we can stop this drain of precious life, and by that means only. Religion is the only effective agency for crime prevention, and the only sure cure of criminal tendencies.

The testimony of Supreme Court Justice Lewis L. Fawcett, of Brooklyn, is both inspiring and challenging. It inspires us with confidence in the remedy and challenges us to undertake the task with righteous zeal. After eighteen years' experience in the county and supreme courts, he believes in universal religious training of men and boys. "In these eighteen years," he said recently, "more than 4,000 boys less than twenty-one years old have been arraigned before me charged with various degrees of crime. Of this 4,000 only three were members of a Sunday school at the time of the commission of their crimes.

"If we could keep the youth of America in Sunday school during the period of character formation, or at regular attendance upon religious worship, we could close the criminal courts and the jails. There would be no raw material to work on. And what is good for the youth would be equally salutary with adults. The sustained, wholesome, moral atmosphere imparted through habitual attendance upon Sunday school and church will expel criminal impulses."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We note by a copy of a pastoral letter from the Pittsburgh church bearing Christmas greetings to the membership, that December is being made a month of "specials", as is the case with many churches. The year is scheduled to close with a "Watch Night" service on December 31.

The secretary of the Ohio conference, Brother M. L. Sands of Smithville gives us in this issue the minutes of the late conference held at Fremont. It is to be noted that the next conference is to be held in the new Canton church which is in process of erection, and of which Brother Fred C. Vanator is the pastor. The date of the conference is changed to the first full week in October.

From Sidney, Indiana, we have a report of a good revival conducted by Brother George Swihart, who was instrumental in leading five souls to the Lord Jesus. The interest seems to be extended beyond the borders of the church constituency, members of other churches showing an interest in the campaign, and the school principal cooperating by giving encouragement to the children.

Brother Homer Anderson, pastor at Mulvane, Kansas, tells us of a greatly enjoyed evangelistic meeting held in his church by Brother A. B. Cover. Three are reported baptized as a result. The meetings were of two weeks duration, but Brother Cover was on the field but twelve days. The pastor is greatly encouraged and reports the church as having been greatly benefited.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble sends us a copy of Marguerite's diary, which shows that this little eleven-years-old girl is keeping her eyes open and making use of her opportunities. This record is sent primarily for the younger readers of the Evangelist family, and it is hoped they will find it interesting, and also gain a more intimate acquaintance with Marguerite Gribble.

It is "Munday's Corner" Brethren church now instead of the "Pike" congregation in Pennsylvania, according to a report sent by Brother J. L. Bowman, the pastor, and they are rejoicing over a very successful evangelistic meeting recently held by Brother I. D. Bowman, resulting in twenty-six taking their stand for Christ. At the Vinco church, which is served by the same pastor, Brother I. D. Bowman held a ten days' meeting with nine confessions.

Brother G. E. Drushal gives us another installment of news items from the Riverside Institute and church at Lost Creek, Kentucky. Steady progress in attendance and in giving is being registered. Work has begun on the new graded road past Riverside Institute, and when completed will have a far-reaching influence on the school work. Attendance has now practically reached capacity and it is expected many will have to be turned away after the holidays.

It is a pleasure to hear again from Brother I. D. Bowman, who tells us of his itinerating with the Gospel. In homes and in church houses, in established congregations and among little groups of worshipping people he has preached the Word, in New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia and in Pennsylvania, and he reports a total of fifty-two confessions, fifty-one of which were added to the church.

A report of the work at Columbus, Ohio, is received from Sister E. J. Horne, mother of the church in that city. She informs us of a revival under the pastor, Brother R. E. Gotschall, resulting in the addition of fifteen souls to the church, a number of whom had formerly been members and whose return will mean much to the work. In a personal communication from Brother Gotschall he reports that interest in the church is good and that the attendance is increasing. He says (quoting him), "Two weeks ago Sunday (That was November 28) morning was our largest attendance at Sunday school, there being 75 present. Last Sunday was disagreeable weather, but there were 56 present, most of whom stayed for church." The many friends of the Columbus mission will be pleased to learn of this revival of interest.

Brother E. A. Duker, pastor of the Ardmore church of South Bend, Indiana, writes an interesting letter, and he records some gratifying progress in the brief time he has had charge of the work. He speaks well of the work done by Brother B. H. Flora, who recently resigned the pastorate. The Sunday school is going forward in a splendid way, having reached recently the highest mark, 148, and it is to be noted that they have visions of very much bigger things to be done. A new parsonage is about completed and the pastor is expecting to occupy it by New Year's day. The Ardmore Brethren are to be congratulated in this attainment and we shall be pleased to have the privilege of presenting a picture of it to the Evangelist family. We are glad to note that Brother Duker is urging the Evangelist to be put in every home, where, he says, it rightfully belongs. And Ardmore will do it,

How to Face the New Year

By L. G. Wood

"This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; It shall be the first month of the year to you." Exodus 12:2.

As Israel faced a new life with new problems and new opportunities, so we today face the same conditions, as far as right principles are concerned. We are living in an age of advancing life, therefore our problems are many and serious. If we were in a state of decadence, our problems would be few and simple. A dying cause need not concern itself about anything but a decent burial.

There never was a time when real spiritual living was needed more, or would count for more than it does NOW.

I. Anticipation is a great factor in realization. We may not have realized all that we have anticipated, and yet some of us may have realized some things that we had not anticipated. In achievement, anticipation must precede and promote realization. I hope we are anticipating great things for Christ and the church for 1927.

A new beginning freshens life by giving a place to hope and putting away all past failures, thus we have a new vision for the New Year. We need a vision, not of 700 B. C., but of 1927. For certainly the "fields are white unto the Harvest."

The great apostle certainly was inspired by a wholesome anticipation when he said: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Jesus Christ" (Phil. 3:12). "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

II. Unity of Purpose. Brethren! If we would make this New Year what it should be made in Kingdom building, we must be UNITED IN THE GREAT PURPOSE. "Whether therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. 10:31). As we go sweeping out into 1927 everything pertaining to our spiritual natures should have a new birth from above. Except we receive the NEW impulses of the Holy Spirit, we shall not be able to survive this new and great day.

III. We should begin the year with self-inspection. Looking within, do we see sins unrepented of; resolutions made, but also broken; opportunities unimproved; talents unused? Our God is so good to us that he is now willing to give us a new start. The best use we can make of the past is to get a great future out of it.

When we remember God's guiding hand, and tender care, through the past year, does it not inspire us to think on all of his works and his precious promises?

IV. Let us begin the new year with a new type of consecration. May our daily prayer be: "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" and may our vows find expression in the lines of Frances Ridley Havergal's, "Take my life, and let it be; consecrated, Lord to thee."

May it not be that God's message to the church at Ephesus, has application to some parts of his vineyard today? "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. . . . Remember therefore from whence

ELDER L. G. WOOD
Pastor Ft. Scott, Kansas

thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

If there be a spiritual declension on the part of many who profess to love the Lord, what a wonderful opportunity we have of doing our part to correct it by a daily Godly walk, with the Master in service. If it was good to be living in the golden days of Greece and Rome, it is a thousand times better to be living NOW, when our very day is calling for REAL men and women, girls and boys, with pure lives and high ideals. May the words of the Poet ring clear in our hearts:

"I take my pilgrim staff anew
Life's path, untrodden, to pursue,
Thy guiding eyes, my Lord, I view
My times are in thy hands."

As the old year is about to pass into "yesterday," we have a mingling of emotions. First of all is gratitude to HIM who is the author of all good, for every good thing that has touched our lives during the year. We appreciate every word, thought, action and prayer in cooperation, in the work of the Kingdom. The last year has been one of some success and some failures, but the only reason for remembering our failures is to make them stepping stones to a better future, and to turn our faces toward that future, with a firmer hope and a finer resolve.

As we approach the New Year, I feel that we face a four-fold challenge and it applies to our entire brotherhood. First, the challenge of Spiritual growth. We need to develop the prayer life, for that will "release power." Second: an increasing membership, we will grow if we will faithfully apply the means of growth. Third: cultivate a spirit of cooperation and good fellowship. Fourth: a personal consecration to the supreme cause of evangelism.

May we make a brief survey of our needs, and try to discover the inexhaustible resources for meeting them.

Our church needs a great faith, which will enable her members to live separated lives, separated from the world, but blended with the Christ life. It requires a great faith to justly claim that "inheritance of the saints in light." A great faith which will enable her to maintain harmony among her members. A great faith which will enable her to be "spirit-filled" and "pure in heart."

A great faith which will give her a clear conception of the meaning of that word, LOST. A great faith which will lead her down to the ocean of God's redeeming love.

"Our generation lacks faith, and therefore it is poor in hope. The masses are held in the grip of hampering tradition, and many leaders are bound hand and foot to ideals which belong to the scrap-heap. We persist in thinking like men, when we ought to be thinking more and more like God. We turn our backs on new duties, we shrink from sacrifices, we refuse the cross. We have hung before us the calendar of a new year, but no year can be new, unless it is made new by new men. Newness is a quality created by the Spirit of God in the soul of man, and unless men are born from above the new year is but a continuation of the old.

It is the Lord of life who is able to say, "Behold I make all things new" (Charles E. Jefferson.)

Is it not wonderful that a merciful and all-wise Father has made it possible for us to turn our backs on all of the blurred pages of past life, and receive from him a new page, upon which to begin a new record. In beginning this new record may we make a very near approach to him, and feel the assurance that he is the great Musician, who is able and anxious to stand by your side, and weave heaven's harmony into your discordant efforts.

How Face the New Year

Face the New Year with the Old Book;
Face the new needs with the old Promise;
Face the new problems with the old devotions;
Face the new life with the old remedies;
Face the whole world with the Christ who saves.

Another year is dawning!

Dear Master, let it be
In working or in waiting,
Another year with thee.

Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace;
Another year of gladness
In the shining of thy face.

Another year of service,
Of witness for thy love;
Another year of training
For holier work above.

Another year is dawning,
Dear Master, let it be
On earth, or else in heaven,
Another year for thee.

Our Children for Christ

By Mrs. A. B. Cover

(Paper read before the W. M. S. Session of the Mid-west District Conference in October)

Our W. M. S. slogan for this year is a most fitting one. No one doubts the fact that the youth of our homes are being lured in the ways of the world, rather than into the folds of the church. Where lies this trouble? Is it the age in which we are living? This is oftentimes quoted as the cause, but it does not offer us any solution to the vexing problem. Let us look facts fairly in the face and deal with them accordingly.

Since the home is the great training school for both church and state; the basis of all society and civilization, it behooves us to begin our introspection there. As Christian women we will take it for granted, that the life in its origin is divine: that God has instituted laws for its regulation and perpetuity and that these laws must be obeyed. A Christian home implies marriage, mutual affection, piety, gentleness and refinement. In short it is supposed to represent a beautiful and impressive type of heaven. It is therefore more than a mere place of abode, however richly adorned with art and beauty. Home is where the heart is where the loved ones surround the family table in united sympathy of fellowship and love.

Are our homes of today measuring up to this standard? or are they becoming mere places to eat and sleep? Are the members of the family as interested in one another as they should be, or are they mere acquaintances who meet formally at meal and bed time? Are the parents in our modern homes striving to make their children a home that is pleasant, comfortable and God-fearing? or is the family altar, and the evening social hour thrown aside in a wild rush for pleasure and gold? Are the parents of our modern youth making companions and confidants of them or are they allowing them to receive all their instruction from the public school teacher? And above all are we parents wielding our influence as Christian leaders, or are we allowing our children to lead us? This remark has recently come to me, "There is just as much authority in the home as there ever was only it has changed hands," the children giving rather than receiving the direction of the family affairs. This is not true of all homes but it is true of too many of them, many of them so called Christian homes. "Train up a child in the way he should go and even when he grows old he will not depart from it." This injunction is ours to fulfill just as much today as in the day it was spoken. This training cannot be given too early. If parents neglect their little ones in their earliest years, their greatest opportunity for training is lost and the child's opportunity for greatness is thwarted. A child begins at birth to become acquainted with the world in which its little soul so fresh from God has been sent to us as a holy gift. If we desire our children to be God fearing we must begin by precept and example in the early stage of the babe's life. Habits, conceptions of good and evil, ideas, are forming day by day in the busy mind of the child and those which he first imbues will be the most lasting. As a mother peers into the face of her new-born babe she asks herself the age long question, "What manner of child shall this be?" Ah, we do not know the answer to this question. The babe is a package of pent up powers ready to be developed for good or evil. Those tender lips may some day be the gateway through which God will speak his message to humanity, or it may be that those small plump hands may sway an empire as did cruel Nero. This little soul may usher in the era of a new day for better or for worse; all will depend on the training and rearing of the innocent babe. What manner of child has my child become under my guidance? is a question every mother should ask herself today. What is wrong with our youth is the oft repeated question. Had we not better reverse it and say, "what is wrong with the parents who reared it?"

Since the home is the fountain head of society so is the mother the fountain head of the home. A nation never rises above its motherhood. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world"—these are two of the greatest tributes that can be bestowed on womanhood. A mother consciously or unconsciously organizes and puts into operation a set of influences that do more to mold the world's destiny than any other individual can possibly effect. There can be no substitute for this. The fact remains unchangeable. And, Oh, mothers of Christian homes, may we on bended knee implore our heavenly Father's guidance in undertaking this great privilege of making or unmaking lives and nations.

How then shall we proceed with this development? Are we giving the thought, the time, the prayer and patient endeavor to this cause, the noblest cause of motherhood?

Let us look about us. How many of us are weighed in the balance and found wanting? Are all the mothers in my immediate community rearing their children in the fear and admonition of the Lord? Are they vitally concerned about their children's soul life? Are they giving them the rich heritage of a Christian mother's influence? What do we find? I presume with few exceptions we all agree that there are many mothers who have no time for such training. The so-called society class, of which we find everywhere today are farming out their children to hired servants or left wandering on the streets. Another class of negligents are our financiers who place the almighty dollar before their offsprings for worship by precept and example. A more deplorable class is our laboring class in the poverty stricken districts of our cities where mothers with motherly instincts must labor outside the home, for daily necessities. Neither mother or child is to blame but our own field of economics needs a revision, or rather a conversion to the actual value of the human life.

In the Holy Scriptures, Deuteronomy 13th chapter, we read of the ideal woman. Her children shall rise up and call her blessed. Why? Not because she wore rough and the latest designed Parisian gowns. Not because she won all the first prizes at auction bridge. Not because she was the most graceful dancer, or the most popular club woman. They call her blessed because of her loving ministry in their behalf. Caring for their tired bodies and nourishing their minds and souls on wholesome God-fearing ideals, and above all leading them to find Christ as their personal Savior and Friend.

The woman thus portrayed was not an ideal because she was a mother. It was because of her devotion to her Lord and Master. There are altogether too many mothers who are unworthy to bear that name. Such find more delight in self-adornment, questionable pleasures and social refinement. Parties, clubs and entertainments are the food upon which these mothers feed and consequently the rearing of their children is the least of their concern. To change the lives of such can only be done by a change of heart. God help us to remember them at the throne of grace, that they may be brought to the realization of the value of child nurture and training. Sad indeed is the fact that motherhood can be so void of love and feeling for the welfare of her own flesh and blood.

Can children in their early years be taught the reality of God and things divine? Children learn largely by seeing and touching, but mark you, each new born babe has within it a spark of the divine, which awaits early kindling. Little tots have more faith than adults. Their minds are open to the truth; not as yet biased by sin and the opinions of other people. They are open minded and are ready to accept the fact that God is their Father, their Helper and Friend. Speak cheerfully but reverently to them about things divine. Teach them that God, their Father, loves good and abhors all that is evil; teach them that he hates lying, lust and unkindness; teach them to talk to their heavenly Father and they will love him all the more. Too frequently this work is left solely for the Sunday school to develop, but unless the home leads the child to the knowledge of things divine the Sunday school has a small chance in the development of the child's spiritual life. One hour each week will not suffice to offset the tendencies developed in the ninety-five hours of that week where no religious training is given. The home must lay the foundation upon which the Sunday school must build. We pray for this co-operation as it is one of the greatest needs of our homes today. Not enough is done in this direction. If all mothers would cooperate with the church school in this training, there would be a better class of children growing up today. Religion begins in the home, if it is not there it is nowhere. Today we are paying the penalty in both church and state for our neglect of childhood.

O Mothers of America, these children of ours are the makers of the world of tomorrow! At this moment, they are invading and taking possession of everything we absolutely own. They are going to take possession of every state in the union, every city, every town and every hamlet. They will take possession of our religious institutions, our political offices, our business interests, our schools and colleges, and our homes.

How are we training this vast army of invaders for its conquering? O Mothers, remember the Holy Scripture, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones," and again we pray that the motherhood of all Christendom will take heed and not set a cheap valuation upon childhood, for he holds in his hands the great tomorrow.

The Well-digger

By E. C. Baird, In Christian Standard

Walking musingly in an old field, I chanced upon a grave. It was all sunken and overgrown with wild weeds. There was something strangely sad and pathetic about this lonely and neglected grave in the old field, and a great sadness came into my heart as I stood, for a moment there.

At the head of this grave was a stone, cracked and stained. Stooping low, I found a name and a date. Beneath, in letters crudely fashioned, were these words: "He was a well-digger." Removing some clinging earth, I found below this line—evidently the work of another hand—this further bit of history: "He trusted God and did his part."

And, as I read, a gladness came into my soul. For here, among the weeds and waste, was the story of a life triumphant!

"He was a well-digger."

No slacker, he, in life's great game! While the sun shone, he sent his good spade deep into the unbroken earth, and when his day was ended there was a heritage of wells, with waters pure and cold for a thirsty world. He, the digger was gone. But his work still lived, though seventy-five years had been measured over his grave.

"He trusted God."

Digging deep into the earth, he did not forget nor neglect the things above. He looked up into the blue sky and saw the Father's face. He kept his soul above the mire. Working in darkness, he thought of the One who, standing beside a well at a place "called Sychar," spoke of a priceless thing, which should become "a well of water springing up unto eternal life."

"He did his part."

Great words, these, when truly written. What matters it if his grave is forgotten and unkept? The great Master saw it all. Let the world drink and forget. The eye of the Infinite saw every patient stroke—and he does not forget. The faith that was in the soul of the humble toiler made him a friend of God! With his faith, his spade and his good, strong arms, "he did his part."

I thank thee, old grave, for thou hast been to me a good teacher! Thou hast treated me not unkindly. Once again, thou hast reminded me of duty, than which there is no bigger word! I, too, must be alert and do my part. Happy and well for me if the pen of truth can write above my dust, neglected though it be:

"He trusted God and did his part."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Mystic Step—A Sermon for the New Year

By L. A. Myers

TEXT: As truly as the Lord liveth and as my soul liveth, there is but a step between men and death. 1 Samuel 20:5.

These words are David's to Jonathan when David felt convinced that Saul was going to attempt to kill him. The intent of Saul's heart seemed to be unknown to Jonathan, his son. But Saul's conduct toward David had been such that David was convinced that the full intent of Saul was to destroy him. This he expressed to Jonathan in terms of certainty. They immediately agreed upon a plan by which it would be revealed to Jonathan as to the intent of his father's mind regarding David. When the plan had been executed neither of them were in doubt as to the validity of David's former statement. They immediately planned means of safety whereby David would escape the hand of the King.

There is that in this narrative which concerns us all. David might have been mistaken instead of Jonathan and yet the fact of his statement yet remained in another form. Since the truth remained as David conceived it, he lived to be an old man and did some of his best service after Saul was dead. His plans and work with Jonathan thwarted the king's purpose and rescued David from his sword. After we have done all we can to preserve life and succeed in living out the allotted time, David's statement still remains true; that is, "there is but a step between me and death."

1. The uncertainty of life is an established certainty. "As truly as the Lord liveth and my soul liveth there is but a step between me and death." No one can deny that death is in the future. "It hath been appointed unto men once to die." This is a statement made by the Book of Life.

The Mystic Step is a certain step. As truly as the Lord liveth all shall take this step, some time and somewhere. Men's history has proved this statement to be true, from the least to the greatest, from the poorest to the richest, from the faintest to the strongest. Methuselah lived a thousand years and yet there is not a hint but that he expected to meet death.

There is nothing that we look forward to with a more definite certainty than the one thing, death. Later, David speaks of going the way of all the earth. Death is the way of everybody. The race as a whole has gone that way, and yet everyone has gone his or her own individual way. No indications anywhere give any evidence that the means of departure from this world will ever be changed. Medical science and better sanitary conditions have succeeded in extending the period of life. Ponce De Leon sought the Fountain of Youth, but he never found the place where old age could be exchanged for young manhood. Man would have done away with death long ago if he could, but through history and observation all men know that such is impossible. Old ladies bob their hair, paint their cheeks, powder their noses, and shorten their skirts so as to look young, but it's all in vain. The time of life slowly comes to a close and the time to take the Mystic Step arrives.

Yet of all the steps we take there are none which are more uncertain than this one. It is attended with all kinds of uncertainty. Friends sit beside the bedside of friends, thinking every moment will be the last, only to be changed in mind and later enjoy the wholesome companionship of one whom they once expected to be in eternity before daybreak. Great excitement was recently displayed in Roumania at the time of the king's illness, as to who would be the royal successor to the throne and still the latest is that King Ferdinand is slowly recovering, and may outlive some of those who were anticipating his early death. As earnest as David was in the statement he made, still he outlived Saul, became King of Israel and expanded the Kingdom to its greatest glory. The time is not set, the hour is not known, when the saint shall go home and the sinner shall meet his God as Judge. In spite of the fact that men live as though they had a lease on life which will not expire for two thousand years yet the accident comes and they are cut off without a moment's warning. Yesterday a middle aged man died at the breakfast table, while taking nourishment from which to have strength to go about the duties and tasks of the day. Only a few weeks ago a young mother, with two small children, over whom she exercised faithfully her duty, was taken to the hospital for what was thought to be an ordinary appendix operation. To the surprise even of the surgeon, when in the act of removing the cause of an apparent illness, he found her body literally filled with cancer. The body was immediately repaired and she sent home with the instructions to her friends to take the best care of her, for it would only be a short time until she would take the Mystic Step. She had had no pain, no warning of any kind, but today she sleeps with the dead. No one knows the day, nor the hour. It may be very near and it may be very far. Of all steps we take there are none as uncertain as the Mystic Step.

The continuity of life hangs upon a very slender thread. It takes but a few grains of poison to deaden the whole human body. The prick of a pin in certain vital spots will produce immediate death. The effect of a narcotic on a single nerve will cause that particular organ to cease functioning and immediately produce an inactive condition to the organ, or lifelessness to the entire human physique. The thread of life is very delicate and can be easily severed, and yet most of us treat our good health as though we were bound to life by some unbreakable metal cable.

This step is final. It makes no difference whether one has made preparation for this step, it is the last one. When one fails at the grave, there is no backing up for tomorrow, a new trial. It is finished. The life is lived. No degree of wasted time can be redeemed. All can be marked up as loss and failure. As the tree faileth so it lieth. The last act of life is immediately followed by death. The act may be a tragic, heroic fete executed by a hero, or it may be a low debased deed of shamefulness but if it is, death has come and made it stationary, in the history of that one's life. A few years back, our own dear Brother Knepper, then President of the National Ministerial Association, completed his life work on his knees in prayer. Death came and took him in the last act of life. Here is an illuminating place at the very close of his life, firmly fixed in his life's history. How immeasurably great is it for one to make the final step with a prayer for Grace on his or her lips! The world today says, shame on the traitor of all traitors, Judas, who gave his Lord a kiss of deception and sold him for thirty pieces of silver, then went out and hanged himself. His death has fixed the act in history where it will never be removed, and he will always be known as the most unkind, deceptive traitor of all men. Stephen prayed, "Lord Jesus, lay not this sin to their charge for they know not what they do." These were his last words, and we stand in awe and ask ourselves, what a heart of non-resistance! Some of us Brethren folks would do well to stop at the grave of Stephen and pause there for a long, long time, meditating upon the Great Spirit of Non-resistance in Stephen. This event may come at night, noon or early in the morning, but no matter when, it is final and as it finds you, there you will stand for all time.

II. In view of these facts when man looks into the future he should always reckon with the inevitable. When the New Year comes we are in a frame of mind to view the future, or the coming year, with its characteristic aspects. What a good time to take a serious look on things for the coming year, as well as on the flippant, uncertain, unestablished attitude so commonly manifested toward life and God. The past year has gone. It now affords a good season for reflection, not on the year, nor on our neighbor, but on ourselves. How about the mistakes, failures, and the good fortune of being well and alive? Then as we look into the coming year with all its promises of good cheer, success and happiness, don't forget to take at least a glimpse at the uncertainty of life, and the certainty of the Mystic Step. Death marks the end of life's journey. How will it find us furnished, if we unexpectedly meet it in the New Year? This solemn fact should mingle sacredness and soberness in our happiness and optimism of life as we look ahead.

Another year is before us, the time measure of which we have just had in the old year. Look back to 1926 and you can know just how long 1927 will be. In fact if there is any difference in the measure of time between the two years the old year will prove to be longer than the new. We are too much inclined to forget the inevitable and lend our time and energy to great business plans and good resolutions, conforming to new year's customs, and many times leave out the most needful considerations of life. How many hundred resolutions are formally made every year without a single sober thought and then they are forgotten with a lesser degree of soberness than they were made. The rich man's plans were with both earnestness and soberness but he was on a non-essential basis. His plans were purely business. He would tear down his old buildings and build larger and greater, planning for more volume in riches and finally much pleasure, but when plans were completed then another interfered and said, Whose shall these things be? "Thou fool, this night thy soul is required of thee." What an unexpected scene is introduced when another voice interrupts with entirely different plans, with not a note of merriment sounded! This will likely be true with scores before another new year comes to us. How often we make great business plans all to be broken up because they were not right in the beginning! How often we make good resolutions, which, if kept, would be lofty, but we break them because they are not made right. Our first attitude was wrong. We need more seriousness, and sobriety on things like these.

When we reckon with the future we reckon with God. The future is as a sealed book to us and God only holds the key to the volume. The best we can do if we are not taking God into consideration is to match our physical and mental powers against fate and enter into the duties and responsibilities of the coming year as one blindfolded, not knowing what the outcome will be. Fate may bring us through, but if it doesn't, then we fail, not only for a year but for a life. How sad a failure to fall from the whole realm of the promise of life. But if we remember that our friend is even greater than David's and that our God is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother, then life presents itself differently and we enter the new year with some hope and promise. It may not be that our lives will be spared but whatever the consequences all will be well. To place our lives in his for safety, keeping, security and guidance, we can look into the future as one who has all hope and optimism. No matter about the Mystic Step, whether it comes soon or late.

Have we considered what God has to do with us? Some-time we act as though the subject of God had received but very little of our attention. Yet it is true that the power which enables us to take our place in the realm of life is a God-given gift. Its withdrawal is possible any time. If God gave, he can likewise take away. The last

NECESSITY OF GENEROSITY—2 Cor. 9:6-8.

"Giving is living," the angel said,
"To feed to the hungry sweet charity's bread."
"And must I keep giving, and giving again?"
My selfish and querulous answer ran.
"Ah! No," said the angel, his look pierced me through,
Just give 'till the Master stops giving to you."
—Edwin Markham.

TUESDAY

MUTUAL FAMILY CONSIDERATIONS—Eph. 5: 33-6:4.

Self-reverent, each and reverencing each
Distinct in individualities,
But like each other ev'n as those who love.
—Tennyson.

WEDNESDAY

MAKING A HOME—1 Cor. 13:1-7.

A house is built of bricks and stones, of sills and posts and piers;
But a home is built of loving deeds that stand a thousand years.
—Nixon Waterman.

THURSDAY

THE CHRISTIAN'S INFLUENCE—Matt. 5:13-16.

Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,— Nor light them for themselves. For if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.—Shakespeare.

FRIDAY

SERVE WHERE YOU ARE—1 Cor. 12:4-11.

Don't spurn to be a rushlight
Because you are not a star,
But brighten some bits of darkness
By shining just where you are.
—John Hay.

SATURDAY

PURITY OF LIFE—Eph. 5:1-5; 1 Cor. 3:16, 17.

Cherish your body, for God made it great;
It has a guest of might and high estate;
Keep the shrine noble, handsome, high and whole
For in it lives God's work, a kingly soul.
—James Bartlett Wiggin.

SUNDAY

FLESH VERSUS SPIRIT—Gal. 5:16-25.

These are the sins I fain would have thee take away,—
Malice and cold disdain;
Hot anger, sullen hate;
Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great;
And discontent that casts a shadow gray
On all the brightness of a common day.
—Van Dyke.

(Prepared by G. S. B.)

year was fraught with many complex problems and difficulties. The coming year promises just as many. Without some light and some guide, the coming year may bring many failures and leases. We need a light to illuminate the way. We need a guide to point out the road. When we have these there will be many detrimental habits eliminated, much idle speech left out, and more fruitful results produced from the right kind of thinking and living. This will do much to make the coming year most profitable to us.

III. We may also consider the usefulness of time in relation to the brevity of life. "It is but a step between me and death." Life is like the pathway which follows the brink of the river bank. "Just a step and we are off. It takes but little effort and less time to step out.

Another year is before us, the measure of time which we used in the preceding year. Our experience here is that there has been a lack of time, if we measure it by the volume of things to be done. If we had had time we would have done more, and yet many necessary things are undone. Many valuable moments have been wasted and much useful energy thrown to the wind. The time of the coming year will be just as serious. We are likely to come out at the end with a great shortage on time. Many things will be undone because we did not have time. And some things will be undone because we failed to use the time we had for their doing. Let us understand here at the beginning that there is no time to idle away. If we spend it wastefully, we are the losers. Next to life, time is our most valuable asset. No man can afford to waste it or throw it away. Then here we are on the threshold. How about a real earnest effort to start right and proceed carefully, following our guide and making use of time's most valuable element in this new year? we try to make money and when made, it represents hard service, earnestly done, but some waste it. Wasted time is a more fearful waste and extravagance than wasted money. Money may be redeemed, but lost time can never be replaced.

As we come to the end of the old year with a most promising outlook for the coming year, it is very necessary that we consider it earnestly, and sincerely, rather than watch the old year out and the new one in with flip-pant rejoicing and frivolity, as though time meant nothing and life even less.

May God help us to look at it this way—our lives daily devoted to the King, in harmony with all the laws of the Kingdom. The uncertainty in life will lose itself in the certainty of eternity. Time will not be at a premium, but eternal endurance will be for ever and ever, in the clime of perpetual sunshine.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Mind of Christ

By Dr. Mary A. Laughlin

OUR SCRIPTURE

Philippians 2:1-11. If there is therefore any exhortation in Christ, if any consolation of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any tender mercies and compassions, make full my joy, that ye may be of the same mind, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind; doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others.

Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. Wherefore also God highly exalted him, and gave unto him the name which is above every name; that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

OUR MEDITATION

The apostle exhorts the Philippian brethren to have in them the mind of Christ, and then tells them the things that were in his mind—consolation of love, fellowship of the Spirit, tender mercies and compassions. It seems that the thing he is trying to make plain is the love of Christ and his humility and obedience; if we have the mind of Christ there will be no room in our hearts for envy or jealousy or bitterness of any kind, even if people treat us badly; when his enemies nailed him to the cross he still loved them—he said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

If we have the mind of Christ we cannot be self-centered—"not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others"; those persons who are thinking always of themselves or their own affairs are never happy; they are not living according to the mind of Christ, whose wish was that our joy might be made full. When one feels blue or discouraged a very good remedy is to do something for somebody else—"looking to the things of others."

With his love, he was also humble, being not ashamed to take the form of a servant, to give service to others, even to all the sons and daughters of men; he was interested in their physical welfare; he healed the sick and fed the hungry and promised a blessing to those who should give even a cup of cold water in his name; so if we have in us the mind of Christ we will have compassion on all who are suffering or sorrowful.

With his humility he was obedient, not refusing the hard things, enduring even the death of the cross. And if there is in us the mind of Christ we cannot always choose the easy way; there are hard things to do and we must do them; even in this present world the prizes do not go to those who are always choosing the easy way; they may seem for a while to be successful but in the end they are miserable.

He that doth not take his cross and follow after me, is not worthy of me (Matt. 10:38).

If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me (Matt. 16:24).

Following his obedience, he was rewarded, "Wherefore also God highly exalted him"; and if we have in us the mind which was in Christ, we shall have joy in this life and in the life to come we have the promise of joy eternal.

OUR PRAYER

Heavenly Father, forgive our shortcomings—it is so easy to think about our daily trials; help us that we may often fix our minds on the perfect model, the life of Christ. So shall we walk in the path of the righteous, which is as a dawning light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for January 2)

The Christian a Follower of Jesus

Introductory Note

We have some interesting courses outlined for us in the International Sunday school lessons for the year. The first quarter we have "Studies in the Christian Life." The second quarter we study "The Life and Letters of Peter." And during the third and fourth quarters we study "The Early Kings and Prophets of Israel." The first quarter into which we enter this week, dealing as it does with some of the very practical problems and responsibilities of the Christian life, should prove very helpful and enjoyable. The one thing necessary is to give time to the study of these lessons.

Scripture Lesson—Mark 1:16-20; 2:13-17; 1 John 2:6.

Devotional Reading—Philippians 2:5-11.

Golden Text—He saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him. Mark 2:14.

Four Fishermen Called

One day when walking along the shore of the Sea of Galilee Jesus saw two brothers, Simon (who is called Peter, Mt. 4:18), and Andrew, casting a net in the sea. They were letting it down and then drawing it up, first on one side of the boat and then on the other. Or, as was often done, they had gone out in a boat to let a sweep-net down and then would draw it in from the land. Jesus called to them across the blue water, saying, "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." They were not to give up their nets in following him, but to change them—as his figure of speech means.

This was not the first time the two brothers had seen Jesus. They at once left the nets and followed him. "Mark both their faith and their obedience," comments Chrysostom, the great fourth century preacher of Constantinople: "For though they were in the midst of their work—and ye know how greedy a thing fishing is—yet when they heard his command they delayed not, they procrastinated not, they said not, 'Let us return home and converse with our kinsfolk,' but they forsook all and followed."

To you and me Jesus says: Stay by your nets, your school, your home, your business, and follow me; do everything in my Spirit, and do whatever comes to your hand to do for others for my sake.

"Lead me, Man Divine,
Where'er thou wilt, only that I may find,
At the long journey's end, thy image there,
And grow more like to it."

Farther on Jesus found two other brothers, James and John, the sons of Zebedee, mending their nets in a boat, and they were equally prompt in obeying his call to follow him. "Straightway," says Mark, "they left their father Zebedee in the boat with the hired servants, and went after him."

"The cost fell on Zebedee," Bishop McConnell thinks. "We see and hear James and John. We are charmed by their eloquence and zeal. Let us not forget Zebedee, who gave them their chance. He never writes any Gospels or Epistles, but his signature is eloquent at the bottom of a check. The bright, ardent young apostle starts out from the college amid the plaudits of those who expect him to turn the world upside down. If ever he does thus revolutionize the world, it will be because Zebedee, back among the boats and the nets and the fish, supplied him the leverage."—Dr. Tarbell.

They Forsook All

The Men who were Called to help Jesus in his great task of winning the world to the kingdom of God not alone forsook the evil and hurtful things, but many of the good things of life—home, friends, business all.

THAT OTHER BOY

*When Jesus was a little boy,
A little boy like me,
I wonder if he saw the things
That every day I see.*

*I wonder if he loved the sun,
So high up in the sky,
And wished, like me, that he had wings,
And, like the birds, could fly.*

*I wonder what he did all day,
And what he had for toys,
And if, when racing down the street,
He beat the other boys.*

*I'm sure he must have had a ball,
And tops that he could spin,—
I'll be he had to do the chores
And bring the kindling in!*

*Perhaps he had a little dog
That followed him all day,
Or maybe kept a speckled hen,
And sold the eggs she'd lay.*

*I wonder if he went to school,
And found subtraction hard:
And did the boys know it was God
Who played there in the ward?*

*And when he grew to be a man
He loved all children so,
Remembering how he was a boy
Himself, not long ago.*

*And then he died upon the cross,
He died for boys like me,—
And so for him I have to be The best that I can be!
—Mrs. Howard Nicholson, in Long Beach, (Calif.) Church Bulletin.*

Had Peter not answered the call of Jesus he would have been only a fisherman all his life. But by giving up all he gained power over men, eloquence, an undying influence for good. He became a great preacher, an author, a martyr.—Alice B. Adams.

He Calls Today

We are called to give up everything to Christ—our property, our time—to use as he would have us. We are to give away as much as he directs; to leave all, and be missionaries, if he demands; to suffer the loss of all that is needful, in order that we may do right; to spend upon our families, our business, our pleasure, just as Christ would have us, and in all things seek to build up the kingdom of our Lord, and save men from sin. By forsaking all we doubly gain. Nothing is so truly ours as that which we commit to God.—Ibid.

The Kind of Men Jesus Calls

Not the perfect, the high and noble, the talented, or the cultured, especially. He may call any of these, he wants them all, but his call is not confined to them, nor is it among these that he receives the most ready response. He goes among the common man, the individual of ordinary talents and attainments, the men of ordinary goodness and average badness for the quickest response, the keenest sense of need and the noblest aspiration and feeling of responsibility. And even among the most lowly he finds some of his most loyal followers and greatest workers. He goes among all classes, finds them where they are and what they are, and points out what they may become. Note that "the men whom Jesus first invited to follow him undoubtedly had as glaring sins and as obvious defects as most of us have today. Those imperfections must have been quite as much of a trial to Jesus as our fellows' shortcomings are to us. But he did not commence by telling them of this, nor did he seek to help them at the outset by showing them what was wrong with them. His first recorded word to faulty Simon was, "Thou art Simon the son of John: thou shalt be called rock," as though to say, 'for you deserve a stalwart name.' When he set out to win a person to himself it seemed to be his set purpose to find something in that one which he could commend, and then to commend in all heartedness."

"If only we strive to be pure and true,
To each of us there will come an hour
When the tree of life shall burst into flower,
And rain at our feet the golden dower
Of something grander than ever we knew."

The Art of Soul-Winning

"No human occupation has ever so perfectly illustrated the art of 'soul-winning' as that of the fisherman. Patience, knowledge of the interests of his fish, knowledge of the bait that will attract fish, faith in things unseen, skill, delicacy of touch, refusal to be discouraged, unlimited perseverance, conviction that he has not yet exhausted the possibilities of his art—all these and more make the true fisherman. They reveal the moral qualities that we must have to lead our fellowmen to God. And the very maxims of this art disclose the true method for the Sunday school teacher."

SACRAMENTAL WINE IS CURTAILED

Major Chester P. Mills, prohibition administrator for the New York area, announced this afternoon a new system for distributing sacramental wine to Jews, made necessary, he said, because so many gallons have been diverted to bootleg uses.

Under the new system, each rabbi in the city will report to prohibition headquarters the amount needed for his congregation. Permits then will be issued to vintners, enabling them to ship direct to the rabbis. Major Mills said the new plan will do away with 250 distributing points in New York.—New York Evening Post.

Our Stewardship Program

By Orville D. Ullom, Stewardship Supt.

We hope you remembered our goal for December 19th, the 3rd Sunday of this month, as being the appointed time for our Christian Endeavor Stewardship program. Of course each society will want to urgently stress continually by the method which they deem best the two following principles of Christian Stewardship:

1. Recognizing that all we possess and all that we are were given to us by God for our own use and happiness.

2. The fact that we are illuminated and fired with a dominant purpose to use all these gifts as a trust and devote a wholesome portion of them to the specific purpose of extending God's kingdom here on earth.

Books with illuminating suggestions on all phases of Christian stewardship; compare these with those mentioned in a previous issue:

1. "Life Complete through Stewardship," Rev. S. S. Hough, D. D.

2. "Stewardship for All of Life," Luther E. Lovejoy.

3. "The Larger Stewardship," Charles A. Cook.

4. "Christian Stewardship," Rev. B. T. Kemmerer.

"The Why of Christian Stewardship"

A Steward is a superior Christian, because he is evidencing outward that dominant and masterful and yet gentle and loving attitude which he is most earnestly experiencing in his own heart of hearts. Such individuals are helping Jesus Christ to lift humanity to the very heart of God, endeavoring to assist souls to be perfect even as their heavenly Father is perfect.

In all Christian Stewardship there must first be the idea, the thought, the truth presented. Ideas are the most powerful forces in the world. These small but masterful factors can in an almost insignificant period of time build up or tear down nations. With such vast resources at the very tip of our tongue shall we not redeem our time by using to the very best of our advantage these Stewardship truths for liberating individuals and transforming society? We will indeed, make use of the idea when we in our Christian Endeavor meetings challenge ourselves, our friends, and strangers to the greatest task the world has ever known, that of saturating mankind and society with an enthusiastic and God-given purpose which rides above and overshadows all influences tending to destroy the supreme good which dominates in our thought.

Russia is an outstanding example of a nation that fears the result of the inroads of Christian truth. She today refuses to permit the teaching of the Christian ideals in her schools and public assemblies. She realizes the vast power of an idea, of the truth. Wherever the Christian truth has gone absolute freedom from bondage in time comes to reign supreme. Russian rulers well know the result of such, so they refuse to listen to the truth. Nevertheless our first and foremost duty then as Christian Stewards is to present this truth in its purity and fulness and varied aspects thus helping people to realize that God is King of kings and Lord of lords and thus the owner of every life, that he has for every personage a plan which is really materializing. Like the rosebud gradually unfolds under the tutelage and care of the heavenly Father, so life as such is indeed sweet when we can really react to friends, to beautiful sunsets, and such with an enthusiastic and meaningful appreciation.

The natural result of a frequent presentation of the truth is the establishment of an attitude of belief in the minds of many. This will be one of the first evidential fruits of our labor. Such will have a double reaction, blessing both the giver and the recipient. The most far reaching and basic belief is that confidence in human values. We are faced with the living reality of those eternal values in both young and older life. Then are we willing to give of that which we are holding as stewards of God to those in need. He who gives a cup of cold water to those parched lips gives Christ to them and contributes to Christ's cause.

JUNIOR ENDEVAOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for January 2)

Partners with God.

Ma t. 7:7-10; I Cor. 3:9

"And who is this young man that you have with you?" said a kindly gentleman as he shook hands with the "young man's" father.

"Meet my son, Mr. Smith, Jack, Mr. Smith is an old friend of mine."

"I am dad's partner," said the boy proudly.

Jack and his dad really were great chums. They had many good times together. Sometimes they played together, and sometimes they worked together. Jack really tried very hard to help his dad. He did help him, too, though he helped more by being obedient and thoughtful than by the things that he could do.

One day when Jack was at Sunday school, he heard the story of the boy, Jesus, on his trip to Jerusalem. After telling the story Jack's teacher explained that even though Jesus was just a boy, he was working for his Father, and was his Father's Partner.

Jack held up his hand as soon as he heard that and he said, "I am my Daddy's partner."

"That is very nice," said the teacher. Then the teacher continued to explain the lesson, saying, "Jesus meant that he was serving God, because you see, God was his Father. Just think, Jesus was only twelve years old but he was a partner for his Father, God. God is our Father, too, isn't he? You remember the prayer we say after Sunday school. We always begin, 'Our Father, who art in heaven.' That means that God is truly our Father and that he loves us and wants us to be good children, just like our Daddies do. Wouldn't it be nice to be partners with God like Jesus was when he was a little boy?"

"I don't see how we could do that," said Mary. "We can not talk to God like we can to our daddies. Our daddies can tell just what they want us to do, and they can tell us about their business if we are their partners; but I do not see how God can tell us what he wants done."

"Did your father ever go away, Mary?" asked the teacher.

"Yes, he goes away on long business trips sometimes," Mary replied.

"When he is away and thinks of something that he wants you to do, how does he tell you? If he is not at home, he can not call to you and say, 'Mary, go feed the chickens.' Instead, what does he do?"

"He writes letters, of course," Mary thought that that was a very easy question to answer.

Then her teacher continued, "Did you ever think of the Bible as a long letter from God and from Jesus? I think that it is nice to feel that the Bible is a nice long letter from our Father who is up in heaven and that it tells all of us who are his children just what we ought to do. The Bible tells us all about the business which God wants carried on here on earth and if we want to be his partners, we will help to carry on that business."

"I am going to tell daddy all about this," thought Jack as he listened to the teacher's words.

"When someone wants you to do something and you do not have time to ask your parents' permission, what do you do? Do you ever try to think things over and decide what they would want you to do? I think that that is another good way that we can have our heavenly Father's help. When we do not know what he would want us to do, we can talk to him in prayer and then try very hard to think and decide just what he would want us to do, as his partners. 'Children, how many of you want to be God's partners?'"

Every pupil in the class said that he would like to be a partner with God. The teacher said, "You may go now and I hope that you will remember our lesson and will be faithful partners."

Jack hurried to join his dad and said to him, "Daddy, I am your partner. Let's both be partners with God."

"All right, son. I think that that is a fine thing to do," said his dad.

It is my custom to have a book sermon once each month. These book Sundays have been very profitable in every way . . . I find that my entire congregation welcomes this monthly consideration of some current book. I do not give a book review. Instead, I analyze the philosophy underlying the books. I also have plans for a book counter in the church lobby.—Dr. Charles Frances Potter.

My Trip to Europe

By Marguerite Gribble

Being a Copy of My Travel Journal

DR. GRIBBLE'S INTRODUCTORY NOTE

18 Rue Nationale 18 Montpelier France.
 Dear Evangelist Readers, especially the Children:

I thought you might enjoy this copy of Marguerite's journal. If so, we will try to forward future portions also.

This will be a brief resumption of Marguerite's letters with this exception, that now you will receive them in her own words as she is 11 years old. We ask your prayers during this year in France.

Lovingly yours,
 Florence N. Gribble.

London, England., Nov, 10-11, 1926.

I went to the Bible House, and saw the oldest Bible in print, the Bible which Martin Luther wrote, Bibles in all prints and sizes and a scroll like you would have seen in olden times.

We also went to see St. Paul's Cathedral. In it we saw statues, pictures, and on the outside people feeding pigeons.

Then we went to Westminster Abbey and saw statues of the distinguished people that are buried there. Then on the floor it would tell where the people were buried.

November 11, 1926.

I went to the British Museum and went into the reading room and saw lots of people reading. They have thousands of books in there. The room will seat 458 people. Then I went to the other part of the museum where the other things were. I saw costumes of some old Indians, idols, carved stones and stones with writing on them. There were a few stones from Nebuchednezzar's house. We saw things from East Africa such as things the natives wear to decorate themselves. I saw an alligator, a great big one. We saw statues and other things. We also saw the mummies. They didn't have any kings and queens because they were all kept in Egypt. One mummy was 6500 years old and it still had hair on its head. We saw another that was partly unwrapped. His skin was all black and shrivelled up. We saw some that were wrapped and some that were in their caskets. The caskets are just an image of themselves that they are put into. I saw some mummies of cats, dogs and monkeys also. If 6500 years ago men looked as they do today we know that in that time no evolution has taken place!

November 12-13, 1926.

Brussels' Belgium

Mother and I looked after the baggage. Then we went to the American Mission and saw some friends of mother's. We talked with them for a while and then went out to lunch. Then we went to see a lady who lived a long way from the center. When we got there we found out she wasn't home, so we had to come all that long way back. We hunted up a shop where we could get some fruit and other things to eat. Then we hunted up a hotel and got a nice room where we could see things. We ate supper and went to bed. Mother told me three history stories about kings and other great people and that ended one day.

November 13-15, 1926.

Paris, France

We got up early in the morning, had breakfast and left. Our train left Brussels at 9:00 A. M. and got into Paris at 1:03 P. M. We got through customs with no more trouble than to have my trunk and one of mother's opened and examined. Then we found a hotel and went to see some of mother's American friends. We ended that day by telling stories.

November 14, 1926.

Sunday in Paris

We got up and went to an American church that mother's friend told her about. Then after church we went to lunch with Mrs. Lewis, who is mother's friend.

She has two boys, Frank and Bob. Frank is 15 and Bob is 8. They had fixed up a trolley that ran by electricity. They made it all by themselves. We played with that for a while, and then ate dinner. After lunch we went to the Bible Institute at Nogent sur-Marne for our mail. And there wasn't a single thing for me! I was disappointed. When we went back to the train, mother discovered she had lost her umbrella. So we went back to get it. It was there, so we were given some chocolate and came back to the hotel.

Oh, yes, I forgot that on our way home from church we crossed one of the most beautiful bridges in the world. Also we saw the burial place of Napoleon Bonaparte.

November 15, 1926.

Montpelier, France

We took a train at 8 in the morning from Paris to Montpelier. We got here at 11 o'clock at night. We went right to bed. There were no stories that night. We were too sleepy.

November 16, 1926.

We got up and the servant put us in another room. Somebody was in the room we were to get, so we had to take another last night. The room we are in now is very nice. We have two rooms on the third story for 50 francs a day, including board, and we intend to stay a month. Then we have a little balcony outside right by our room. We just open up the French window and step out. It's very nice. One room is like a parlor.

November 17, 1926.

This morning I started to school. The school hours are from 8 to 11 in the morning and from 2-4 in the afternoon. So I got up at six o'clock in order to get to school in time. School is called Lycee. I have a nice teacher. Her name is Madame Andre. I play with the girls, although I can't talk to them. We wear aprons like uniforms. We go to school on Saturday but not on Thursday.

November 18, 1926.

There is no school today for me. But mother had to go to the dispensary, so I stayed with Mme. Armand, a friend of Mother's. I was over there for about two hours, then mother came home and we had lunch at the hotel. Then she had to go out again so I went over to Mme. Armands again. We had tea at her place at four o'clock.

November 19, 1926.

This morning I went to school all alone on the street car for the first time. I got back and forth all right in the morning. In the afternoon mother wanted me to take a little nap before school. School is at two and I got up at 1:25. I went outside to wait for the street car. I didn't have to wait long, for one was coming right then. But it didn't stop! So I had to wait ten minutes for another car. I got on the next one and got to the Lycee, but they had very nearly all gone to their classes. There were only a few that hadn't. When I got inside the gate one of my friends said, "Go quick, go quick." I did and got there just on time! Oh I was glad. (Those are just some of the few English words that she can say).

November 20, 1926.

I got to school all right, but when I came back I rode a block or two too far before I noticed it. I rode clear up to the park. When I saw where I was I got off quickly. I had only been to the park once before, so I didn't know exactly which way to go. So I asked a lady whom I saw. She took me right to the door. I certainly was glad. She only knew a few words of English, but when I told her, "Thank you," which in French is "Merci beaucoup," she said, "With great pleasure." I had lunch and rode to school. Then I walked home with a friend and had tea at Mme. Armand's. Then we shopped a little bit and came home where mother had five surprises for me. But I had already guessed them! And I was right!

November 21, 1926.

We went to church this morning with Mme. Armand. The preacher is called the "pasteur." He wears a long black robe with big sleeves, and white collar and cuffs. From his collar there hang two white pendants. They have church thus—They sing a song, then the "pasteur" talks. Then they sing another song and the "pasteur" talks again. After repeating this several times the "pasteur" preaches. I don't know what (he preached) about, because I can't understand.

November 22, 1926.

After dinner yesterday we went to the park. We didn't know the band was going to play, but it did. We listened to it a while then took a little walk and came home.

Thanksgiving Day, November 25, 1926.

We didn't have to get up so early this morning because there wasn't any school. So mother said we would go to the Mediterranean Sea. I was glad. We went at two in the afternoon and came back on the four o'clock train. Mother's friend, Mademoiselle Puyamme went with us. I took a sack along for shells. I got 76. When it was about time to go for the train we watched the men catch and pack live eels. They put the small eels in boxes alive for the market in Paris. They put the great big ones alive in boxes for South America. They put ice right in on top of them. The poor things would freeze to death then.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MUNDAY'S CORNER REVIVAL

The Munday's Corner Brethren church was formerly known as the Pike congregation. On account of the heavy auto traffic since the completion of the improved William Penn Highway, it is everywhere now known as the Munday's Corner, and the church naturally takes the new name by which the place is now nationally known.

This congregation secured the services of Elder I. D. Bowman from Leesburg, New Jersey to hold them a three weeks' meeting which began the last Sunday evening in October. We had more than the usual amount of hindrances with which to contend—"flu," grippie and bad colds, and some of the most rainy weather possible. Then too some of our men had to work and only got to church occasionally. Notwithstanding all these hindrances and others Brother Bowman labored most earnestly and night after night he gave the call and we were all made to rejoice to see twenty-six yield themselves to the Lord. A few of these were reclaimed. All the rest were baptized and confirmed except one who was baptized by trine immersion but will unite with another church. The splendid character of the new members is worthy of note as many of them were heads of families and this adds character and stability to the church. A splendid love feast ended this good meeting. Our communion was very well attended, and a fine spirit throughout this service was very apparent.

Vinco

It was formerly Vinco and the Pike, now it is Munday's Corner and Vinco. Brother I. D. Bowman allowed himself to be used in a short meeting at Vinco. He could only stay here ten days on account of previous arrangements. In the ten days he was here there were nine confessions, most of which have been baptized and confirmed. The remaining will be baptized shortly. The best work our brother "I. D." did while here was to effect a pastoral union of these two churches, and now they are laboring together as they formerly did with the same pastor for both. Brother "I. D." will be long remembered here for his good work, his deeply spiritual sermons and for his genial presence. Vinco will hold a communion service shortly if weather conditions permit. Brother Bell will be with us tomorrow.

J. L. BOWMAN.

ARDMORE BRETHREN CHURCH, SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

We began our active work with these Brethren on October 1st, although we formally took over the gavel from our good Brother B. H. Flora on Sunday afternoon, September 19th. This Sunday's special program having been arranged by Brother Flora when he learned that it was possible for us to be present. It was indeed a fitting service for the culmination of a successful pastorate. The day's service was the better for the presence of our good Brother N. V. Leatherman, the ardent pastor of the First church of South Bend.

We feel ourselves fortunate to be the pastor to follow Brother Flora, for his work is such as to make the work of his successor easier, and this is as it should be. It is our feeling that no minister should allow his pastorate to extend over such a period of time as to allow dissention to arise which will necessitate a year or more work on the new man's time rebuilding that which should not have been torn down. We are glad to begin trying to build where Brother Flora left off.

We are glad to state that the work is progressing nicely, not as rapidly as we should like, but some things have been accomplished worthy of mention. We are striving to build up the Sunday school phase of the church work. Our aim is ten percent more each month than the preceding. In this we were more than successful in October; fell a little short in November, but the first Sunday in December there were 148 present and this is the largest number ever present in this Sunday school. Our aim is 250 by April first, and we hope not to be "fooled" in this hope, for we shall strive to that end.

Another point in which we exceeded previous records was in our Thanksgiving offering. The largest offering ever lifted by this church for Home Missions was $44.00 and that was some several years ago when the church proper was stronger than today and yet we rung the bell to $46.25 and we are glad for this.

Morning services are not attended as we should like, but the evenings have been gratifying, especially in the presence of our young people.

One of the good works that Brother Flora started ere he left was the erecting of a fine parsonage. This will soon be completed and we hope to spend New Year's Day in it. Ardmore Brethren are a people of no little faith or else they would never have tackled such a proposition with their few numbers. The new parsonage will be a most modern house, seven rooms, and builded of the best materials, and with double garage in connection.

This is the first time, at least, for a number of years, that this people have tried to support a full time pastor, but with the every Sunday program, we feel sure that great good will result, and to that end we are thinking, praying, and laboring with a very considerate and cooperative people.

Now for the Christmas program rendered, we trust in honor of the Christ we love, and then on into the year's work.

E. A. DUKER.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Attendance at Sunday forenoon services, the 12th of December was 124. One year ago on the same day it was 122. The 12th was a very muddy, rainy day to get out too.

The offering for the Foreign Mission service when Brother Sickel was with us was $18.81. About two weeks later the offering for Home Missions, November the 28th, was $19.75, and some more yet to come in.

The church officers report that the regular offerings are better also than they have been for some time. The church here now has some real givers, there being of late an example of real giving.

The Sunday school and church are preparing for the usual Christmas program. The singing of Christmas carols will be a prominent feature at Riverside for a couple weeks now. It was voted the morning of the 12th to give the White Gift offering to the National Sunday School Association.

Friday night the 10th instant, Riverside entertained the girls' and boys' basketball teams from Highland Institution. The Cicero Noble Gymnasium was a very lively place while the two games were on. Our girls lost to the Highland girls, 4 to 11, while our boys won from the Highland boys 12 to 4.

We have had the pleasure of entertaining the Fourth District Christian Endeavor officers this last week, a day and a night. The president of the organization gave a splendid chapel talk, and their visit was much enjoyed and helpful. Some of Rivers' de's folks are officers in this organization.

The Delco Light Plant, shipped to Riverside from the Old Folks' Home, Flora, Indiana, has been installed, and is giving excellent service now, though there were some trying experiences in getting it going properly. But now it is working fine, and it may supply enough light for the place for some time now. We wish all who had a part in making this possible, might see and know what it means to have dependable light again.

Work has now actually begun on the new graded road to be built right by Riverside. It is expected that by next summer it will be graded this far up from our county seat, Jackson. The coming of this road will mean much to the work here in different ways.

The school is about "full-up" now, and the school work moving along nicely. From present indications we will have to turn many away after the holidays for lack of room. We just recently made our report to the State on our accredited relations. We trust that if Miss Hornsby leaves us for the Foreign Field next year, that someone properly qualified, with a College course completed, can be secured to take her place.

A box or package of jelly came to our postoffice very much broken up, so much so that our postmaster put it into another box, and when we got it there was no mark or anything by which we could tell where it came from. We have also not received any letter from the donors. The jelly has been distributed among the workers, and greatly enjoyed by them, and we would like to write the givers telling them how much the gift was enjoyed.

On the 4th instant we had our first disposal of clothing for the year. Everything passed off nicely, and there was some financial income from the same, as well as helping the people very much who got the clothing. It seems that there could be more used, if it could reach the Institute in time to get it out to the people before the winter weather is over. Those having sent clothing thus far have been written a personal letter of gratitude for the same.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

BETHEL CHURCH, MULVANE, KANSAS

We are very desirous for the brotherhood to know about our successful meeting held recently in the Bethel church by our able evangelist, Rev. A. B. Cover of Falls City, Nebraska. Brother Cover is a fine co-worker. I love to work with him; he has a way of leaving the pastor and people united. He had laid the foundation last year and this year he began on the first night with evangelistic sermons and it seemed that the church had gripped the revival spirit. The weather caused a little break at the start, but the rain was light and the rest of the time the weather was ideal.

The meetings started on November the 7th, by the pastor, expecting Brother Cover on Monday. A message reached us on Sunday morning stating that he could not come till Thursday, November the 11th. It was up to the pastor to do the preaching until he came. Sunday morning we had a full house, but it rained all afternoon and part of Monday, and the roads in Kansas get bad quickly. The sun shone Monday afternoon and all day Tuesday and on Wednesday we had a fine attendance. On Thursday night Brother Cover arrived and the revival was on for twelve days. But he had to be home for a union meeting and so could not stay longer. This was the second meeting Rev. Cover had held for this church and were it not that he is leaving the Mid-west district and going to Los Angeles, he would get a call for a third. We hate to see him leave the Mid-west district at such a time as this when Modernism is making every possible effort to establish its corruptible doctrines in the minds of our youth.

As a result of this meeting the church received a spiritual uplift. Cover's sermons are like mica, they leave a smooth surface, and our church is running smoothly and in fine fellowship. So fine is this spirit that one soul was baptized last Sunday evening, and two on Monday the 22nd, and these two were adults—a mother and a young woman who has assisted the church very much in playing the piano. She is also a fine singer. The third person to be baptized was the head of a family. I know the brotherhood will be glad to learn of our success.

HOMER W. ANDERSON.

COLUMBUS, OHIO

We are pleased to give to Evangelist readers news from the First Brethren church of this city. We enjoy our new pastor, Rev. R. E. Gotschall, who is earnest in preaching the Gospel, and his messages are filled with the Spirit and delivered in a manner that they sink deep into the hearts of the listeners.

He began a revival the 14th of November and continued until the twenty-eighth inclusive. This meeting resulted in fifteen being added to the church. Eight were reclaimed. A sister was received from the Church of the Brethren by letter, and six were baptized. It was a great victory and we praise God for it and for all who remembered us in their prayers.

Brother Clarence Sickie visited us and delivered his lecture on Argentina, which was very interesting. He was entertained in the pastor's home.

We ask the prayers of God's faithful ones for a continued growth of his cause here through the efforts of the First Brethren church.

MRS. E. J. HORNE.

SIDNEY, INDIANA

As we journey over the long country roads we do not go far before we need food, machine supplies, instructions and many other essentials. So in our journey through life, endeavoring to live as followers of Christ, we have need of spiritual food and instructions from the Word of God. The Sidney Brethren have feasted on the Word for the past two weeks ending Sunday evening, December 12, and we are glad to report a very successful meeting. The Word of God was preached by Rev. George Swihart of Roann. He explained the Word so plain in his sermons that all could understand. The first week he taught from Revelation, warning of a sinful and careless life. The second week he used Paul's teachings to the early churches, showing plainly from the Bible that the teachings and ordinances of the church today should be the same as they were then.

Our sister churches cooperated with their presence and prayers, and the school principal worked out a program for the pupils. A good crowd attended the services each evening. The pastor's daughter, Miss Edna Swihart, led the singing. Five new members were added to the church.

The W. M. S. enjoyed a fine all-day meeting with Mrs. M. A. Smith making bandages. Interest was shown by twenty-five members being present. We are also rejoicing over the recovery of Sister Myrtle Sisk, whom the Lord spared after her recent operation at the Huntington Hospital. She feels wonderfully helped by the anointing according to James 5:14-15, by the pastor, assisted by Brother Landis.

Our prayers are that we may continue in the Lord's favor. MRS. T. DEFABRITIS.

A PREACHING CAMPAIGN

Dear Evangelist Readers:

I was on a preaching campaign for nearly eight weeks.

On my way to Virginia I stopped off four days in Delaware and preached at four different places. One service in Brother George Mitchell's home, near Ocean View, and one service in Brother Harvey Evans' home near Bethany Beach. These are loyal Brethren homes and we had good services and other good Brethren attended the services. Then we preached near Millsboro and Georgetown, Delaware, about twenty miles from Ocean View. Here we had services at another George Mitchell's. There we found some good people had gathered, loyal to the Whole Gospel faith.

The last night I preached at old Father Workman's. Brother Workman is in his 80th year and happy in the Lord. His two loyal sons, well-to-do farmers with their families and a number of other good brethren were here. We had a spiritual meeting! From here I went to Bethlehem, Virginia, and held a two weeks meeting for Brother E. B. Shaver. "E. B." is a good active pastor, only 83 years old. He was away over one Sunday, lecturing against war in congregations of The Church of the Brethren. Also was called to preach the funeral of Brother John Leedy. Most of the time he helped in the service. We did considerable visiting. We struck seeding time which hindered the week night attendance. The immediate results were better than we expected.

Brother Hugh Logan entertained us royally. On Monday morning he took us to the early train and we went to Delaware and preached three sermons there. Then resting a day in Philadelphia in the home of my daughter, we entered upon an earnest campaign at the Pike church, near Johnstown.

Here we found a much larger congregation of Brethren than we expected. This field has been worked hard. After an aggressive battle for ten days we began to have results. In the next 10 days we received into the church 26, and one was baptized by Triune immersion who may join the M. E. church where his father is a member.

Among the number we took their pastor into the Brethren church. J. L. Bowman who lives at Echo, Pennsylvania, had been a member of the Church of the Brethren for a number of years. He has the universal good will of the Pike Brethren, also of the whole neighborhood. While a member of the Dunkard church, he preached here for several years. He has been a very dear friend of mine for many years. Five years ago at Jones' Mills, though pastor of the Dunkard church, he led many souls to Christ during my meeting there. Also helped to confirm them and also helped in the communion service. It gave me pleasure to take him back into the church.

We closed this meeting with a splendid communion service on Sunday night. Rested on Monday. Visited old friends in Johnstown, saw Bell, Ashman, Gingrich and spent the night with our dear Brother Belote. Was so glad to be in his home. He did me a great kindness once. How acts of kindness affects the heart.

On Tuesday night we opened an intense short campaign at Vinco. This church has not had a regular pastor for several years. It is only a few miles from the Pike church, which attended this meeting loyally and helped to make it a grand success. This meeting was far above our expectations, in attendance, in good offerings, and confessions. Closed with a full house and one confession the last night. Others were very near the Lord. They called Brother J. L. Bowman here as their pastor until April a year. "J. L." now has full time service at the Pike and Vinco churches. Vinco has a fine prospect to build up. Closed on Thursday night. Brother Fiord of Conemaugh took me to Johnstown and near midnight I was traveling towards the dearest spot to me on earth. Arrived home safely and happily after an absence of almost eight weeks.

Had 16 additions at Bethlehem (These have been reported by Brother Shaver.) Twenty-seven at the Pike church, and nine at Vinco. I baptized one in Delaware, making a total of fifty-two confessions, fifty-one of them being added to the church.

After a few days' rest I came to Delaware again and preached four sermons, had wonderful spiritual meetings here. Preached last night in the Presbyterian church in Ocean View. Missed the train for home five minutes, so I only have 8 hours to wait here in the depot.

Great blessings sometimes comes from disappointments. The map of the world might have been different, had not Peter been disappointed fishing one night; he might have been selling fish instead of having his boat clean and ready for the greatest preacher the world ever knew. Through his disappointment, he prepared his boat for the pulpit of the Christ, to preach the sermon that converted the man that opened the door of the church to the Jew and the Gentile. That blessed disappointment helps me to be content to wait to go home, and also gives me time during my rush of work to pen a few lines for the Evangelist. Pray for us in our isolation from the church we love so dearly and especially pray for the dear brethren in southern Delaware.

I want to mention in closing thanks for the great kindness shown me by Brother John Bracken and wife who entertained me at Pike, also to Sister Singer, for the splendid entertainment at Vinco.

MINUTES OF THE OHIO DISTRICT CONFERENCE HELD AT FREMONT, OCTOBER 19, 20, 21, 22, 1926

The Brethren churches of Ohio met in conference October 19 in the Fremont church with Moderator R. D. Barnard in charge. Elder W. E. Ronk led in devotions. This was followed by an Address of Welcome by Elder S. C. Henderson, pastor of the conference church. After announcements, a Credential Committee was appointed as follows: O. C. Starn, chairman, Lester King, S. C. Henderson, Mrs. John Baringer, Mrs. M. L. Sands. The sermon of the evening was preached by Vice Moderator O. C. Starn on the theme, "Our Task."

Wednesday Morning

Devotions were conducted by Elder Lester King. A fine message on "The Brethren Plea for this Day and Age," was given by Elder R. F. Porte of Louisville. Business was then taken up and a report of the Credential Committee given which showed that 55 Ministerial and 26 Lay credentials had been presented. On motion of Dr. Miller the credentials of only those delegates present were approved by conference. Conference Treasurer's report was read and accepted. Report is as follows:

Nominations for Committee on Committees was called for and Dr. C. A. Bame, Fred Vanator, and W. E. Ronk were elected.

Greetings from the Northwest Conference were received and Secretary ordered to send greetings of this conference in return.

A report of the Ministerial Examining Board showed that during the year the ordination of one minister was tentatively approved, that of Elder R. E. Gotschal of Columbus, Ohio.

On motion Dr. J. A. Miller was reelected a member of the Ministerial Examining Board for three years.

The Ohio Mission Board reported through the President, G. S. Baer. This report showed that our mission interests were in fine condition.

The Mission Board Treasurer's report was then given and approved.

R. A. HAZEN, Treasurer.

Brief reports were given by the Different Mission pastors, showing their progress and needs and asking for continued support on the part of all the churches of the district.

In the absence of regular credentials, Rev. R. E. Gotschal, of Columbus by vote of Conference was made a delegate with all privileges of Conference.

On motion the time for business was extended and Elder G. S. Baer was re-elected President of the Ohio Mission Board.

Conference engaged in song as transition to regular part of program.

Elder R. D. Barnard then gave the Moderator's address. This was a fine address and a special committee composed of J. A. Miller, R. F. Porte, Lester King, was appointed to bring in a report on same at the Thursday morning session.

Dr. J. A. Miller gave his first lecture on Journeying Through Bible Lands.

Wednesday Afternoon

The afternoon session opened with service of song led by Elder R. F. Porte. Devotions were led by Dr. R. R. Teeter.

This was followed by an address on "Deepening the Spiritual Life of the Home," given by Elder Lester King of New Lebanon.

On motion it was decided that the Board of Evangelists should consist of seven members and that Committee on Committees should bring in nominations.

Same Committee was ordered to nominate a Committee of three on Resolutions.

By common consent the nomination of Church Trustee, Executive Committee for National Conference Departmental Officers and College Trustee were referred to Committee on Committees.

Dr. J. A. Miller gave a splendid address on "The Land and the Book."

Simultaneous meetings were held by W. M. S. and Ministerium.

Wednesday Evening

Evening session opened with song service led by Elder Lester King.

Devotions were conducted by Elder Leslie Lindower, pastor at Ankenytown. The Ohio Mission Board then took charge and several members gave brief talks on different phases of the Board's work. President Baer opened the discussion and he was followed by M. L. Sands who spoke on "The Importance of Concentration in Our Mission Work." "Are We Giving as much as we Ought?" was the theme of W. E. Ronk. He was followed by R. F. Porte who spoke on, "The Mission Board and the Churches." Fred Vanator spoke on "Putting a Mission Church on a Paying Basis."

A report of the Committee on Committees was called for and the nomination of R. F. Porte, Charles Brown, Lester King were given for Resolutions Committee. They were elected.

Mrs. Holloway of Canton sang a solo.

Elder R. R. Teeter brought the Publishing Interests before the conference in his inimitable way.

Dr. W. S. Bell brought the closing message of the evening on the theme, "Putting the College on the Map." He thrilled the audience with his great address.

Thursday Morning

Devotions were led by Elder H. M. Oberholtzer of Fostoria.

Dr. Chas. A. Bame gave a splendid address on "What is Brethrenism."

The business session opened with a report of the Credential Committee. Their report of 39 lay and 24 ministerial credentials was accepted and the Committee continued.

The Committee on Committees reported the following nominations:

Church Trustee, E. F. Miller; Members of General Conference Executive Committee, Dr. C. A. Bame, S. C. Henderson.

District Evangelists, Martin Shively, M. L. Sands, Willis Ronk, A. L. DeLozier, R. F. Porte, E. M. Riddle, F. C. Vanator.

Departmental Officers—Religious Education, J. A. Garber; Sunday School, Q. M. Lyon; Christian Endeavor, E. M. Riddle; College Trustees, Wm. Balch for 1 year, E. F. Kilhefner, E. J. Worst, J. H. Young.

The Conference then proceeded to elect officers for the coming year and the following were elected:

Moderator, O. C. Starn, Gratis, Ohio; Vice Moderator, R. F. Porte, Louisville, Ohio; Secretary-Treasurer, M. L. Sands, Smithville, Ohio; Statistician, M. L. Sands.

After several meetings and consultations with pastors of Ohio points the Ohio Mission Board made the following report of Recommendations, Apportionments and Appropriations for the coming year.

Recommendation I.

The Board moved that Rittman and Springfield Center be combined into a circuit, which is in accord with rules of Conference, and that the terms of such combination and the securing of pastor for such circuit be left in the hands of the State Mission Board and the churches concerned.

Recommendation II.

That the following be the apportionments for the year 1926-1927. These payments are to be made quarterly.

Columbus,	$ 200.00
Mansfield,	800.00
Fremont,	400.00
Rittman-Springfield Center,	300.00

Total, $1,700.00

The following resolution was offered by the Board and approved by Conference:

That if Springfield Center finds it possible to provide for themselves a full time pastoral services, that we devote to Rittman alone the $300.00 now proposed for the Rittman-Springfield Center Circuit.

All of these recommendations, apportionments and appropriations were approved by Conference.

Elder G. S. Baer made a motion that Ohio District Conference go on record as appealing to churches having full time service that they loan their pastor for revival services in the Ohio Mission Churches without remuneration.

The motion carried.

The matter of next year's conference was taken up, and since there were so many invitations it was referred to a committee for discussion and a report ordered in a later session of conference.

A duet was sung by Elder and Mrs. M. L. Sands.

The Laymen's Movement was presented in a paper written by W. O. Nish and read by O. C. Starn. Some discussion followed which showed a general approval of those present but since Ohio District Central conference has already officially approved of this movement, no action was taken at this time.

After announcements and benediction the session closed.

Thursday Afternoon

The devotions were conducted by Rev. Mayes, pastor of the United Brethren Church of Fremont.

The program was taken up and Prof. A. J. McClain brought a wonderful lecture on Archeology and the Bible.

A solo was sung by Mrs. Diebel of Canton.

Dr. Chas. A. Bame spoke on the theme "The Brethren Church for Peace." Some discussion was had on the subject and the general trend of thought indicated that our people are thinking along this line and that as a whole we stand for Peace.

Simultaneous meetings were held by the W. M. S. and ministerium.

Thursday Evening

Devotions were conducted by Elder D. F. Eikenberry, pastor at Springfield Center.

Mrs. Naugle of Akron, Ohio, gave a reading.

A fine address was given by Elder E. M. Riddle on World Wide Christian Endeavor. Mrs. Holloway of Canton sang a solo at this time.

This was followed by a Bible lecture on Divine Healing of the Body given by Prof. Alva J. McClain of Ashland College. This was one of the finest messages of the conference.

Jimmie went to visit his Auntie for a whole week. He had never been away from home so long before. But he liked to come to Auntie's house, because she knew so many things to do. She could tell the finest stories that a little boy ever heard. She could make cookies, too. And she made them in all kinds of shapes,—like dogs, birds and stars. She could play games, too, and make a little boy have "lots" of fun.

It was almost supper time when Jimmie got to his Auntie's. His Auntie said, "Jimmie, I have a new game for you this time. I think you will like it."

Jimmie was excited. "Is it lots of fun, Auntie? Let's play it right now."

"All right," said Auntie, "but we must get some things with which to play. And we can't play it all at once, either, but we'll start right now."

She took a little box about three inches square and handed it to Jimmie. "This is the first thing we need," she said.

Jimmie opened the box, and what do you he found? He found—a bar of soap. "Now come to the bathroom, Jimmie," said Auntie, "and I'll show you how to play the first part of the game."

It did not look like a funny game to Jimmie, but he went to the bathroom. "This is the way," said Auntie. She took the soap and wet her hands in the water, then she rubbed and rubbed her hands together as she said:

"I'll wash and wash my hands so neat;
They must be clean before I eat."

"Let me have the soap, Auntie," said Jimmie. He wet his hands and together they rubbed and rubbed while they said: "I'll wash and wash my hands so neat;
They must be clean before I eat."

In just a little while their hands were real clean, and then it was supper time. Jimmie had a glass of milk beside his plate.

"I don't believe I want my milk, Auntie," he said.

"But that's part of the game," said Auntie. Then she said:

"I'll chew and chew my food just so,
And drink my milk; then strong I'll grow."

Jimmie laughed and took a sip of his milk. "Say it again, Auntie."

Auntie said it all over again. Then she said, "Jimmie, I want you to grow up to be a great big strong man." So Jimmie drank every drop of his milk.

After supper, Auntie went for another box about eight inches long. "Here is something else to help us play our game," she said.

Jimmie opened the box and what do you think he found? A pretty little toothbrush, just like Auntie used. She showed him how to use it while she said,

"Round and round my toothbrush goes,
Keeping my teeth two little white rows."

Jimmie brushed his teeth. They felt so clean.

Soon it was bedtime. Jimmie was so sleepy. Auntie tucked him in bed. He was so comfortable. Then she opened the windows, as she said:

"I'll push my windows up at night, Fresh air keeps colds away all right."

"Is that part of the game, Auntie?" asked Jimmie.

"Yes, how do you like my new game?"

"I like it fine," said Jimmie. "Is that all of it?"

"All except this:

"A healthy child I want to be,
Then I'll be happy, don't you see?"

"Will it help keep me happy if I play the new game?" Jimmie wanted to know.

"It will keep you well and strong, Jimmie. And when you are well and strong, you feel happier," said Auntie.

Jimmie thought about this a little, then he said, "Let's play the game again tomorrow, Auntie."

Auntie said, "All right, Jimmie."

"And when I go home I'm going to teach it to sister," Jimmie added.

Then Jimmie said his thank-you-prayer to God and kissed his Auntie good night.—D. V. B. S. Beginner Book.

Slumber Song

*Hush thee! my little one, if you would hear
The stealthy old Sandman drawing near;
Coming this way on velvet-clad feet,
Softly, quietly
creep, creep, creep!*

*High over head he waves his hand,
Filling the air with golden sand;
While heavy lids droop and are weighted down O'er eyes of blue and gray and brown.*

*The sandman smiles through the sifting sand
And scurries away to Slumberland,
Knowing that eyes that laugh and weep, Held fast in Dreamland will sleep, sleep, sleep!*

"Honor him whose life is perpetual victory, him who by sympathy with the invisible and real finds support in labor instead of praise, who does not shine and would rather not."

Getting Started Right

A great deal depends on getting started right in the new year. That is old, "as old as the hills," at least as old as human records. And some of you will quit reading this editorial right now and pass on to something more interesting because you have heard that statement made a thousand times. But that is our text, and wishing to do a little preaching we do not feel free to begin without a text. Moreover the truth seems of sufficient importance to justify our thrusting it out at our scattered congregation even though we may have but a Gideon's band to follow us to the end. A right start is always important. It is so with building a house or making a garment, with preaching a sermon or writing an editorial, and even with reading one. And it is especially important when it comes to making a new year count for Christ and the church.

If we are to begin this new year aright, there are certain attitudes of mind and heart which are essential to our equipment. First, we must share Christ's viewpoint of greatness. We must adopt his standard of values. Or, to put it negatively, we must cast aside and avoid unholy ambitions. That is a serious fault in church circles today, among the laity, and even among the ministry. Sometimes there is so much self-seeking, worldly ambition and jealous rivalry that there is no place for that spirituality that gives power, nor for that mutual consideration that makes for brotherliness. Our hearts are so centered on the things of this world that their values are reflected in all our conduct and relations with men, in our estimates of friendships and positions, and in the aims on which we bestow our efforts and gifts. It is not surprising to find such a condition prevailing among men and women of the world; it is perfectly natural. But we have a right to expect more of Christians. Jesus established a standard of values in sharp contrast with that of the world. When members of his chosen circle were found quarreling over who should be greatest in his kingdom, he said to them, "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all" (Mark 9:35). The world heralds its Alexanders, its Caesars, and its Napoleons as its great ones and shouts their praises to the skies, but God says, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city" (Prov. 16:32). The world looks with awe and amazement on its Rothchilds and Goulds, its Rockefellers and Henry Foids as they amass fabulous fortunes that challenge the imagination, and receive the homage of men and are called captains of industry, but the Son of the Highest says, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth" (Luke 12:15). The world marvels at the almost inexhaustible wisdom of its Platos and Aristotles, its Lockes and Kants, and they are called masters of learning, but Jesus calls a little child unto him and says, "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18:4). And so it is, in whatever life-interest or activity we may inquire, we shall find the Christian standard of values differing radically from that of the world.

How poorly do vast numbers of Christian people grasp the heavenly viewpoint! How often is it true that we who are the professed followers of the Lord Jesus are found among the devotees of worldly greatness! With what double-mindedness do we too often serve him to whom we have pledged our allegiance! We confess him with our lips, but our hearts are set on worldly values. We proclaim our devotion to his cause, but our minds are filled with unworthy aims. And it is not merely among the so-called inactive members of our churches that this fault is displayed. The church's leadership today as truly as in the days of Jesus is sometimes inoculated with the spirit of place-seeking, unrighteous scheming, striving and jealousy. Here and there even among the church's prominent officials are to be found those whose lives warn us of the power of appeal of worldly values and unhallowed ambitions. And their neutralizing of the church's power and retarding of its progress bear witness to the truth of Jesus' statement that "no man can serve two masters." And it might be, if we should carefully take stock of the sincerity of our purposes and aims, that we should find that the lives of us all are failing to contribute that strength to the kingdom forces that we ought to be rendering, and that we are more or less disposed to compromise with the world. Such compromising both destroys our influence as servants of God and betrays the weakness of our devotion to the highest things. "His servants ye are whom ye obey." And the idols of greatness to which we bow down reveal the ideals that our hearts most strongly cherish.

Second, if we are to make the most of this new year, as congregations and as a denomination, we must adopt a charitable attitude toward one another and be considerate and Christ-like in our judgments. That is a hard thing to do, because it is so natural to do the very opposite. It was so with Jesus' own disciples; on more than one occasion he had to contend with their impatience and harshness. They would call down fire and consume those who were inhospitable. They would forbid others from working miracles because they were not members of their group. They, in their irritation at the trouble caused by a Gentile woman who besought Jesus's aid in behalf of her distressed daughter, would have him send her away without the healing she sought. They would rebuke the mothers who brought their babies to Jesus to receive his blessing. And that same lack of charity and consideration for others caused them to quarrel among themselves, lest one should get a higher place in the approaching kingdom than the other. And in all this they were so human that they seem like present-day men. In practically every modern church are to be found many of these shortcomings being re-enacted day by day. We are all fairly saturated with prejudices, and uncharitableness and harshness of judgment have far too large a place in our lives to make for smoothness and cooperation. When such a spirit prevails all sorts of differences and difficulties may easily arise. One misunderstands a word or deed in another; then suspicion arises; then criticism and gossip take place; and then a situation has been built up that may easily block the plans and purposes of God for the individual lives and hinder the progress of the church and kingdom. What the church needs is to get rid of that ugly spirit and have put in its place the spirit of understanding and mutual consideration. Christian people who would be of the noblest service and build the finest character must cast aside their prejudice, suspicion and harsh judgment and receive into their hearts kindness, consideration and love. Unless there is a moving onto a higher plane the year for the individual and the church will be lacking in richness of experience and vigor of life, and there will be no worthwhile contribution made to the kingdom of God.

Third, (and this statement is primarily for the leadership of our churches) there should be an unassuming and considerate attitude in authority and leadership. One absolutely essential thing to the success of our congregational and denominational plans and programs is cooperation, and this can be obtained only where there is the right sort of spirit existing between the leaders and those who are led, between those in authority and those who are being directed. Jesus taught that first group of Christian leaders which he personally trained that they should not seek to "lord it over" their fellows, as was the custom, and is today, with those of the world. He is not to presume to be some superior person, but merely a leader among equals, having consideration for the feelings and wishes of those under him, asking nothing of others that he is not willing to do himself. He should be the servant of all whom he would direct, and have no high opinion of himself even in comparison with the humblest of those over which he has been given the care. And the Lord Jesus not only gave instructions along this line, but set the example as well. "I am among you as he that serveth," said he who was Lord of all. "He came not to be ministered unto but to minister," testified the great Apostle. And who is he who would presume to be some great one in the presence of such humiliation?

The other side of this proposition is that those who are under authority should recognize that authority as the ministry of God and should give due reverence and response. It is not an authority that may command, as an officer of the civil law may do, and insist on obedience. Nor is it an authority in the sense that the minister or leader speaks ex cathedra as the voice of God, as the Catholics insist. The authority is resident in the appeal of the proclamation of right principles to the conscience by one whom the church itself has set apart for that holy function. Such an one deserves the reverence and respect of the membership which is under obligation to heed the words of life which he proclaims, and to give him their hearty cooperation in the effort to build up the church of Christ. The true minister does not assume the role of an autocrat, but if he has been properly endowed, adequately trained and faithfully set apart for the holy office of the ministry, he has a right to be recognized by his parishioners as God's under-shepherd of their souls.

With these phases of our new year responsibility fresh in our minds, together with other items which each individual may care to add, let us enter the open door of our opportunity with hearts dedicated to the high purpose of rendering the largest service to Christ and the church, remembering that it does make a difference as to the ideals or aims with which we launch out upon the tasks of the new year, whether they be altruistic and spiritual or selfish and material. The two courses are before us, as a great sculptor has depicted in a statue called "The Two Ambitions." One figure sits on a throne with a jewelled crown on his head, and about him are ranged a group of servants proffering all the things that his selfish nature craves. The other figure is that of a young man of athletic build holding to a rock and reaching down into a raging sea to pull up a brother who is in mortal danger. The two ambitions are selfishness and service. The difference is vast and the choice is serious.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

A beautiful tribute is paid in this issue to the late Elder J. W. Leedy by Rev. J. A. McInturff, who credits the deceased with supplying him with the inspiration to enter the ministry. The publication of this article has been delayed for a time.

The Evangelist is in receipt of a unique announcement of the birth of a baby girl to Rev. and Mrs. H. H. Rowsey of Roanoke, Virginia. Her name is Jean Marie and she arrived on December 17, 1926, weighing eight and one-half pounds. We extend very hearty congratulations on behalf of the Evangelist family.

Sister Orville D. Jobson writes an interesting letter to the children of the Evangelist family concerning the trip on the Congo river on their return journey to Africa. We feel sure that not only the children will enjoy reading it, but the adults as well. We are glad to note that she has promised another similar letter and we shall hope for still others.

The church at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, has gone forward in fine style under the able leadership of Brother John Perry Horlacher and will soon be ready to dedicate a greatly enlarged house of worship. Dr. R. R. Teeter is engaged to officiate on this occasion. We shall doubtless be favored with a report of the achievement, together with a picture of the new church and, we hope, of the pastor.

News has reached the Evangelist office that Brother A. B. Cover, pastor of the church at Falls City, Nebraska, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Second Brethren church of Los Angeles, California, which has been without a pastor for a short time. Brother Cover has proven himself a very capable preacher and teacher of the Word and this new field will offer large opportunities.

Brother C. C. Grisso writes of his successful evangelistic campaign at Bryan, Ohio, where Brother E. M. Riddle is the enterprising pastor. Twenty souls were saved and the church greatly stirred. He had a very enjoyable time at Bryan and found the work in a splendid condition and believes the church has the possibility of a much larger future. Brother Grisso also reports his own work at Warsaw, Indiana, as moving forward in an encouraging way, the church taking its place with some of the larger churches of the town.

As this paper was starting out in the mails a conference of the Pacifist churches was being held at Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania, Elizabeth College, a Church of the Brethren institution, acting as host. It convened on December 29 and 30. The churches participating were the Church of the Brethren, the Mennonite and the Friends. Among the subjects discussed were: "Pacifism at Work", "The Teaching of Jesus and the Prevention of War", "The Churches for Peace", "to Bring Peace," besides Reports of Work for Peace being done by the denominations present.

The editor wishes to acknowledge with appreciation the receipt of a number of Christmas greetings from pastors and other readers of the Evangelist. We thank one and all very sincerely, and wish for them and for the entire Evangelist family the greatest true happiness and real prosperity possible in the new year—1927. May it be that we all shall, as we pass this, another milepost on the highway of time, set our faces like flint toward the realization of our highest and holiest ambitions and resolutions. Let us not fear to make resolutions, but fear to break them and to desert our purposes.

Pastors and church leaders should not forget that the fourth Sunday in January is set aside as Publication Day on which time an offering is to be lifted to apply on the debt incurred in the purchase of our new Publishing House. If the churches keep hacking away at this debt year after year for a few years more, and if all will cooperate, it will not be long until we will have a debt-free publishing house. That will be a great liberation and will make possible larger things in the field of denominational literature. January 23, 1927 is the date. Let us plan and pray for a great day of cooperative giving.

We have previously announced through these columns the Ohio Pastors' Convention to be held at Columbus, January 24-27. It promises to be a great opportunity for our pastors to meet and discuss mutual problems with clergymen of all denominations from all parts of Ohio. The management of this convention is sending out suggestions to the official boards of the various congregations urging that they provide the funds and send their pastor, in view of the returns that such an experience enjoyed by their pastor would bring to them. It is a good suggestion and we commend it to our Ohio churches. Some of our pastors have attended various of these conventions in years past and have spoken highly of the benefit derived therefrom. The estimated expense for lodging, board and registration for the full time of the convention is from $12 to $18. The car fare will depend the distance from Columbus.

We are privileged to present to our readers this week the likeness of another new church together with a write-up by the pastor, Brother Dyoll Belote, who in the short space of a year from the time he took charge of that work led the people in the completion of a new church building that had long been needed, several times started and at least once before started. It is a splendid accomplishment and reflects credit on the pastor and his co-workers. It offers to the church new and larger possibilities of growth and efficiency in their work. It is said to be adequate for the needs of this congregation for a number of years to come and is well furnished. It was not dedicated free of debt because the members are neither numerous nor financially strong, but the remaining debt can be easily cared for by the membership. Dr. W. H. Beachler was special speaker and money raiser of the occasion. Brother J. L. Gingrich preached the afternoon sermon and other pastors assisted.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Christian Baptism

By J. F. Garber

How?

We as a church believe in and practice trine immersion as the true Christian baptism, because: first, we believe it should be immersion from the fact that the original meaning of the word baptize (Baptizo) was to dip, to plunge, or to immerse; And from the fact that history traces trine immersion to the apostles.

Second, when the ordinance was to be observed by inspired men of God, they went where there was much water. Read with me, Matthew 3:5, 6, "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins."

It would have been unnecessary to go to the river to sprinkle, or to pour.

Again: John 3:23, "And John was baptizing in Aenon, near Salem, because there was much water there, and they came and were baptized."

John baptized at this place because there was much water there. It does not say he preached or held his meetings there because there was much water there, but he baptized.

From this we infer that it was necessary to have much water to baptize; showing conclusively that he baptized by immersion.

Third, we learn from God's Word that persons went down into the water to be baptized. Jesus set the example when he came to John and was baptized of him in Jordan, and straightway came up out of the water.

Then, he was in the water. Why was he in the water? It would have been unnecessary except for immersion. Read now Acts 8:38, 39. "And he commanded the chariot to stand still, and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the Eunuch saw him no more."

Here we see that Philip and the Eunuch both went down into the water, and both came up out of the water. While they were in the water the ordinance of baptism was administered. Why go into the water if they did not immerse? There was no need of either of them going into the water to sprinkle; that could have been done out on the bank, or in the chariot for that matter.

Fourth, Persons who are baptized are said by Paul to have their bodies washed with pure water. Hebrews 10:22, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Please notice these two facts concerning a Christian—his heart is sprinkled from an evil conscience, by the blood of Christ, which was shed for the remission of sins, and his body is washed with pure water, which can only be done by immersion, for a few drops of water sprinkled, or poured on the head of an individual, cannot be said to be even a symbol of washing the body. Therefore we consider the evidence conclusive that the brethren addressed by Paul, had been immersed—washed. When he said in

ELDER J. F. GARBER

Romans 6.3, 4, 5, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." The honest, sincere seeker for truth—the one that really wants to know what is the Apostolic mode of baptism, will need seek no further than this scripture to settle in his own mind the question as to whether baptism should be administered by sprinkling, or immersion.

Paul here calls it a burying, a planting; in either case a covering up. When we bury anything, we cover it; put it under. When we plant seed we put it under; so that it will grow up into new life. He said we are buried with him, and risen with him to walk in newness of life; resurrected from the body of sin, which is death, to live the new life: the life that is hid with Christ in God. We will just say further on this point: we cannot be buried in baptism with a few drops of water.

Bowing in Baptism

Because Paul in his Epistle to the Romans said, "We are buried with Christ by baptism," some people infer that baptism should be performed like laying a person in the grave, on his back. They fail to notice that there is not oneword said about being buried in the likeness of his burial; but that Paul plainly says, "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." He refers here to baptism; and paraphrasing it I would say, We are buried with Christ by baptism in the likeness of his death: and when we come forth from the water, we shall come in the likeness of his resurrection—a changed, transformed being, to walk in newness of life. John 19:30, tells us how Christ died. "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished; and he bowed his head and gave up the Ghost."

Planted,—buried—immersed—baptized in the likeness of his death. He bowed his head and gave up the Ghost. In baptism we bow our head and die to our sins: become a new creature in Christ Jesus, having buried the old man with his deeds.

Holy men of old when worshiping God either bowed, kneeled, or fell on their faces, thus giving us an example of the posture that would be acceptable to God when we worship him. Those who go backward, according to Old Testament custom, are condemned. God said of the wicked, speaking through Isaiah, "that they might go, and fall backward, and be braken, and snared, and taken." And those wicked men who would take Jesus to crucify him, "Went backward and fell to the ground," at his words.

When you consider these facts, dear reader, do you not think that we are right when we bow in baptism? We can see it no other way.

Trine Immersion

We believe that Christ and his apostles, taught and practiced trine immersion.

Because, first: the formula for baptism as given in the great commission cannot be properly observed in any way, except by trine immersion. Jesus said, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The formula used in administering the rite of baptism is taken from the above Scripture, and follows: "I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

This is an elliptical sentence; and for the purpose of simplifying it, and making it easier to understand, let us supply the words omitted, and use the word immerse; which is the original meaning of the word baptize. This makes it self-explanatory: "I immerse you in the name of the Father, and I immerse you in the name of the Son, and I immerse you in the name of the Holy Ghost." This makes it very plain, and no candid scholar will deny the accuracy of this explanation of the formula which is given by the Master, and used by all denominations when administering the ordinance.

Let me illustrate again: We will suppose that when Philip baptized the Eunuch, they both went down into the water, and Philip not knowing just how the rite was performed, asks Paul who, let us suppose again, was present: Shall I sprinkle, pour, or immerse him? Paul answers, (as he wrote in his Epistle to the Romans) we are buried with Christ by baptism, in the likeness of his death, and our Master said it must be performed in the name of each of the three Persons of the Trinity. Philip readily understands this, and the Eunuch is immersed into each of the three names, and they both come up out of the water, the Eunuch having been baptized according to the instructions of Paul.

This, dear reader, symbolizes the mystery of the trinity: three in one: or one composed of three. One baptism, performed by immersion or planting into the name of each division of the Godhead: thus giving equal recognition to each Power (or Person) of the divine eternal Kingdom—the Trinity.

Second: History traces trine immersion back to the apostles, and without doubt they knew the proper mode. As my space is limited I will give but two testimonies, both from church fathers of an early date:

Chrysostom, a celebrated Greek father of the church, born at Antioch about 344 A. D., said: "Christ delivered to his disciples one baptism in three immersions of the body, when he said to them: go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Tertullian, who is the earliest of the Latin fathers of the church, whose works are extant, wrote: "After the resurrection, promising that he would send the promise of the Father, and lastly commanding that they should immerse into the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, not in one name, for we are immersed for each name, into each person: not once but thrice."

Tertullian was born about 60 or 70 years after the death of the apostle John, and he surely knew what the apostolic teaching and practice was.

Conclusion

In conclusion I wish to say; At the same time that Jesus said, Go preach, he said, baptize them. It is our duty to baptize; and it is our duty to strive to follow as nearly as possible the plan of salvation given to us by our Savior, as recorded in his book.

If one prayerfully searches the Scriptures for real truth, he will find it: and the truth shall make us free.

The Bible and Lying

By M. A. Stuckey

In the olden day the poet Lucretius, in order to beautify an inferior and despised sect, said with great appropriateness: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth (a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene), and to see the errors and wanderings and tempests and mists in the vale below."

Such is the position of a Christian who feels that no lie is ever justifiable. He stands in the midst of the snowy peaks of Lebanon and gazes straight into the heart of the Almighty. Truth, he cries, is eternal. It is God. It is Jesus Christ. It is the Holy Spirit. It inheres in God's very nature; it is manifested in Jesus' earthly pilgrimage; it is sponsored, animated and strengthened in the life of man because of the witness of the Spirit. Fancy, if you will, this inhabitant of the everlasting Alps looking down into the valley of the shadows where the spectral faces of those who are lovers and makers of a lie come and go! Think of the shudder that pierces the heart of one who lives a mountain life as he gazes down into the low country.

But why the shudder, you ask? Simply because a life was uttered by the Maker of all lies in an earthly paradise many centuries ago. The Divine Record which narrates the fact opens like a grand symphony rendered by the angels. Ere long the celestial music ceases. Paradise is lost. The heavenly messengers depart. Man, perfect, pure, spotless and holy, sins. Like a whipped slave he leaves earth's Eden weeping bitterly. He is to conquer, subdue and inherit the earth. It all seems so strange to him—since the great disobedience. Now he is a pilgrim, a wanderer, a sojourner in a world infected with sin and disease. Then he was with God, happy and contented. But it was Eve's way. Furthermore it was Adam's way. And the children of men—countless millions of them—have lived, suffered and died under a curse which God has not seen fit to remove until this day. Why? The Devil whispered a lie and man listened.

Leaving our picture for the time being, let us turn our minds to a more detailed consideration of the announced subject. To reveal in a general way the truth relative to lying from the Biblical point of view will be the purpose of this effort. A detailed study of the topic cannot be attempted here, but a presentation of some order will be followed.

Lying Defined

The Hebrew words for "lie" are sheker and kazabh. The Greek words are psuedos meaning "to speak falsely," "to fabricate," "to make a false statement; and pseudo-mai as it is rendered in Acts 5:3. It follows that "a lie is a story told or a part acted with the intention to deceive." Words such as these from the lips of G. Campbell Morgan depict clearly the Biblical idea of a lie. Falsehood, moreover, in many Scriptural references signifies treachery, trespasses, shams, et cetera. Usually wilful perversion of the truth is presupposed, hence falsehood always marks an evil disposition; enmity against the truth and God. Again, false-swearing connotes something different. It backs up a perverted truth by bold references to its veracity. Neighbors and God are grievously wronged in such chicanery, for an oath is an appeal to God and a witness to the truth of a statement. Linking God up with false collusions orients him wrongfully. With regard to all fabrication John Ruskin possibly has the finest words: "The essence of lying is in deception, not in words; a lie may be told by silence, by equivocation, by the accent on a syllable, by a glance of the eye attaching a peculiar significance to a sentence; and all these kinds of lies are worse and baser by many degrees than a lie plainly worded; so that no form of blinded conscience is so far sunk as that which comforts itself for having deceived because the deception was by gesture or silence, instead of utterance."

Various Types of Lying

As depicted by Biblical writers lying is of several types. There is its most general aspect which was just defined. This type suffered open condemnation in the ancient Levitical codes. The wisdom of Solomon, "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar," (Pr. 30:6) is a case in point. Moreover, in the legislation, including the Decalogue, criminal lying is specifically noted. Perjury and unjust sentences are recognized. (Dt. 19:15-21; Ex. 20:16). False statements and fraudulent dealing are considered in Leviticus 6:1ff. During the time of the prophets lying is considered almost the soul of wickedness and actually appears as the symbol of moral evil. Witness the heart-broken Hosea crying: "Ephraim feedeth on wind, and followeth after the east wind: he daily increaseth his lies and desolation." (Hos. 12:1a). Or take the stately Isaiah proclaiming with deep earnestness: "Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people with unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." (Isa. 6:5). Later, utterances of soothsayers (Isa. 44:25), and messages of false prophets are described rather singularly as lies. In the New Testament, where Jesus sets up an absolute standard of truth over against an overwrought and bombastic orientalisms; and a fabulous, extravagant, preposterous and highflying Pharasaism, it is suggested that there are three lies par excellence. 1. Heathen religions. (Rom. 1:25). 2. The claim of the false apostle. (Rev. 2:2). 3. The denial "that Jesus is the Christ." (1 John 2:22).

The Viciousness of Lying

Lying is a deep-dyed sin. It has two first cousins in murder and unchastity. All three are iniquitous, heinous and morally wrong. The degrading tendency of prevarication is to be observed in its utter inconsistency with the holiness of God and more particularly with the commandments of our Maker who is himself absolutely true. Says the Psalmist in referring to Jehovah, "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David." (Ps. 89:35). Then, too, and still more particularly, it has anti-social effects of a ruinous and far-reaching kind. "A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it; and a flattering mouth worketh ruin." With this the prophets heartily concur. In the New Testament Satan's example and inspiration is closely allied with this nefarious sin.

The Prince of Evil is described as "a liar and the father thereof" in John 8:44, and a worker of maliciousness in Acts 5:3. The evil effects of lying extend to the whole human race of sinful men. It is an indication that man is still the possessor of the old Adamic nature which can only be put off as the old man of sin dies out.

God's Attitude Towards Lying

That numerous passages in the Old and New Testaments abound which relate directly to God's attitude toward lying no careful reader will doubt. Notice this rich galaxy of passages. The righteous are called upon to hate lying, "A righteous man hateth lying" (Pr. 13:15), to avoid it "The remnant of Israel shall not speak lies" (Zeph. 3:13a), to not respect the company of liars "Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies" (Ps. 40:4) and "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight. (Ps. 101:7). In the light of this Carlyle's dictum, Can there be a more horrible object in existence than an eloquent man not speaking the truth?" is timely. A concrete example is the Civil War President. Think of the immortal Lincoln associating his life with any kind of hollowness, mendacity or prevarication. The Great Liberator appreciated well the truth revealed in the Ephesian letter: "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbors for we are members one of another (Eph. 4:25), and the wise counsel of Ralph Waldo Emerson when he penned the following: "But speak the truth, and all nature and all spirits help you with unexpected furtherance. Speak the truth, and all things alive or brute are vouchers, and the very roots of the grass underground there do seem to stir and to move to bear you witness." Further, the righteous man is admonished to pray "Remove from me the way of lying: and grant me thy law graciously." (Ps. 119:29). On the other hand, the wicked are said to love lying "Thou lovest evil more than good" (Ps. 52:3a), to delight in it "They delight in lies" (Ps. 62:4b), to give heed to it "A wicked doer giveth heed to false lips: and a liar giveth ear to a naughty tongue." (Pr. 17:4). God hates the trickery, docility and legerdemain of every form of lying whether it be "black" or "white." A lie is a lie and nothing else. It outrages God and no mealy-mouthedness or crocodile tears can be accepted by him in place of the truth. God regards all lying as abominable and wrong.

The Penalty of Lying

The penalties of lying are set forth in climactic order in the Scriptures. Certainly the punishments meted out to habitual falsifiers grow sterner and sterner as the divine revelation progresses. Embroiderers of the truth are beset with a continual heritage of contempt. Let us note a few Biblical instances of the sin under discussion and the Janus-facedness of them in toto. Satan tempts Eve by telling her a half-truth. (Gen. 3). Cain's lie (Gen. 4:9) was an evasion of a direct answer. Jacob's deception of his paternal ancestor in securing Esau's birthright was flagrant and barefaced (Gen. 27:19), while the answer of Joseph's brethren, to the godly old patriarch was nothing short of the artful dodging and swindling which runs rampant on Wall Street. Even good men like David have been overtaken in a lie—a thing distinctly and positively shameful in the life of any righteous man. (1 Sam. 21:2). Then there is the case of Gehazi, whose wickedness and distortion was so great as to cause him to misrepresent his master Elisha to Naaman, the Syrian, whom the prophet had healed of his leprosy. Desire for possessions in this instance ended tragically, for it is recorded: "The leprosy therefore of Naaman the Syrian shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed forever. And he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow." (2 Kings 5:22-27). Even Peter, the chiefest and strongest of the Apostles, wilfully and quite openly denied the Lord whom he had known for many months by succumbing to the brakenness and loud-mouthedness of a Jerusalem damsel. We tremble when we think of it and are almost laid mentally prostrate at the discovery of Peter's buttressification of lying with swearing. (Mt. 26:72). A kind and beneficent heavenly Father saved him from the appalling severity portioned out to Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5) when they spoke forth an aggravated lie. In Psalm 24:4 lying is considered as sufficient to disqualify worship of and communion with God, while in The Revelation habitual paraders of untruths are consigned to a lake of fire entailing the forfeiture of eternal salvation. (Rev. 21:27; 21:15). In the light of the foregoing we do not wonder that the great Philadelphian of the West said: "Where thou art obliged to speak, be sure speak the truth; for equivocation is halfway to lying, as lying, the whole way to hell." All hail to the only man in the world who made a treaty with his fellow men that, though unwritten, was never broken—and that too with the savage and dusky-faced Indians. Proud heads may well be bared to the veracity of William Penn.

The Modern Application

Though it has been well said: "Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne," there remains for us one constant and never-varying fact, namely, truth and falsity are diametrically opposed to each other and shall continue in such a relationship. A God whose very nature is Truth is incapable of lying. Man, fashioned in the image of the same God, if he is a liar, outrages him and commits sin. Says Trumbull: "Today, as in all the days, the chiefest need of men, for themselves and for their fellows, is a likeness to God in the impossibility of lying; and the chief longing of the community is for such confidence of men in one another as will give them assurance that they will not lie one to another. There was never yet a lie uttered which did not bring more of harm than of good; nor will there ever be a harmless lie, while God is Truth, and Satan is the father of lies." This is the emphasis of the Biblical evidence.

In our day of superficial and so-called full-fledged living, when the idle vaporizings of chattering crowds and newspaper harangue are the highest good for many individuals, it behooves thinkers to point out a better way. Myriads of voices declaim loudly from other mounts than Sinai. The mounts of moviedom, science, society, industry, finance, journalism, politics and organized vice—all have their proper location and emphasis. But how do they compare with the greatest mount? Are they always snow-capped and majestic? Do they rise above the storms and terrific wind blasts? Hardly. Then Sinai is pre-eminent and still speaks with divine authority. Let us, as Christians, heed the voice of the ages in spite of the fact that many disdain the "thou shalt nots," violate the "thou shalt," and utterly forget God. Let us keep the commandments, the negative and positive precepts alike, and live under the influence of the sublime thought "Thou God seest me," for God's declarations are merciful provisos destined to lead us into the land of cloudless day.

Princeton, New Jersey.

THE ATONEMENT

Only shallowness of thinking and hardness of feeling can quarrel with the atonement. Those whose insight is deep, whose consciences are sensitive, and whose honesty is thorough, would build up the necessity for an atonement from their own experience and from their knowledge of God even if the great truth had not been revealed to us. Our human fatherhood is an imperfect picture of the divine fatherhood that created it, and yet it cannot be a false copy of it, and it speaks to us unmistakably of sacrificial suffering. What earthly father does not share the penalties of his child's sins that involve his father's distress? Fathers die daily in sympathy with erring sons. How gladly would they take their sins upon themselves if they could! And the All-Father can and does.

When we call Jesus the Lamb of God we simply say that in him God has proved himself to be all that our most daring hopes of loving helpfulness and powerful compassion could imagine. It is only another way of saying that God will not allow himself to be more a Judge than a Father of the human race. It means that in all the tangle that man's wickedness has woven his God has found a way. It signifies hope for a situation that otherwise would be helpless. The atonement is the final and complete expression of a God who is Love.—From The Glorious Names of Jesus, by Amos R. Wells.

THE TITHE

The tithe is mightier than the drive. The world's tallest building is a testimonial to the power of the nickel and the dime, spent regularly and frequently by the millions.

The drive is sometimes necessary; the tithe is always effective. And the drive is always more successful when a band of tithers adds its "might."—Selected.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Get Busy and Keep Busy

By J. I. Hall

TEXT: Whatever thy hands find to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave where thou goest.—Eccl. 9:10.

Possibly no other people in the world lead as strenuous lives as the Americans. If all this busy strenuous life were directed in a religious way the world could soon be taken for Christ. We then should get very busy at once in a real religious way. We should realize that there is a work for each one to do.

In the Divine economy there has not anything been created without some sphere of usefulness. Then, if man is creation's kind, he should show it by a busy religious life.

There are too many people today looking for an easy job. A young man went to the president of a great railroad company, and said, "I want an easy job on your road." The president told him that there was only one easy job on the road, and that he had that, and expected to keep it.

Select some good line of work, then prepare to be efficient and then even if the work is strenuous, do it with your might. It is impossible for one to work with the greatest effectiveness if a thorough preparation has not been made. Preparation makes it possible for you to do with all your might what your hands find to do. John Wesley once gave this advice to a young lady, "Live to-day." That same young lady in trying to carry out that advice suggested the teaching of street urchins to Robert Raikes, which proved to be the beginning of Sunday schools in England. It is said that Sir Isaac Newton once dismounted from his horse to lead him up a very steep hill. The horse stripped the bridle, but Newton was so engrossed in thought that he did not take notice of it until he had reached the hill-top. The horse had run away. Take heed lest while you may be engrossed with things of a worldly nature, life's opportunities of doing your chosen work may slip away from you, and even the opportunity of your salvation may slip away from you forever.

It is reasonable to say that, in a wonderful world like ours, our occupations will take our whole life in their performance. It is a very easy thing not to do our duty. It never pays to do anything in a half-hearted way. It is often said, "Let some one else do it." But, as a rule, no one else can do our work, and we be justified; for we did not put our might into it when it was possible for us to do so.

Our text recommends earnestness. Get busy and keep busy, for "The idler the man, the busier is the tempter." There is a great work for each one to do, and only a short time in which to do it. There are no opportunities after death.

An earnest life has great power. Earnestness coupled with ability and preparation is needed in all lines of work as never before. Amidst all the complexity of the times, we must work out our salvation with fear and trembling. Never yield to discouragement. When Tintoretto, one of the world's greatest painters, was a boy he entered the studio of Titian, who could not be patient with the lad's mistakes. He could see only a mere dauber in the boy. He sent him home saying, "He will never be anything but a dauber." But the boy's earnestness and determination, coupled with his genius, made him a greater painter than Titian. Martin Luther said, "I will go to Worms if there are as many devils there as there are tiles on the house-tops." When we read the life of St. Paul, we find it a life of earnestness and devotion. Then there was blind Bartimeus who could not be persuaded to hold his peace when Jesus was passing by; but cried out the more, saying: "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me." He asked for his sight and received it. There was the palsied man carried by four earnest men who took him to the house top, and made the way clear and then let him down through the roof before Jesus to be healed. If Christians would get more interested, many souls could be led to Jesus.

The workers of iniquity are laboring in the spirit of earnestness. In the days of the open saloon, you never heard of the saloon keeper closing his saloon and going off on a vacation. The bootlegger of today is no less in earnest in carrying out his nefarious business. We need to get busy and keep busy until the unlawful business is completely ousted.

In proportion to our earnestness we will be successful in life. It gives the determination that puts the student through school, and causes the Christian to cry aloud and spare not against the evils of the times. Earnestness is a virtue that everyone should emulate. Attention is excited and people are brought to thoughtfulness. In proportion as we are in earnest in our religious life, we will be imitators of Jesus in his earnestness. We must share his sincerity if we would share his victory.

Couched in this text is a solemn consideration. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." The season for actual work is limited. If life's work is done, we must be busy, for it takes all our days to do our work.

In whatever state death finds our work, it must remain whether for us or against us. Then, no changes can be made. If complete or incomplete, it must so remain.

This life is a season of probation. Hence, our everlasting weal or woe depends upon the life lived here.

MONDAY

THE CHRISTIAN'S CONSOLATION—John 14:1-3.

"Twas the Master himself who said it
To the sorrowful little band,
Facing an hour of darkness
That they could not understand."

TUESDAY

ASSURANCE OF LIFE—1 Cor. 15:20-23.

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die;
And thou hast made him: Thou art just.

—Tennyson.

WEDNESDAY

THE CHRISTIAN'S BELIEF—1 John 3:2, 3.

I never saw a moor,
I never saw the sea,
Yet I know what the heather is like,
And what a wave must be.

I never talked with God,
I never visited in heaven,
Yet certain am I of the spot
As if the chart were given.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Christ's Idea of Values

By Albert G. Hartman

OUR SCRIPTURE

Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? Or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you (Matt. 6:30-33).

If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through striving or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus; Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. (Phil. 2:1-11).

OUR MEDITATION

The Christian people of the world have at least one characteristic in common. All have confessed "That Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of the Father." In order to magnify and increase our Christian experience, we should then seek to be spiritually minded; as Paul said, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." For the edification of our lives we must seek to know Jesus better day by day; and if we endeavor to learn his perfect will concerning us, he will give us knowledge, wisdom, and grace sufficient for our every need. In particular, we may learn to know his idea of values. Christ's idea of values differs greatly from man's ideas. The average man, in spite of his intellectual development, will value material things most highly, and give spiritual possessions and opportunities a secondary place. He has not learned to put first things first. "What shall we eat?" "What shall we drink?" "Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" These questions have by no means become obsolete since the time when Christ preached the sermon on the mount. Mankind is still anxious as to the material things of this life, but too often unconcerned about the things of the spirit. In direct contrast with man's attitude is the perfect life of Christ. He gave every thought to the spiritual needs of the world and no thought to his own physical needs. He regarded eternal matters infinitely higher than material things. Christ chose to make every personal sacrifice, even the supreme sacrifice for the world, and he received from the world no compensation. But "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name."

The Apostle Paul had learned to put the kingdom of God first in his life; otherwise he could not have written the Epistle to the Philippians, or any other of his sacred messages. Love, unity, and humility are some of the Christian ideals emphasized in the scripture. Perhaps the greatest hindrance to the possession of these virtues is the sin of selfishness, for selfishness leads to many other sins. If we are selfish we can not properly evaluate things and principles. One sign of selfishness is that a person cares more for worldly goods than he does for a goodly world. If the cause of righteousness were uppermost in the minds of people, the unreasonable striving for wealth would cease, because the love of money is the result of one's placing too high a value on it. Greed, of course, is only one of the many sins caused by selfishness.

We are living in a fast age and many people will not take time to be holy. The turmoil and unrest of the present day are usually and perhaps rightly attributed to the complexity of our civilization. But what about the remedy? Occasionally we hear the voice of a right thinking man or woman in public life who has learned to place the proper value upon the spiritual needs of a people. Significant indeed are the words of the leader of our nation, President Coolidge: "We do not need more national development; we need more spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power; we need more spiritual power. We do not need more knowledge; we need more character. We do not need more government; we need more culture. We do not need more law; we need more religion. We do not need more of the things that are seen we need more of the things that are unseen." So far from being the impracticable idea of a dreamer, the sentiment expressed by Mr. Coolidge is the sound doctrine of the most practical minds. Christ will not be outlived. His teachings are applicable to the twentieth century and they will be applicable to the twentieth millennium. Love never faileth.

In order that our influence shall be the best and that the truth of Christianity may be radiated from our lives, let us be diligent to place the proper emphasis on the important things of life. Let us remember Christ's idea of values, and may we never fail to emphasize most strongly those things which lead to perfection in him.

OUR PRAYER

Dear Heavenly Father, we thank thee for Jesus, the Light of Life. We are thankful that he is able to save us, and to keep us, and that through him we can have everlasting life. Help us to realize that we are living not only for a time, but for eternity. Help us to know the importance of properly estimating the value of things pertaining to our spiritual welfare. May we keep Christ's idea of values ever before us and may we ever be loyal to the teachings of the Word. Forgive us our sins and make us strong wherein we are weak. Guide us, we pray, into paths of greater usefulness in thy Kingdom. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

The Ways

"To every man there openeth
A way, and ways and a way,
And the high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low,
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro;
But to every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go."

Resist Not Evil

The spirit with which the Christian is to meet evil men and the evil deeds they do to him is one of love and peace; seeking the good of the injurer. There is only one way to overcome evil, and that is with good (Rom. 12:21.) For (1) To fight evil with evil is simply to make two wrongs instead of one. It will increase the evil in the man, exciting his passions and inflaming his hatred. It will do him evil instead of good, and your business is to save and help him. It is evil in you to do vengeance; it strengthens the worst side of your own nature, which you ought to overcome. (2) Like kindles like, as fire kindles fire. The tendency of good is to awaken the good in other souls. The tendency of suffering evil instead of retaliating is to touch the heart of the evil man. (3) Even if the good fails in overcoming the evil in others, yet it is itself strengthened and increased by the effort, and therefore the proportion of good to evil is increased.

Illustration. "The true way to 'overcome the evil' is to melt it by fiery coals of gentleness. That is God's way. An iceberg may be crushed to powder, but every fragment is still ice. Only sunshine that melts it will turn it into sweet water. Love is conqueror, and the only conqueror, and its conquest is to transform hate into love."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Love to Give

Give to every man, etc. "Literally, be giving, implying a habit, not an instant act." Love to give seek to impart good, "to minister" rather than "to be ministered unto." This does not mean indiscriminate giving, but according to what is best, according to Love to give, seek to impart good, "to minister and foreigners, as well as friends. And it must be borne in mind that the Lord's precept can best be fulfilled not merely by giving money, or food, or clothing to every one who asks, but by giving something that counts much more than such things both to the recipient and the giver. A little piece of coin is nothing to be compared with time and influence given to the man in hard luck to help him to find a job, or to put him in a position in some way that will enable him to help himself. Almsgiving is very often merely a cheap way of easing one's conscience. What the vast amount of the unfortunate need more than alms is that which will lift them out of their discouragement and despondency, their listlessness and lack of ambition, or their degradation and vice. To give that sometimes costs a great deal, but he has not entered into the spirit of obedience to the Master's injunction who is not willing to try.

The Golden Rule

The Golden Rule, says Alice D. Adams, here sums up the precepts so far given into one heavenly principle, obedience to which would make earth a heaven. It is easy enough, Christ said, to love those that love us, do good to those that do good to us, lend to those from whom we expect to receive; sinners do as much as that, and Christians should do more, giving freely to all in need, just as they would wish others to give to them if they were in need. The Iron Rule of the world is Do to others as they do to you. Different writers have quoted sentiments similar to the Golden Rule from heathen and rabbinical authors; but while the latter have rather given the negative part of this command, Christ has given the positive. This may be seen by the following comparison of Christ's precept with three of the best examples found in ancient authors: Confucius. B. C. 500.

What you do not like when alone to yourself, do not do to others.

Isocrates. B. C. 400.

Do not do to others that which would make you angry if done by others to you.

Hillel. A. D. 1.

Do not unto another what thou wouldst not have another do unto thee.

Christ.

And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

This radical difference will at once be seen: Christ's precept alone commands us to do anything.—G. W. Clark. Christ, so far from propounding it (the Golden Rule) as a novelty, affirms it to be the essence of the Law and the Prophets. It is in fact the primitive command of God in the hearts of all nations.—Van Doren.

Selected Points

1. Love leads us to keep the law, and to do all we can to help others.

"As the two lobes of the heart are yet one and the same, so the twofold divisions of the law, love to God and to man, are but a single requirement."

2. It is easy to love those who love us, or think as we do. The proof of love is to love where it is hard to love; to love enemies, the unthankful, the unworthy.

3. "All hopes of heaven which do not lead us to strive habitually to do to others as we would that they should do to us will fail us at giving up of the ghost."

4. God's children must be like him. There is no other proof that we are his children

5. Children of God are heirs of his nature, his love, his care, his joy, his home.

6. God gives many things to all alike, but men do not use them alike; they can raise thistles or wheat, thorns or flowers, with his rain, and do deeds of love or hate in his sunshine.

7. Christians ought to do more than others. 1. They have received more. 2. They profess more. 3. They expect more. 4. They are more.

8. "The man who sets out to be a disciple of Christ perforce parts company forever with second-best ideals. A moderate and reasonable standard of goodness ceases to be an aim that satisfies. A character that on all its facets bears the one distinguishing mark of Christlikeness—no lower ideal than this will content the follower of Jesus Christ."

9. "A Christian is one whose ruling purpose in life is to become conformed, not only outwardly in conduct but inwardly in mind and spirit, to the divine ideal, as manifested in Jesus Christ."

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS' INSTITUTE IN BUENOS AIRES

Seasons are reversed in the Southern Hemisphere. A letter from Rev. George P. Howard, Buenos Aires, Argentina, dated October 19th began with "We have just ended our winter course of lectures to Sunday school workers." Mr. Howard, in addition to his important labors for the Methodist Episcopal church, is Field Secretary in Argentina for the World's Sunday School Association.

In further description of the work Mr. Howard said, "The lectures have been well attended. I took occasion to have an exhibit of the available literature and helps for teachers and Christian workers. It is most comforting to see what a fine collection of books we have gradually published in Spanish in the different countries and by the various denominations. Almost the entire exhibit was sold out two or three times. It is encouraging to see that our workers are beginning to realize the need for reading and study. I have been able to get many of our Sunday schools to put in workers' libraries. In nearly every case, they have a library for the children. In a country like this where there are no public libraries, you may know how useful these little libraries can be. And the hopeful thing is that the children are eager to read.

"One little girl, in a Sunday school which I was visiting, bought a Bible; she is paying for it at the rate of ten cents a week. I wonder how many children in America would be willing to work for their Bible in that manner? Our problem just now is to train good librarians for, as you know, it is not enough to have books on our library shelves; the librarian must be one who knows how to circulate the books and how to advise the eager little readers. I leave for Uruguay tonight. I am to lecture, and speak in several different churches in that country during the coming ten days. We are enjoying a glorious spring. One rose I picked in my garden measured six inches in diameter."

Do we give freedom to those about us in our homes? If we look for gratitude, or love, or service, we hamper the freedom of our dear ones, and they render us that which we compel, and not that which their own affection would spontaneously give.

Our Stewardship Program

By Orville D. Ullom, Stewardship Supt.

A mother of four small children, tenement dwellers, had nursed her little brood through a tedious illness. It was hot and the children were not doing well. The mother was worn out and discouraged. She received a letter from a banker which enabled her to take her children to the country where they all grew strong and robust.

A young man studying engineering was obliged to give up his studies and go to work. A letter from this same banker informed him that he could return to college and finish his course. He is now building bridges and reclamation dams.

This man was a steward of his substance, time, and ability. He saw that God demanded of him the giving of these factors, but he did not contribute solely because he felt his duty, but because he earnestly desired to give. He rejoiced in the sacrifice of his money and ability for the sake of those little ones. The love of Christ, as St. Paul says, constraineth us, or, as it were necessity is laid upon us (1 Cor. 9:16) to react to the world's need. Love for him is love for God and man, and when we love we give with joy.

Now the third factor which is the result of this belief or overwhelming conviction that we are stewards under a joyful necessity to serve Christ's cause, is a definite, thoroughly mastered and well planned action. We have heretofore slightly touched upon this in the case of the banker. Of course there are many roads leading to action that with us it becomes a matter of choice.

A Christian Endeavorer has opportunity to do a positive piece of work in his own community, e. g., there are the local or community recreation, and amusements to be made strictly Christian in character and spirit. The amusement in itself may not be inherently evil, but it is a matter of saturating the atmosphere with the dignity and spirit of our Christian ideals. Thus by example and patronage we as stewards will do all we can to further the amusements that recreate character.

The germs of war are almost as numerous today as ever in essence, but probably not in degree. The destruction of God's most precious creation follows in its wake, human life. He would that peace and justice might permeate every recess of society. What here can be our contribution as stewards of Christ? ACTION—ACTION. As stewards of life behold your duty to use it and give it for the making bigger and better the conditions of real living. Impress upon the mind of your society the absolute wrongness of war and then having spoken, remain firm for what you believe.

Other factors there are, such as impressing the press of its need of clean up day, such as the sanitation authorities observe in our larger cities. The press needs to clean up as well as the community.

God is calling life to service, to action. There is no room in this program, nor his Kingdom, for the waste and neglect of that which is precious. He demands wise trading which compromises diligence and industry. The parable of the talents illustrates for us those who have traded wisely.

To St. Paul (1 Cor. 3:9) we are God's husbandry, God's fellow-workers, God's building. (1 Cor. 3:6) St. Paul planted the ideas, the living seeds of the gospel. In Asia Minor and throughout those regions, Apollos came later and watered the tree after the seeds had brought forth that of its own kind, giving the roots moisture, thus establishing more firmly their belief in the Living God, but this would have availed no one any value whatever unless God had been there to give the increase which spurred them on to joyful action in living out the truths of the gospel. God's increase is motive, enthusiasm, power, and love, aiding man in undertaking the seemingly impossible.

Then as Christian stewards we shall say, "Lead on, O King Eternal! in the fight against the wrong and in the establishment of absolute justice and love among the various races of the world."

Jonathan, Who Was a Loyal Friend 1 Samuel 18:1-4

Many, many years ago, there lived a little prince whose name was Jonathan. The king of the land was Jonathan's father, and this king's name was Saul. Saul was a very big man and when Jonathan was small, he would look at his dad and say, "I hope that when I am grown I'll be a big man like my dad."

So the years slipped by and as Jonathan grew, he became tall and strong. King Saul and his people often went to war and so when Jonathan was a young man, he learned to fight and once he did a very great deed and saved his people by leading them to victory.

One day, Jonathan noticed a young man who had come to the king's court. Jonathan liked the looks of this young man and wished that he might know him. He spoke to him when he got a chance but it was not long before war started, off in another part of the country and Jonathan went away to battle.

This war was a very important one against the Philistines. The Philistines were terrible enemies of Jonathan's country and of the king, Jonathan's father. One time a very big and powerful giant came from the Philistine's army and stood out in front of King Saul's army. This giant felt so big and so very sure of himself that he called and said, "If there is one of your men who will come forth and fight me, then we will stop fighting you people and we will be your servants." This giant looked so big and fierce that all of Saul's army began to feel scared. There was not anyone in the whole army who was nearly as big as the giant. Jonathan looked all around at the men and wondered who would be willing to sacrifice their lives. Surely no one could fight against such a terrible man as that and win. Everyone looked afraid. Then suddenly as Jonathan was watching the army, he saw a young man step forward and start talking to King Saul. He wondered who this was, so he walked until he was close enough to recognize the youth. It was the very same young man who had been at the king's court not long ago.

But Jonathan had another surprise coming to him, for while he watched, this boy, for he was not nearly as big as the men around him and not as old either, this boy stepped in front of the army and started toward the great giant. Then Jonathan felt very unhappy and he said to himself, "I wanted to talk to that fellow and be a friend to him. He seemed so friendly and pleasant and now he is going down there to be killed by that terrible giant. Why didn't I talk to him before he had a chance to talk to my father, so that he would not go down there to be killed?"

But, lo, while Jonathan was feeling so very bad, David, for that was the young man's name, was facing the awful Goliath, and before anyone could really understand what had happened, the giant had fallen to the ground with an awful thud. Then was Jonathan truly happy. Everyone started singing praises to David and soon Jonathan had a chance to talk to him. He said to him, "I think you are wonderfully brave. That was a mighty deed, killing a man so much bigger than you are." David appreciated Jonathan's praise and they became good friends from that time on.

Now it happened that King Saul became jealous of David and so he decreed that David should be killed. Jonathan heard this and so he went to David and warned him. Then Jonathan talked to his father and said a lot of nice things about David and soon Saul promised Jonathan that he would not kill David. Thus Jonathan was showing his friendship for David.

But Saul was very wicked and soon he tried again to kill David. This time David fled. One time he came back and talked to might do something which would cause Jonathan's father to like David again. Finally Jonathan. Both of them wished that they thought of a plan. Jonathan was to find out whether his father still hated David so that David would know if he could come back safely. Jonathan found that Saul still hated David and again warned him so that he could flee. And, Jonathan and David were always loyal friends who would help each other in time of trouble as well as in times of happiness.

Traveling on an African River Boat

"On the Congo and Oubangi Rivers."
 October 11, 1926.

To the children of the "Evangelist Family":
 Dear Children:

I am sure you will be glad to hear about some of our experiences traveling on the river boat "Dolisie." We left Brazzaville, Tuesday, September 28th, for Bangui. The voyage up these rivers is about 1,000 miles, which sounds like we are a long way off from Bangui, doesn't it? Well, we travel about fifty miles a day and sometimes we travel after night, as this is the rainy season and the waters are very high and the boat is carrying a big load, so we can not go very fast.

There are only seven white people and about twenty-five black, on board, but we have two small boats on each side of the big boat which carries baggage and freight, and we alone have about one hundred pieces. When I watch the black boys and girls, and their primitive way of traveling with only one small bundle on their heads, I think we white people have too many earthly possessions to really enjoy nature in all of its beauty. Yet it seems to be necessary to have all these things to live in their country.

I know you children will be interested to hear about the animals we have seen along the way. Two or three days after we left Brazzaville, we stopped at one of the native villages. There were two little black boys came up to us with a baby alligator and a small wild cat. They thought we would like to buy them for "pets," but we told them they were not the kind of animals we liked. The next day while traveling along the river we saw at a distance a big alligator lying on the sand taking a sun bath on the river bank. The captain shot at it but only to see it jump back into the river again. Since then we have seen two others along the shore. I am glad our boat stays in the middle of the river, because I don't much like alligators near me. I am sure you wouldn't either. We have seen several monkeys hanging on the trees; we also hear them singing their songs after night.

At one of the large native villages the French Administrator brought a pet monkey on the boat for the captain. He is not very large and has a soft brown fur. Wish you could see him eat bananas. He and the cat have become quite good friends, the cat loves to catch the monkey's tail. But the dog keeps as far away as possible from them both. Saturday morning we stopped at a village called Dofgou. There we saw a chimpanzee in a large cage. He wanted to shake hands with us all and especially liked the canes which the men were carrying. Also they had a little deer brought on board. I think it must be to eat, as I saw the boy take it to the kitchen. Poor thing! it looks too innocent to eat.

You may wonder what we have to eat on the boat. Well, we have goat about every day. Early in the morning we can hear them make a loud noise and in a few minutes see the cook going with half a goat in the pan. Just now we are getting lots of fruit—oranges, bananas, and piepies. The piepies are like our canteloupes at home, the oranges are green on the outside, but very sweet and juicy. The black people eats lots of manioc for their bread. They also catch catfish and put them on the hot coals alive to bake. It seems to me they eat all day long. I should think their stomachs would get tired trying to digest all they eat. We have a little black baby on board and his stomach seems almost as big as he. When his mother gives him a bath, we all wonder what happens as he puts up such a big howl.

Yesterday was Sunday, and we had a little service for the black boys and girls. We have some hymns translated into the Sango language and that is the commercial language as all seem to understand it. We sang "Jesus Loves Me," and "What Can Wash Away My Sins?" They love to sing. Some of them never heard of Jesus before, one boy who attended the Catholic mission at Brazzaville knew French and Sango, so he interpreted for me and we had a blessed time telling them that Jesus loves them. One little boy came from a Christian mission at Ft. Silent, he was happy to hear of Jesus again.

Tomorrow we hope to arrive at Bangui. We have been on the river thirteen long days, and shall be happy to see our other dear missionaries and black saints. Am sure some of our black boys will be waiting at Bangui when our boat arrives and their black, shiny faces will look good to us. Brother Hathaway wrote us that the tires on the "Ford" were worn out so we may have to go to Yaloki in "Tepoys." Shall write you again and tell you how we got there.

Lovingly, Yours for Africa,
 MRS. ORVILLE D. JOBSON.

A True Story

One bitter cold evening in December a missionary going up the steps of the general hospital in Kwangju, Korea, noticed that a straw sack which was lying on the ground near the hospital wall moved. Upon closer investigation she saw that the sack, which she thought had been carelessly left by some workman, was in fact a covering for a human being. Knowing that no one could live out of doors on such a night she went nearer and called to the person. Imagine her surprise when a young woman stood up and then bowed low before the foreigner. She was an unusually pretty Korean type, dressed in fair clothes, and was clean, which showed that she was not a beggar, nor a woman of bad character.

"What are you doing here? Why don't you go to an inn?" asked the missionary. "Have you no money, that you are sleeping here?"

"Money would do me no good," was the low response, "for none of the inns will take me in, and I have nowhere else to go. I am a leper!"

"You are a leper!" cried the astonished missionary. "Why, you have none of the marks of leprosy, and you do not look like a beggar."

"Yes, lady, I am a leper, and there is no place for me to go, so I have come here, hoping that I may be taken into the colony."

The missionary's interest and sympathy were roused by the pitiful condition of the young woman, and she asked her to tell how she came to be in such a plight on this freezing night.

"I was the wife of an official," the leper woman began, "and led a very happy life. There was plenty to eat and to wear, and I had servants, and these things made my less fortunate sisters envy me. One day I went on a long trip, and in walking the hot, dusty road my straw sandal wore a blister on my heel. I did not pay any attention to it, but after I returned the place got infected and refused to heal." The missionary was not surprised at this, for the Koreans are very careless about little sores, and they frequently become infected.

"The days passed into weeks, and this place not only did not heal, but I began to feel a peculiar weakness all over my body. Then I noticed a discoloration on my feet and the soles of my legs, and when I touched them they had no feeling in them. I was horrified, for I knew what that signified, but I hoped against hope, and ate a great deal of Korean medicine, with the wish that I might begin to feel better. At last my husband noticed my weakness, and also that my face was swelling, and he demanded an examination of the sore on my foot. I had tried to hide my real trouble from him, for I knew the inevitable result. As soon as he saw my foot he knew the trouble, and in great anger he drove me from his home, nor would he give me a cent to live on, but at once got another wife to take my place.

"I went to my brother and stayed with him a while, but he had several small children, and was afraid of me, for he could not give me a separate room or a separate table to eat from. So one day my brother said, 'There is a hospital for lepers at Kwangju, and I am going to take you there.'

"We walked forty miles to the hospital, and the cold cut me like a knife, while my poor feet were so sore that I could hardly stand on them. Today when we got here we found the hospital was full, and I could not get in, so my brother told me I would just have to look after myself, as he could do nothing more for me, and with his large family he could not pay the $3.50 necessary to get me in as a boarding patient. So he has left me, and here I am," she finished simply.

"What are you going to do?" was the missionary's question.

"Oh, lady, I don't know what to do. I am ashamed to beg, and you know what fate awaits any young woman that goes out on the streets." The missionary shuddered. She had seen too many young leper girls going about with a band of filthy, degraded leper men, their common property, forced to do their begging for them.

"I guess I will have to come to it," she went on resignedly, "but tonight I have crept up close to the hospital for protection, and then by lying right near to it I can get a little warmth. Please don't send me away. I do want to keep decent as long as I can."

The look of hopeless resignation on that refined face, together with a certain knowledge of the living death that awaited her, was too much for the missionary. This girl was but one of hundreds, that had come under her observation, and already she was helping as many as she felt financially able to, but who could leave such helpless misery to perish?"

"Wait right here," she ordered the girl. "I'll be back in a moment." It took only a few minutes to run back home and get some blankets and some food. "Cover up with these tonight, and eat this, and don't leave here tomorrow until I see you," she told the astonished girl.

The next day Dr. Wilson made room in his already overcrowded leper colony, and Ernger entered upon a life of hope and service. She was well educated according to Korean standards, and having lived in a home of wealth and was able to undertake the oversight of some of the work in the women's ward.

Of course she knew nothing about Christ, but soon became the most enthusiastic and proficient student in the whole colony. In a little over two years she could recite all the catechisms, innumerable Bible verses, knew the song book by heart, and is now a valuable teacher in the Sunday school and the day school for children.

Ernger was adopted immediately by some friends in America, but there are many others who wait for the chance to get into "heaven," as they call the Leper Home at Kwangju. Ernger is now happy and contented, and is doing a good work helping in the uplift of the ignorant women of the Home. Surely money invested in her has meant not only a life saved from shame, but also a life made profitable for the Master.—Contributed by The American Mission to Lepers.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The dedication of another Brethren church calls for some statement concerning the occasion and the congregation. Hence this article.

The history of the Second Brethren church, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, (better known perhaps as the "Moxham Brethren church"), dates back to the year 1894, when the work was organized by Elder E. E. Haskins, who was pastor of the First Brethren church at that time. For several years the membership worshipped in halls at various places in Moxham, until about the year 1900 negotiations were entered into with the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal church for the purchase of their building which they were leaving for a larger one. The deal with the Methodist people was duly consummated and since that time the congregation has worshipped in the building purchased, which was located at the corner of Grove avenue and Bond street, in what is known as Moxham.

About sixty people signed as charter members of the Second Brethren congregation at the time of organization. Since that time the number has increased and decreased from time to time as the years have gone by, the decreases coming from removals and death, while the increase has come from numerous revival campaigns and the accessions from the children of the membership, as well as by letter and relation from other congregations. At the present time the total membership numbers about one hundred. Some twenty-five of these have been added during the present pastorate.

Various ministers have served this congregation, some as supply ministers, and some as regular pastors. During the earlier years of its history the group has had as supply pastors, Elders E. E. Haskins, E. B. Shaver, W. A. Adams, Benjamin Goughnour, S. H. Fyock. As stated pastors the Elders R. Z. Replogle, Stephen Hildebrand, J. F. Koontz, Roger Darling, C. J. Yeomans, Joseph A. Klucker, R. S. Long, Geo. H. Jones, J. D. Kemper, L. W. Ditch, C. E. Weidner, W. H. Nowag, W. A. Crofford, J. B. Lambert, Mrs. Margaret Cooke, W. S. Baker, Dyoll Belote have served at this place. The present incumbent—the last-named above—has served the group as pastor for just a bit more than one year, having assumed nominal charge of the work on October 1, 1925.

As noted in a previous paragraph, the building which has been used as a place of worship by the Moxham Brethren was an old one when purchased by them. Time has not tended to improve the appearance nor yet the convenience of the meeting place, and plans were made upon various occasions to erect a more commodious place of worship. Somehow each of these attempts failed of completion, and some of the members grew discouraged, and some withdrew to other congregations. Nevertheless a few continued to hope for better things and worked on. After various and varied discouragements appeal was made during the summer of 1925 to the District Mission Board for aid in securing a pastor. In October the present pastor assumed charge of the work. One of the first things that was evident upon assuming the pastorate was the need of a more attractive and commodious place of worship. And yet the pastor did not feel like urging the matter too strongly, feeling that it would be a real task for the membership to undertake the erection of a new church. However at the January, 1926 quarterly business meeting of the congregation a motion prevailed that the organization proceed to erect a church building. A building committee was appointed with instructions to secure plans for a building and to proceed with the letting of contracts and the erection of an edifice. This committee consisted of Joseph W. Byers, W. S. Powell, W. W. Walker, R. E. Cunningham, J. H. Blough, G. B. Baumgardner and the pastor. Joseph W. Byers was made chairman of the committee, with W. W. Walker as secretary and Dyoll Belote as treasurer. The plans for the new edifice were drawn by W. S. Powell, a member of the building committee and an architect. The estimated cost of the building was placed at $10,000. Early in April work was started on the building project, with the digging out for the wall of the Sunday school rooms, which were placed at the back of the main auditorium. It will be necessary to explain that some two years before start had been made toward erecting a building, and the wall for an auditorium 38 and one-half feet square was built. The plans were interrupted at this stage and the wall had stood for two years awaiting the completion of the project. The Sunday school rooms were therefore added to the wall already standing and the work pushed toward completion. While a bit out of the ordinary the corner-stone laying was not held until the framework of the building had been erected and the building was ready for the laying of the brick. On July 9, 1926 the corner-stone was laid. The address for the occasion was delivered by Professor A. L. DeLozier, of the Ashland College faculty, who was at the time supply pastor of the First Brethren church, of Johnstown. The day was characterized by fine weather and the programme was carried out with quiet dignity, the large concourse of people which stood throughout the services listening intently to the various numbers as rendered. Several of the neighboring Brethren pastors assisted in the services, as well as some of the ministers of other denominations located in Moxham.

From the time of the laying of the cornerstone work was pushed as rapidly as possible and after some calculating it was decided that we should be ready for the dedicatory services early in November. Negotiations were entered into to secure the speaker for the dedicatory services and Dr. W. H. Beachler, of Dayton, Ohio, was secured for the services on November 14. This brought the dedication of the new church just one day over one year from the day that the pastor's household goods landed in Johnstown.

By means of some real hard labor on the part of a number of the members we were enabled to have the building ready for occupancy on the day appointed for the dedicatory exercises. Dr. Beachler was present and ready, the Lord gave us fine weather, and the people came in goodly numbers—though we were not as badly crowded with visitors as some of the Brethren had declared we would be—and we had a glorious time. The Moxham congregation is not so large, nor yet so wealthy, and so it was not possible to raise all the debt on the day of dedication, but a hearty response was given to Dr. Beachler's appeals, and the folks were well satisfied with the service Dr. Beachler gave them as Majordomo of the day. It was an added joy to the pastor to have Brother Beachler in his home during his stay, as we had been college classmates and in all the years since leaving the old school we had never been thrown together in any sort of service for the church until this time. And remembering his proclivity for "fowl" we provided well for his needs and so he was well-fed and contented and we thoroughly enjoyed his stay with us—and hope he enjoyed it as much as we. At the afternoon "Fraternal" service we were blessed with quite an array of Brethren preachers as visitors. Bes'des the pastor and Dr. Beachler, Brethren Ashman, Gingrich and Staley, pastors in the city were present. Brother Gingrich bringing a fine message as the speaker of the service. Then too, Dr. Isaac D. Bowman, of Leesburg, New Jersey, was engaged in an evangelistic campaign with Brother J. L. Bowman at the Pike congregation some twelve miles from town and these two brethren came in to enjoy the occasion. And in addition to all these Brother H. E. Eppley, who was assisting Brother Gingrich in an evangelistic campaign came along, so that there were just eight Brethren ministers at the service. Beside all these the resident pastors of the Reformed, Evangelical, United Brethren and Church of the Brethren congregations brought greetings. So the occasion did not lack for ministerial dignity. Dr. I. D. Bowman, as the dean of the Brethren ministers present, read the Scripture, prayer was offered by Elder A. R. Staley, pastor of the Conemaugh congregation, the sermon was delivered by Elder J. L. Gingrich, pastor of the third Brethren church of Johnstown, and the benediction was pronounced by Elder H. E. Eppley, an erstwhile school chum and friend of the pastor. Altogether the day was one that will be remembered by the congregation at Moxham and by the pastor as a most blessed day of fellowship and happiness.

The new building which now graces the property of the Second Brethren congregation at Johnstown, is of the Colonial style of architecture, and is 38 1-2 feet square, with a Sunday school annex of eighteen feet at the end and fronting on Bond street. The building is a cased brick structure, with asphalt strip shingle roof. Five large windows on the street sides of the building and two smaller ones on the side next the adjoining dwelling give ample light in the main auditorium, while some twenty smaller windows give the Sunday school rooms abundant illumination. The Sunday school annex furnishes accommodations for some six or seven classes, while provisions can be made in the basement for two or three extra classes, as the needs of the work may later require. The building is electrically equipped for artificial lighting. Amber-colored Cathedral glass filter the light so that there is no strain on the eyes of the audience from even bright sunlight. The building is heated with what is known as a vapor system heating plant, which is proving very satisfactory. In the basement are rest rooms for both men and women and a kitchen for ministering to the gastronomic proclivities of the congregation when occasion demands. The large assembly room in the basement will furnish plenty of room for social occasions and can be used for class rooms if needed. Heavy green colored Chenille curtains separate the Sunday school annex from the main auditorium, while the rooms in the Sunday school annex are divided by curtains of less-expensive Repp material. Altogether the building is conveniently arranged and amply sufficient for the needs of the Brethren here for several years to come. A small debt still remains on the church, but not enough that it will ever be an impediment to the forward movements of the work, if the people "have a mind to work" and continue faithful.

Following the dedicatory exercises a week of preparatory services were held for the semi-annual Communion Service, which was held on November 21. On Monday evening, Dr. A. B. Bauman, pastor of the Moxham Reformed church, occupied the pulpit for us. On Tuesday evening Brother Ashman, of the First church, was the speaker. Wednesday the pastor conducted the service and on Thursday Brother H. W. Nowag, former pastor, was the speaker, while on Friday evening Rev. C. W. Wiley, pastor of the Moxham United Brethren church brought the message. The first communion service in the new church was well attended, the service being held in the commodious basement social room. More than fifty percent of the membership participated in the service, some being present at the service who had not been privileged to attend a service during the present pastorate until that evening. And the occasion was given an added interest by the receiving of seven members by relation at the opening of the service. Everyone seemed to enjoy the occasion and a fine spirit of fraternity prevailed. At the evening service on November 28 another name was added to the membership list by letter from the First church of Johnstown.

Housed now in comfortable and convenient quarters, and enjoying a very kindly feeling on the part of the surrounding churches and community, the Second Brethren church of Johnstown looks forward hopefully to a larger and more deeply spiritual service which she may render to the world. Brethren, we need and crave an interest in your prayers as we seek to go forward in the service of the kingdom of our common Lord and coming King.

Faternally,

DYOLL BELOTE.

PASTORAL AND EVANGELISTIC SKETCHES

It was the privilege of the writer to spend three weeks recently with the Bryan, Ohio, church. This was my first meeting at Bryan, and I was not disappointed in my findings, for it is indeed a great church in many ways. Its membership is made up of that genuine, substantial folk that is so necessary in building up strong churches. I do not know that I was ever more cordially received or given a better hearing. They know how to appreciate the whole Gospel message, and it was by their very faithful attendance and prayers, and cooperation and encouragement that we were able to preach the word with unusual power and liberty. The pastor, Brother E. M. Riddle, we have known from his boyhood, having served his home church as pastor when he was but a mere lad. We rejoiced to find him having grown into such a strong pastor and servant of God. He is universally loved and respected, both in the church and out. He is a hard-working pastor, and has every detail of his parish well in hand. He is a fine yoke-fellow. We spent the time very pleasantly and profitably together. Much time was given to visiting and personal work, and withal the Lord used his servants in building up the church, and adding a score of persons to the body of believers. Indeed, we had, as many said, a genuine old-fashioned revival.

Some of us will not soon forget the night when, after the preacher had preached from the theme, "The Price of Power," that the entire congregation came forward to renew their covenant with their Lord, and to lay their lives upon his altar for definite service. Surely the Lord is going to bless the Bryan church in the coming years.

As for the evangelist, I should say that they spared no efforts to care for us in every way possible. They were terribly extravagant in their words of praise, and also in their remuneration for our service. Here's one place an Evangelist never goes away empty. We lived with Brother M. D. Kerr for the time in his wonderful home. He has a fine family and it was a real home, and a real joy to spend the days in such fine Christian fellowship as his home affords.

If the Bryan church some of these days grasps her opportunity and enlarges her present building she will take her place among the larger and greater churches of our brotherhood.

Warsaw, Indiana

A long time has lapsed since we reported our work here. We have had a busy year. In fact our records show 1926 to be the best year in many ways for the Warsaw church in many years. Our love feast on last Sunday evening was the largest and best since I have been in Warsaw. I mention this because I believe the attendance at the love feast is a fairly good indication of the spiritual status of the church.

During my absence from my church in November my pulpit was occupied by E. M. Riddle and A. T. Ronk. These brethren were well received, brought the folks some very fine messages, and kept the work going nicely in my absence. Brother Eppley, who is a member of this church, and Brother Sickel have also preached for us since I last reported our work. Our state conference in October here was a good advertisement for our work in the community and brought a lasting blessing to us. While this has ever been regarded as a difficult field for the Brethren, yet the church is taking its place among the churches of the town and even forging ahead of some with larger memberships than we. It was the privilege of the pastor to preach the Baccalaureate sermon and the annual Thanksgiving sermon this year, and also served as Dean in a County Teacher Training school. We are now busy with the many things incident to the Christmas season. Early in the new year I shall lead the North Manchester church in a brief evangelistic meeting and then following very soon Brother Schutz shall conduct our meeting for us here in Warsaw. Our outlook is promising. There are several looking our way. Many friends have been found for the church in a recent house to house canvass. Pray for us that we be kept humble, and in his will at all times. We rejoice for the progress over the brotherhood. Let us be diligent, let us be true to the Great Head of the church, until he comes.

Yours "Under the Precious Blood."

C. C. GRISSO.

JOHN W. LEEDY—AN APPRECIATION

Perhaps no higher or more holy feeling comes into the soul of man than his feeling for the loved dead. I read in the Virginia papers a short time ago of the death of Rev. John W. Leedy. I at once was plunged into that sorrow that comes only to us when our hearts are broken. More than twenty years ago when but a youth in my teens I met this man, and it was he who answered the questions of my mind about the reality of the Christian faith. I never got away from his appeal to my reason. He gave me aid in college and later located me in mission work. He was a father to me and no other man was closer to me in my early ministry than he. I got the first vision of the ministry from him, and learned my first ideas of God from his sayings. I do not believe that I would ever have been a minister if I had not met Leedy.

He first attracted me by his philosophy and reason in presenting the claims of Christ. He was not dogmatic. He did not believe in a creed. He held a belief. I have many notes taken down either while talking to him or from my memory. I was associated with him for years, and have the record of his sayings on many subjects. His belief about God was most attractive. His belief about the person of Christ was rather strange, but he drew you to the Master. His belief on the resurrection could be called Christian although shaded with Greek philosophy. "What is a Christian?" This was one of the best papers he gave me some years ago. In it is the faith of this man.

I love him still, and shall continue to hold sacred the gift of his life to me. I did not have an opportunity for education in youth, but got it by bits in early life. He knew his Greek very well. He had a fine grip on the truth of the Gospel. His life was clean, and his heart open. He had a love for the common people, and he still lives in the lives of the ministers he made. I loved but one other man so much as I did Leedy. As I write I have before me many of his letters and notes. O, how he hated wrong! How he loved truth! I close with this from one of the last letters I received from him. "When I do good I feel good; when I do evil I feel evil. Now that is my idea about religion. How fine a bit of real truth in this saying of a good man.

J. A. McINTURFF.

"Jesus pitied sick folk, and he healed them because he was sorry for them. And this brings Jesus very close to all our beds of pain. Sick people, the fever-scorched, the pain-tortured, the weak, and those who have lost heart, have in him one who knows and cares. But Jesus knew that sickness is only a symptom of a profounder disease, and he understood that it can not be said, 'There shall be no more sickness,' until it can be said, 'There is no more sin.'"

Friday Morning

Devotions were conducted by Elder R. F. Porte of Louisville, Ohio.

The business hour was opened by reading of Conference minutes and approval of same.

Last report of Credential Committee showed that 26 ministerial and 39 lay credentials had been received. Other credentials were presented but since the Conference ruled at a former session that only those delegates whose credentials were presented in person the number was not as large as usual.

The report of the Special Committee on Moderator's Report was received at this time and approved and committee discharged.

Since only one item of this report, that of the matter of the Reading Course for the Sunday school which was turned over to the Committee on Religious Education, was given to secretary the report is not found in these minutes.

A motion was made that the office of Supervisor of Vacation Bible schools be created. The motion carried and matter was referred to the Committee on Committees who proposed the name of Elder R. F. Porte for the office, and he was elected by conference.

On motion it was decided to purchase a memorial token of respect for Elder S. M. Loose who was the founder of the Fremont church. A committee composed of S. C. Henderson, W. E. Ronk, H. S. Rutt were authorized to purchase a memorial wreath and place it on the grave of Elder Loose.

The report of the Committee on next year's conference was received and Canton the new church there selected as the place for the Conference of 1926-1927.

A motion was then made that the time of Conference be changed from the first full week after October 15, to the first full week in October, beginning Tuesday evening and closing Friday at noon. Carried.

It was then decided to print the Conference programs two weeks before the time of conference and copies sent to all active pastors.

On motion Dr. W. H. Beachler was made the Ohio Conference Representative on the Ohio Council of Churches.

Dr. J. A. Garber was elected as Representative of the Ohio District Conference on the Ohio Board of Religious Education.

The report of the Resolutions Committee was then received and adopted.

Resolutions

Be it Resolved:

That—We thank Almighty God for his providential care and guidance during the past year.

That—We thank the good people of Fremont for their kind hospitality to the visiting delegates of the Ohio Conference.

That—We thank our conference officers and speakers for their efficient services to this conference.

That—In accordance with the recommendation made by our Moderator in his address respecting a worship program for the children; we recommend to our pastors that a study of the problem be made, if not already done, in their church, and that some program be arranged to care for the worship needs of the children of our churches.

That—Every minister in our district establish in his mind and heart the meaning of Brethrenism and study to present a challenging message to the world of doctrine as taught in the New Testament, and the life among Brethren as exemplified in the apostolic church of simplicity and non-conformity to the world.

That—We recommend that our pastors preach at least one sermon on peace each year, setting forth the teaching of the New Testament on this topic.

That—We heartily endorse the Endowment Program for Ashland College and here pledge our full support and cooperation to the end that the goal may be reached.

That—We encourage and support the extension work of our Mission Board for the Brethren church in Ohio and elsewhere.

That—We support the Brethren Publishing Interests with our money and our patronage.

That—We cooperate with, and support, the program of the National Sunday School Association in their endeavor to furnish the Brethren church with an adequate program of religious instruction.

That—We encourage the Laymen's Movement and urge upon each to observe Laymen's Sunday and take an offering for the Laymen's Fund.

Respectfully submitted,

C. F. BROWN,
L. V. KING,
R. F. PORTE.

On motion the secretary was authorized to copy and send these resolutions to each pastor in the Ohio District.

A motion was made and carried that all surplus money in the Ohio District Conference treasury be donated to the Ohio Mission Board.

The regular program was then taken up and Prof. Milton Puterbaugh spoke on "Instilling Brethren Ideals in the Minds of our Children."

The credentials of Mrs. H. R. Beal, Mrs. Joe Pairigle and Mrs. Herbert Longshore of Mansfield were presented and accepted by the conference.

Dr. J. A. Garber then spoke on the theme "Stressing Our Service to Our Young People through the Church Bible School." This was a fine address.

Friday Afternoon

Devotions were conducted by Elder M. L. Sands.

Mrs. F. C. Vanator gave a fine address on "The Women and the Church."

Dr. J. A. Garber then addressed the conference on "The Place of Men in the Church."

Conference session closed with these two addresses and opportunity was given delegates to visit places of interest in Fremont.

Friday Evening

The evening devotions were conducted by Elder S. C. Henderson, pastor of the convention church.

Elder M. L. Sands then spoke on the theme, "Deepening the Spiritual Life of the Church."

Elder R. F. Porte favored the conference with a vocal solo.

The closing sermon was preached by Elder F. C. Vanator of Canton. This was a fine discourse with which to close a deeply spiritual conference.

After a song by the audience the Moderator R. D. Barnard declared the conference of 1926 adjourned.

M. L. SANDS, Secretary.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Walter Makes Good

Walter was a very happy little boy. For three months he had been trying hard to win the best attendance prize at school and today it seemed as if he would gain his heart's desire. He had not missed a single day at school since the prize had been offered for the best three months' attendance. Tomorrow the three months would be up and it certainly looked as if the handsome bicycle would belong to him. Walter had only one other rival to fear and that was a little boy who had been absent one day, but as he had a good reason for doing so it had not yet been decided just what his standing in the contest was. However, Walter was certain to win a prize, anyway.

"Isn't it just splendid that I am going to win a prize, Mother?" exclaimed Walter very much excited that night as he prepared to go to bed. "I have always wanted a wheel so much, and now it seems as if my wish is going to come true."

"You deserve to win it, Walter," said mother as she kissed him good night. "You have worked hard for it and several times have gone to school against my wishes for you really have not been feeling well. You certainly have made a wonderful record and one to be proud of."

The next morning when Walter woke up much to his great dismay and the astonishment of all the family they found it snowing very hard. It had been coming down steadily all night and already almost a foot of snow had fallen. Father took a look at the weather and then announced that it would be quite impossible for Walter to go to school that day. The roads were covered with drifts and as the family sleigh was away being repaired there was no way of getting the very disappointed Walter to school.

"But I simply have to go, papa," exclaimed Walter almost in tears.

"Today is the last day of the attendance contest and if I stay away I will surely lose a chance at the first prize. Isn't there some way that I can possibly reach there in time?"

"I don't see any possible way. You can't walk there, and even if I should go and try to borrow a sleigh to take you there we would not reach the school in time for the opening bell. I'm sorry, son, that it had to snow just at the wrong time but you must remember that we cannot control the weather. Possibly they will make some allowance for your absence on account of the weather."

"I don't think they will, father," almost sobbed the heart-broken Walter. "Mr. West is awfully strict and announced the other day that no matter what the excuse was for the rest of the contest that if any boy remained away it would certainly count against him."

Just at this moment all the family were rather startled by a heavy knocking on the door and father upon opening the door found himself facing what appeared to be a real snow man. The Stranger was covered with ice and snow from head to feet and wore a fur suit which completely covered him, making him look like a big overgrown teddy bear.

"Would you mind giving me a cup of coffee?" asked the stranger, stepping into the house. "I am a United States mail carrier. I had engine trouble with my aeroplane and had to come down near your house. I ran into this storm without any warning and it has made me hours behind my schedule."

"Make yourself comfortable," said Walter's father. "I'll soon have something warm for you in a jiffy."

The airman thanked him and then started warming himself by the fire. He and Walter soon got acquainted and before Walter knew it he found himself telling the stranger about how he had to stay home from school on account of the storm, thus making him lose the best attendance prize. The airman agreed with Walter that it certainly was hard luck to have it snow just on this particular day and after he had several cups of coffee surprised all the family by saying: "One good turn deserves another, sonny. You bundle yourself up and give me some idea in what direction your school lies and I'll have you there in less than no time. Even if you haven't been up in a plane before, I know that you will like flying."

Walter was so surprised and overjoyed that he could hardly speak. Father gave his permission for Walter to accompany the stranger and said that he would borrow a sleigh and call for Walter at the school some time during the afternoon. So Walter, very much excited over the novel trip in store for him, bundled himself up well and then accompanied the airman to the plane which had come down quite near to the house. Then the mailman strapped Walter securely in the plane's extra seat, started the engine and off they went with all the family waving them good-bye. At first Walter was just a little frightened, but he soon became accustomed to the motion of the plane. They did not fly very high and almost before Walter knew it he found himself alighting in front of the school. Mr. West had just arrived himself and seemed astonished to see Walter coming to school in such an up-to-date way. Then the airman said good-bye to Walter and wished him luck and flew up and away.

When Mr. West distributed the prizes that afternoon Walter was made very happy by being announced winner of the first prize, the bicycle. When Walter came out of the school he found his father waiting for him in a borrowed sleigh, and although Walter returned home a great deal slower than he had come to school that morning, he was a very happy little boy, for he had obtained his heart's desire—a real bicycle.—A. F. Whitney in N. W. Christian Advocate.

"THE HOARY HEAD IS A CROWN OF GLORY"

Would we might feel it was always so. It is not true, for life does not righten itself. We may be far less wise than the proverb maker and discover for ourselves that the hoary head, without the Christian hope, goes down to a night of despair. Let us hear the Wiseman clear through: "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." The silvered head is crowned with gladness only when the weary feet are in the way of life.

No tender promise can be given to those who through the "broad way." "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap"—there is your stern uncompromising truth. It is enough to make any sinner tremble as he contemplates his life, at last slowly ground in "the mills of the gods." Not so with a lifetime of devotion. "The way of righteousness," "the hoary head," "a crown of glory!" There you have the Wiseman's lullaby for the soul in its second childhood, ere it sinks to peaceful slumbers Who would ask for a sweeter "evensong?" It is one with the promise of the psalmist, "At evening time it shall be light."

"My heart is glad,

Though every sight and sound is sad,

For I have come to realize

That joy depends not on the skies."

—New York Christian Advocate.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

LAW-WRIGHT—At home of the writer, Mr. David Kyle Law and Miss Leah Wright of Lawford, West Virginia, were united in marriage. With a host of friends and relatives we join in best wishes and hope for a happy and long journey through life. Ceremony by the writer. N. D. WRIGHT.

QUEEN-GRIFFLE—Mr. Adrian Queen of Newberne, West Virginia, and Miss Ruby Griffie of Cox's Mill, West Virginia, were united in marriage near the Mt. Olive Brethren church, November 21, 1926. A host of friends and relatives bid them God speed. Ceremony by the writer. N. D. WRIGHT.

IN THE SHADOW

KRISSINGER—William P. Krissinger, was born in Berlin, Somerset county, Pennsylvania, March 28, 1887, the son of George W. and Mary Krissinger, and one of a family of eight children. After finishing his education in the common and high schools of his birthplace he entered the employ of the Cambria Steel Company, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he was employed for a few years. Leaving the employ of the Steel Company Mr. Krissinger emigrated to California, where he continued to make his home until some six months ago when he returned to his native state.

William Krissinger passed to be with the Master on December 10, 1926, in the fortieth year of his age, a victim of the dread tuberculosis. He was a member of the First Brethren church of Johnstown, having united with the church during the ministry of Dr. W. S. Bell, and had retained his connection with the church through the years. He leaves his aged mother, two brothers and five sisters to mourn his home going.

Funeral services were conducted at the Flick Undertaking Parlor, in Johnstown, on Monday, December 13, and burial was made in the family burial plot in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery at Berlin. Services in charge of the undersigned in the absence of Brother Ashman. DYOLL BELOTE.

SNYDER—Frank Snyder, son of Samuel and Maria Snyder was born in Preble County, near West Alexandria, March 27, 1857. He departed this life December 7, 1926, at the age of 69 years, 7 months and 8 days. He was married in 1880 to Martha J. Smith to which union was born two children. He was preceded in death by his wife. He leaves to mourn his departure two children, Ward, and Susie Snyder; two brothers, John and Charles Snyder, other relatives and a host of friends. Brother Snyder had been a faithful member of the Brethren church since his baptism by J. A. Garber in 1908. Services by the writer. WILLIS E. RONK.

ELLISON—Isaac Buckels Ellison was born at Anderson, Indiana, July 26, 1843, and departed this life at his home in South Haven, Kansas, December 9th, 1926 at the age of 83 years, 4 months and 13 days.

Mr. Ellison volunteered his service to his country and served some time in the Union Army in the civil war. He was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Keeling on May 5th, 1865.

To this union were born seven children, four sons and three daughters. There survives him, his wife and the following children, Mrs. W. M. Hope of Clearwater, Kansas, Mrs. C. H. Blue of Woodard, Oklahoma, and James Sylvester, of South Haven, Kansas. Three sons and one daughter preceded him in death.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellison came to Kansas in 1880 and settled near South Haven Mr. Ellison professed faith in Christ and united with the New Light church in 1868, and united with the Brethren church of South Haven, Kansas in 1892, in which faith he remained a member until death.

The funeral services were conducted from the home in South Haven, Sunday afternoon of December 12th, 1926, by the writer, who had known him for 30 years and had been his pastor for nine years. His noble character and Christian faith were above question in the minds of all who knew him.

A large concourse of sympathizing friends attended the funeral. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in the Rose Hill Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

CASHOUR—Lydia Cashour, daughter of Christian and Lydia Cashour, was born July 28, 1846, and departed this life October 14, 1926, aged 80 years, 2 months and 28 days. For many years Sister Cashour was afflicted with blindness, and often expressed her desire to go home. She was a member of the New Lebanon Brethren church, having brought her letter from the old Bear Creek church when the latter disbanded several years ago. Albert, Walter, Milton, Anna and Edward, her children, besides other relatives survive to mourn their loss. May the comforting presence of Christ be their constant realization. Services by the writer, assisted by Rev. Lester King. GEO. W. KINZIE.

QUINN—The funeral services of James A. Quinn of Washington, D. C., were held at the home of the deceased, November 5, 1926. The death of Mr. Quinn came at the end of many months of patient suffering. The life of this Christian man was nobly lived and his passing beyond the veil was a quiet admonition to us all to be ready for this hour. For many years our brother had been an active member of the Washington church. His place will be vacant there but the memory of this good man will linger long. He is survived by a widow, three sons, and a daughter. The Evangelist family extends to them their sincere sympathy in their bereavement. HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.
